UNC Psychiatrist Says Alcoholism Often Supported By Spouse

"Women who knowingly marry alcoholics with the avowed intention of reforming them are likely to be emotionally disturbed themselves," Dr. John A. Ewing, acting chairman of the University of North Carolina Department of Psychiatry, told an audience of phsyicians at yesterday's morning session of the program "Marriage Counselling in Medical Practice" in progress at UNC.

It has also been Dr. Ewing's experience that "women who stay married to developed alcoholics for two or three years or more after the existence of alcoholism are definitely in need of treatment themselves.

This may have particular significance for North Carolina. The factors of alcoholism are bound to impinge upon a marriage" and may lead to its early breakup," said Dr. Ewing. "But in North Carolina my statistics show that the average alcoholic is still involved in a marriage when he first comes for therapy."

"I am not advocating the break-up of alcoholic marriages," he emphasized, "but I am saying that the average woman would not stay married to the average alcoholic for very long, therefore when one finds a woman who has stuck by him through innumerable relapses she has sufficient psycho-pathology to require help herself.

"In actual fact it seems clear that we are not dealing here with simply one person who is an alcoholic but with a total marriage situation in which the alcoholism is so involved that we might say the marital situation is perpetuating the alcoholism."

There are some three to four million alcoholic marriages in American marriage, that is, where one or both partners suffer from alcoholism. There are believed to be many more with incipient, or beginning, alcoholism.

Dr. Ewing noted that there are women, for instance, who will divorce one alcoholic and then marry another. He said "we have found that where a man makes an effort to get his alcoholism under control there very often are reactions on the part of the spouse, who was paying lip service to her hope that her husband's drinking would stop."

If he quits drinking, "instead of her reacting with the promised joy, she may become depressed, mentally sick, may now insist on divorce and at times may make active efforts to sabotage her husband's sobriety."

These features of alcoholism indicate clearly the importance of treating both members of the marriage when one has alcoholism, says Dr. Ewing.

Psychiatrists have been able to produce excellent results in terms of the drinking patterns simply by treating the wife alone, where the alcoholic male refuses to get counselling or therapy.

Where alcoholic women are involved, they tend to be married to rather cold, successful, but distant men who are much involved in taking care of their businesses and who offer little emotional support, Dr. Ewing explained.

For treatment in these cases, again, inolvement of the spouse is most desirable. But Dr. Ewing says "I have not had the same experience of being convinced that many men 'need' their alcoholic wives to continue with their alcoholism."

Ewing ended his talk with some comments upon the subject of "therapeutic separation," a special device to be used where other techniques have not proven helpful.

"A separation which is carefully controlled by an outside counsellor and is not merely at the whim of one or another member of the marriage has the advantage that it will help both partners to become more aware of the neurotic interactions which have persisted when they were living together.

"Often, this will lead to a real desire for insight and for psychotherapeutic help. Where such a desire does not develop, it may lead to realistic awareness of the need for divorce."

This, he feels, is quite important where one partner has made real changes and the other one had made very few or none. "Under such circumstances, the one who has changed has a real prospect of making a second and better marriage . . ."

Dr. Ewing was the first of 15 speakers and discussants at the program, sponsored by UNC School of Medicine, the American Association of Marriage Counsellors, and the N. C. Neuropsychiatric Association.

Cadet Lt. Col. William H. Holderness, Cadet Group Commander, who is keeping the bird explained, "a boy in a dorm owns it, and can't keep it there." For the rest of this school year the hawk will stay at Holderness' home on N. Columbia St.

The hawk, a female, originally came from New Mexico. It has not yet been named.

Faculty News Briefs

Dr. Robert R. Cadmus, professor and chairman of the newly established Department of Hospital Administration in the School of Medicine, has been named to the Committee on Nursing Education Facilities recently formed under the joint sponsorship of the National League for Nursing and the U. S. Public Health Service.

Arthur M. Whitehill Jr., R. J. Reynolds Professor of Human Relations in Industry in the School of Business Administration, is the recipient of a $4,025 one-year grant from the U. S. Department of Health, Education, and Welfare for research on cultural values in worker and management behavior in the United States and Japan.

Prof. Whitehill conducted a study identifying and evaluating the impact of cultural values upon worker behavior and attitudes in these two countries. His new program will include investigation of the possibilities for extending his previous studies to management.

Prof. Whitehill predicts that his study will be beneficial for management development programs. The knowledge of cultural forces which he is seeking should give some information on the many unanswered "whys" of human behavior which deter understanding and effective action in industrial societies in this country and throughout the world, according to Prof. Whitehill.

Professor P. P. Naor, head of the Department of Industrial Engineering in the Haifa Institute of Techniology, Haifa, Israel, will address the UNC Statistics Colloquium on Monday, October 22, at 4 p.m. in room 265 Phillips Hall.

Dr. Naor will speak on a problem of preventive maintenance. The meeting is open to all interested in maintenance problems or in the application of statistical methods.

Prof. Naor is spending the present academic year in research in the University Department of Statistics. He studied in England and received the degrees of bachelor of science in chemical engineering and doctor of philosophy in theoretical metallurgy from the University of Birmingham.

Dr. E. N. Mitchell, visiting associate professor of physics at the University, will address the UNC Physics Colloquium on Wednesday, Oct. 24, at 4:30 p.m. in room 265 Phillips Hall.

Dr. Mitchell will speak on "Magnetostriction in thin Ferromagnetic Films." A tea will procede the address at 4 p.m. in room 277.

Dr. Richard T. Smith, professor and chairman of the department of pediatrics in the University of Florida School of Medicine will speak here Saturday, Oct. 20, at 11:00 a.m. in room 226 of the Medical School Building. His topic, "Development Aspects of Immunity and Immunological Tolerance," is one in a series of the 1962 Medical Sciences Lectures being held at the University of North Carolina.

14 Do-Nothings Are Tapped Into Order Of Lampshades

Late last Wednesday night in a subterranean section of the Nurses Dorm, the Order of the Old Lampshades tapped 17 new members—14 undergraduates and 3 honorary members.

Those "nothing" tapped in the singularly unimpressive ceremony Wednesday include honorary members Miss Nancy Adams, assistant to the Dean of Women, and Sue Ross and Freida Smithwick, graduate counselors in the Nurses Dorm.

There are sixteen old members of the organization and two other honorary members on campus.

The Lampshades admit that a few of those tapped Wednesday have "broken down and achieved things during their college careers." However, these persons were selected because of the "nothing" spirit in which they go about their duties.

The next goal of the Lampshades, according to Jean Yoder, "Head Bulb" of the order, is to have a campus-wide tapping.

Need a perfect example of why football is a crazy game? Then look back at last week's games. One of them was played between Purdue and Miami of Ohio. I didn't bother to predict the outcome of the contest because Purdue was such a lop-sided favorite.

Well, the game I didn't predict because it was too easy ended with little Miami on top by 10-7.

But there were 24 that I did pick, and eight that I missed. In the ACC, I erred on wins by Georgia over Clemson and Maryland over UNC.

Shamefully, I picked Michigan to upset Michigan State and Texas A & M to upset Florida. The reverse results were as one-sided as UNC's two trips to the midwest.

Penn State, Notre Dame, Rice and Stanford also let me down. So, after .667 for the week, and .707 for the season, here we go again.

South Carolina's Gamecocks have topped North Carolina only four times in the last three decades and once in the past five years. But this year a boy named Billy Gambrell is at his best—and he could easily make All-American if the Gamecocks get a few wins under their belts.

With Gambrell leading the way, South Carolina leads the conference in rushing offense with an average of 208.3 yards and UNC is last in rushing defense—258 per game.

Whether Carolina's passing game can make up for Gambrell's running is the big question. South Carolina has yielded 131 yards a game by the airways and Jim Hickey's men have picked up 141.3 per game through the air.

A tremendously high-scoring game should be the result. The prediction: Regrettably, SOUTH CAROLINA 28, UNC 19.

The big conference game today is being played down at Clemson. The Tigers have had enough rough games with Georgia and Georgia Tech. Duke has lost only to Southern California. The winner should be co-favored with Maryland to win the conference title. Here's hoping Jim Parker's shoulder is fully recovered from a three-week injury. CLEMSON 17, DUKE 14.

Believe it or not, Virginia is favored in an ACC contest—against Wake Forest. It's been better than three years since the Cavaliers were favored in a family game, although they did upset South Carolina and Maryland last year. But the winless Deacons are not that bad. WAKE FOREST 24, VIRGINIA 15.

N. C. State travels to Southern Mississippi where it won a 7-6 squeaker last year. Earle Edwards men showed their stuff at Nebraska last week. They should win. STATE 14, SOUTHERN MISSISSIPPI 7.

Around the nation:

PENN STATE 16, SYRACUSE 7. The Nittany Lions can't be beaten two weeks running.

ARKANSAS 27, TEXAS 24. Two high-scoring teams. Oklahoma almost took the Longhorns last week. This time the Razorbacks should do it.

SOUTHERN CAL 24, CALIFORNIA 9. The Trojans are Rose Bowl hunting.

WASHINGTON 22, STANFORD 10. Another Rose Bowl safari.

UCLA 10, PITT 7. A third candidate for the Rose Bowl, but Pitt could spring an upset.

OKLAHOMA 14, KANSAS 7. Wilkinson's men are back in the Big Eight title race. Only Missouri can stop them.

GEORGIA TECH 24, AUBURN 10. Auburn's not the power it used to be.

LSU 21, KENTUCKY 8. An easy win for the unbeaten Tigers.

MICHIGAN STATE 28, NOTRE DAME 8. A terrific offense that can't be stopped.

OHIO STATE 21, NORTHWESTERN 14. Who knows? The Buckeyes might be rematched against UCLA in the Rose Bowl.

Tar Heels Seek First Victory Today Against South Carolina

By ED DUPREE
Sports Editor

North Carolina's winless Tar Heels meet their fifth foe of the 1962 season this afternoon when they take on South Carolina's Gamecocks in Kenan Stadium at 2 p.m.

The Gamecocks, coached by Marvin Bass, an ex-UNC assistant, have had their moments of glory this year. The Tar Heels have had nothing to gloat about.

Despite their 1-2-1 record, the men from Columbia are not to be taken lightly. They opened the season in the Big Ten area—where two of UNC's lumps were received—and came away with little to be ashamed of. The Roosters held Northwestern to 29-20 after three quarters, then lost 37-20.

Then, in their first conference contest, Bass's men gave Duke a fit before losing, 21-8. Next they tied Georgia, 7-7—losing victory in the final quarter. A week later Georgia soundly defeated USC's chief rival, Clemson.

Last week the Columbians finally tasted victory, trouncing Wake Forest, 27-6.

The teams have played no mutual opponents. Jim Hickey's Tar Heels bowed to N. C. State, 7-6, Ohio State, 41-7, Michigan State, 38-6, and Maryland, 31-13. It's been a long, dry four weeks for the Blue and White.

Leading the Gamecock offenses is a senior halfback from Athens, Ga., a Mr. Billy Gambrell. The way Gambrell has been rushing has to raised eyebrows. He has picked up 269 yards in 37 carriers—a 7.3 average per carry.

Edge is the nation's most accurate passer, having completed 67.2 per cent of his passes. The Fayetteville junior has hit on 45 of his 67 passes for 516 yards. Lacey has hauled in 17 completions for 240 yards and two touchdowns.

Edge has thrown three TD passes, two to Lacey and a third to Ward Marslender. He has scored a touchdown and kicked two extra points, giving him a hand in 26 of Carolina's 32 points. Fullback Ken Willard has the other six.

Today is Band Day in Kenan Stadium. Bands from 56 high schools around the state—totaling more than 3,000 bandsmen — will participate in the half time show.

No Tar Heel fan could ever forget Band Day in 1961. Behind the passing of Ray Farris, Carolina drove 80 yards in 66 seconds and walked off with a 22-21 vctiory with only 15 seconds remaining in the game.

In the backfield with Edge will be Joe McLamb, Ron Tuthill or Ronnie Jackson at running back. In past games Jackson has been used chiefly as a punt and kick-off return specialist, but Hickey has indicated that he will be used more on offense.

At fullback will be Ken Willard, backed up by Barry Westfall, and Ward Marslender or Roger Smith will handle the wingback chores.

Richard Lomas starts at center, flanked by guards John Jones and Tom Gibson, tackles Jim Moss and Joel Goodrich, and ends John Caskey and Ken Lester.

The Gamecocks haven't beaten Carolina in Kenan Stadium since 1944. They've beaten the Tar Heels only seven times in 37 contests. UNC won last year at Columbia, 17-0.

Bonnie Loving, Nancy Gates Win

Top-seeded Bonnie Loving and second-seeded Nancy Gates moved easily into the third round of the Women's Athletic Association tennis tournament this week.

Eight girls remain in the WAA tourney which will continue Monday but Bonnie and Nancy are rated the sure bets to meet for the championship.

Miss Loving, representing Kappa Kappa Gamma, will meet Chi Omega's Mary French Mason while Tri Delta's Jean Loomis faces Carolyn Powers of Alpha Gamma Delta in the Monday-Wednesday bracket.

Runners Win Again

By LASZLO BIRNYIL, JR.

Carolina turned in its most impressive performance of the season yesterday by trouncing the Cavaliers of Virginia, 18-48. Larry Henry captured his fourth first place of the season in the excellent time of 20:51.

Charlie Little was second, 15 seconds behind Henry. Third place went to Walter Caldwell of Virginia who edged UNC's Bob Bennett, Bennett was fourth, Jerry Struver fifth and Carmine Lunetta sixth.

This was the fourth meet in which Carolina has held its opponent to 20 points or less. Carmine Lunetta, co-captain, said "Our victories this year are equivalent to a baseball team holding the opposition to one run in one game and holding them scoreless in the other three." Another exceptional factor is that all of Carolina's first five men ran the 4.1-mile course in less than 22 minutes.

Carolina is now in a very enviable position. They beat Maryland, which was supposed to be a very close meet, by over 40 points. In each of their meets this year the times continue to improve.

The frosh won their second straight meet by beating the Virginia frosh, 21-35. Jim Mead who wo nthe first frosh meet came in second as Carolina swept the second, third, fourth and fifth positions.

Co-Rec Carnival Is Success; Two Teams Tie For First

Individual winners were as follows: Relays—Tri Delt and Beta, Badminton—Spencer and TEP, Table Tennis—McIver and Phi Delta Theta, Volleyball—Alpha Gamma Delta and Aycock, Tetherball — Spence and ATO, Box Hockey—Tri Delt and Beta, Archery—Tri Delt and Winston, Carnival Games—East Cobb and Delta Sig.

Frosh Booters Romp; Defeat Virginia, 6-1

North Carolina's fine freshman soccer team romped to its third win without a loss yesterday afternoon when the Tar Babies downed visiting Virginia, 6-1.

Carolina was slowed down early in the contest but came on strong and drilled four scores in the second half.

Mac Skelly booted two goals for UNC while Drew Murphy, Lyons Gray, Jim Muchmore and George Butler added single scores. Murphy's goal was his fifth in the three games.

The Tar Babies had the Cavayearlings shut out for three quarters but Virginia scored on a penalty kick in the final period to avert the whitewash.

FBI Kept Careful Watch On Junius Scales' Actions

By VIRGINIA CARNES

A "bespectacled, baby-faced" man was arrested on November 19, 1954, as he stood at a bus stop on the rain-swept corner of a quiet Memphis residential street. The next morning newspaper headlines read: "Scales Held Under $100,000 Bond in Tennessee — Smith Act Catches Confessed Commie."

Junius Scales, 34-year-old native of Greensboro, was accused of being the underground Communist chief of Tennessee and the Carolinas and was charged under the membership provisions of the Smith Act, which outlaws any conspiracy to teach or advocate the overthrow of the United State government by violence. The maximum penalty possible under the Smith Act charge was ten years in prison and a $10,000 fine.

In Washington the FBI announced that Scales, a married man, the father of one child, and the grand-nephew of a North Carolina governor, had attended UNC from 1936-1938 and again in 1946. They said that he then went underground and began secret activity in October of 1951.

It seems that the FBI had been watching Scales for some time, and his arrest in Memphis came only 5½ hours after he was indicted by a federal grand jury in the Wilkesboro, N. C., division of the federal court.

Scales was given a hearing in Memphis where it was decided that he would be tried in the Middle District Courts of North Carolina beginning December 6, 1954, in Greensboro. He was represented by Fyke Farmer, the Nashville attorney who helped gain a short stay of execution for the Rosenburgs after their conviction as atomic spies.

A few days before the hearing, handbills were distributed urging that Scales $100,000 bond be reduced. They said "Junius Scales and the Communist Party are being prosecuted solely for their ideas. Neither Scales nor the Communist Party has ever advocated force or violence, nor overthrow of the government . . . Article VIII of the Bill of Rights says 'Excessive bail shall not be required.'"

In Scales first appearance in court in December he made motions for a reduction in bail and succeeded in getting it lowered to $35,000. On December 21, he was set free under bond posted by his mother.

When the trial got under way in April, Scales attorney, David Rein of Washington, D. C., said that it was a matter of public knowledge that he had been a Communist, but that he had no knowledge that the Communist Party was dedicated to the overthrow of the government by force or violence.

The government charged that Scales was Ralph Clontz, a Charlotte lawyer, who told of his double life as FBI informant and as a student of Communism under Scales. His close association with Scales was from September, 1948, to October, 1951. Clontz said that the first statement of violence he heard from Scales came in December, 1948, when Sales told him "force is the only answer."

In addition to a photostat from a 1947 Daily Tar Heel of a statement by Scales in which he said, "I am proud to be a member of The Communist Party, which is democratic both in its own structure and in its outlook," the government produced a surprise witness, a "soft-spoken" UNC student, to provide more recent evidence against Scales.

Charles Benson Childs, 24, of High Point and Winston-Salem, told the federal court that while he was in the party under Scales until August, 1952, he was also an undercover informant for the FBI.

He "half rose from the witness chair, pointed to Scales as the party chairman for the Carolinas and stated that, in the summer of 1952, Scales had urged him to retain his summer job at the Western Electric Plant at Winston-Salem, rather than returning to college.

Scales reportedly said that "trade unions are the schools of the revolution, and the party was trying to get students to go into industry", that an economic crisis during the next national administration was imminent, with matters "coming to a head in five or six years," and that if Communists returned to school and lost their contracts in industry, "we would have to wait for the Red Army to liberate us."

Childs said he became interested in Communism while in high school in High Point, when he had several discussions with an English teacher who was "in the Gastonia (textile) strike of 1929" and later when he heard a speech by Mike Ross, a furniture union organizor, whom he later learned was affiliated with the Progressive Party. Through Ross he met Bill Robertson, a member of the Communist Party, and at Robertson's home in Chapel Hill he received several pieces of party literature, including the Constitution.

He "decided these people's views were dangerous to my government" and went to the FBI to offer information.

Henry Farash, "known to me as district organizer for the party" invited him to join the party on October 12, 1950. Two weeks later he paid the 50 cents initiation fee and was admitted.

Hickey Gets First Victory Ride Of Season

'We Kept Fighting Back,' Says Smiling Jim Hickey

By CURRY KIRKPATRICK

"We hung on and kept fighting back."

The smiles have come few and far between for Hickey in the last five weeks, but yesterday he looked as if a huge weight had been lifted from his shoulders.

"Yes sir, we hung on and finally got it," Hickey beamed to the writers gathered around him. He was referring to the briddiant 49-yard pass-run play from Junior Edge to Bob Lacey which brought the Tar Heels their first taste of victory and sent the Kenan Stadium gathering into a state of temporary madness.

Big Difference

"This win is going to make a big difference in this team," the UNC coach said. "When a ball club has dropped four straight, a win is all that can perk it up. If we had lost after having it won, well—"

Asked what was going through his mind when South Carolina quarterback Dan Reeves lofted a last-ditch pass to Sam Anderson alone near the end zone, Hickey replied, "I was ready to shoot myself."

"Hank (Barden, Carolina defensive back) lined up in the middle of the field and was set all wrong for that play. But he recovered and got over there in time. He just did get that guy." (Barden tackled Anderson just two yards from the end zone and the clock ran out before the Gamecocks could get off another play).

Praise For Students

Hickey had nothing but praise for his team in particular and the student body in general during the long victory drought.

"I feel the student body had as much to do with our win today as that Edge to Lacey pass play. They have been great and have stuck with us all the way. The team appreciates this and so do I."

Hickey went on. "I'm always asked, 'How's the morale? Are the kids up? Are they letting up on you?' I can truthfully say that there is no problem whatsoever. The kids have been tremendous. They've given it all they've got and never dogged it."

The coach was especially happy about the play of his young sophomores. He praised Ronnie Jackson, Ken Willard, Tommy Ward and Barden for their improvement over past weeks.

Future Chances?

The coach was then questioned about Carolina's chances the remainder of the season.

"I'm not making any predictions but you've got to remember that this is a young club and the sophomores are getting better every week. We've played some real good teams and the guys have gotten some good experience. We played our best game today. I think we'll be all right from here on in."

Gamecock Rally Barely Misses TD

By HARRY W. LLOYD

North Carolina, fighting desperately to break a four-game losing streak, grabbed the lead yesterday with less than five minutes to play and walked a wobbling tightrope to escape with a 19-14 victory over the South Carolina Gamecocks.

The Tar Heels, after trailing for 44 minutes of the game, scored their third touchdown with 4:49 left on their most feared offensive play, the long pass from quarterback Junior Edge to wide end Bob Lacey.

That 49-yard play ended the scoring and started the excitement before 25,000 fans. For Marvin Bass' swift and dangerous Gamecocks came within a hairbreadth of cracking over the Carolina goal for another score.

With the Tar Heels unable to run out the clock to end the game, South Carolina took over on their own 41 with 50 seconds to play. Only the clock could stop them, for on two brilliant offensive plays they carried to the UNC two-yard line before the game ended.

A diving tackle by sophomore defensive back Hank Barden stopped USC halfback Sammy Anderson on the two after Anderson caught a 33-yard pass from Dan Reeves. The Gamecocks were unable to push the ball over the final two yards before time ran out.

The visitors, with breakaway threat Billy Gambrell scampering in all directions, showed latent power all through the contest. The flashy halfback, who rolled up 81 yards along the ground, kept the UNC defense loose at all times.

The Tar Heel offense, which was practically nil in the first half, dominated the final quarter of play before the last minute.

Carolina Drives

With the visiting Gamecocks ahead by 14-6 going into the last period, the Heels engineered their only continuous drive of the game. They took an SC punt on their 43 just before the end of the third period. Edge set the drive in motion with an eight-yard pass to Frank Gallagher. Eddie Kesler slashed up the middle for eight more as the period ended.

Fullback Ken Willard and quarterback Edge did the running for the next first down. From the 31, Edge flipped a flare pass to halfback Ronnie Jackson, and the ball slipped through Jackson's hands. They came back, however, with the same play and went 14 yards. This gave the Tar Heels a first down on the 17.

Edge, looking for a receiver, was run out on the 13. Willard, who now is beginning to play up to his potential, took a handoff and blasted through a small hole in the middle of the line. When a pair of South Carolina men hit him, he didn't go down, but carried them right with him into the end zone. Jackson, on a flare pass to the right in an attempt to tie the game, was knocked out of bounds by Gambrell just short of the goal.

Stout Defense

South Carolina then took over with 12:28 to go and appeared to be driving for an insurance score when a Joe Craver-led Carolina defense rose up to stop them on the 30.

From that point, Edge flipped a pass to Jackson which barely carried for the first down. Edge then ran for seven and Willard carried four to put the ball one yard over the midfield stripe.

It was here that Edge pulled out the firebomb that hadn't been used successfully before that afternoon. In the second quarter, he had thrown 41 yards to Lacey at the UNC 14, but an illegal motion infraction had killed the play.

This time, everything clicked. Drifting to his right, Edge threw the long, arching connective to Lacey, who outran all but one SC defender and took the ball near the 25. He then faked out the last man, Lide Huggins, and ran diagonally across the field for the touchdown.

Willard Runback

It was the second Carolina TD, however, that was the most spectacular play of the day. South Carolina had just scored on a 33 yard pass from Dan Reeves to Ken Lester with 8:58 to go in the first quarter.

The kickoff was short, and fullback Willard took it on his 17 yard line. He bulldozed up the middle, found an opening near the left sidelines, and ran untouched into the end zone. For the final 30 yards, he simply outran the South Carolina defenders.

Gambrell looked as if he might break away in returning the kickoff 28 yards to the USC 46. The Gamecocks, needing to cover the remainder of the field in four minutes, abandoned their famed ground game for the swifter and more dangerous air routes. At first it appeared as if their startegy were going to work.

Reeves clicked to Anderson for 10 yards and a first down. But then he flipped a flare pass to

"If You Can't Help Me, Stop Helping The Bear"

A Carolina alumnus returning to the campus is not news. They always return, to Chapel Hill and the University and the trees and people.

Former National Student Association president and '49 UNC graduate Al Lowenstein is also a graduate of the offices and influence of Sens. Frank Graham and Hubert Humphrey, several trips to Southwest Africa and Spain and assorted educational and political adventures. He is author of BRUTAL MANDATE.

Lowenstein will speak on "Spain: Today and Tomorrow," and within the title lies the tale.

His talk will draw from his most recent visit to Spain last summer, and from his earlier acquaintance with the country and many of its leading citizens.

Lowenstein will speak on the Spain he found "Today"—the Spain where Franco's dictatorial hold is loosening by the force of his opponents, by the energy of those who are no longer willing to allow their country to be cemented into the past, into the cruel past of Hitler and Mussolini and Franco.

There will be discussion of Spain's desire to join the Common Market and the sacrifices which it may have to make for the market. There will be discussions of the strikes and the strikes which will come again, and again as long as Franco rules.

. . . Which brings the question to Spain "Tomorrow"—as the strikers become stronger, as those Catholic priests already aiding Spanish democrats become more brazen in their opposition to Franco, as the brave students who oppose dictatorship continue their fight.

And in the Spain of tomorrow: "the moment of Spanish revolution is much nearer than the American people realize," Lowenstein said this summer. And as he will remind the audience Monday, the Spanish people know who is keeping Franco in power, they know who is holding back "the moment of Spanish revolution" — the United States.

Lowenstein recently told of standing on a street of a Spanish town watching American tanks roll by, when a Spaniard "These tanks just arrived from Washington—to replace tanks which Adolf Hitler sent 2 years ago."

Not a very pretty thought.

Not very pretty—that extensive U.S. aid and arms has kept Franco in power these many years.

But what is there to be done? As Lowenstein has phrased it, "It's like the story of the bear who chased the man up a tree. The man began praying, 'God, if you can't help me, at least stop helping the bear.'" (JC)

Federal Arms

The temporary injunction handed down by the U.S. Fifth Circuit Court of Appeals forbidding state officials from interfering with the attendance of James Meredith at the University of Mississippi rings true to past administrative efforts to avert violence in troubled situations.

The injunction is in actual effect virtually toothless. And yet, virtually all that can be done at this time. The necessity for an actual preventive measure to insure safety for Meredith is seen by all. Yet, what can be done?

As in all similar situations, the culprit cannot be apprehended prior to the commitment of an illegal act. And so the forces responsible for force" if they propose to leave actual arms between Meredith and po-Meredith's safety, must suffer the abusive title of an "occupation tential harm; or they can pull out the "occupational army," issue sweeping injunctions, and pray that no violence will come—pray that justice will somehow naturally prevail.

There is little doubt, that were the situation in Mississippi "natural," justice would eventually and quietly prevail. But the situation is far from natural. Those who might cause the violence to the student Meredith are not native to the University, and quite likely, not native to the State.

The injunctions may indeed harbor the activities of state officials, but they mean nothing to the type of person who would plot physical destruction of a Negro student. And so, they do not offer protection of a most essential kind — preventative. The injunction may leave the door open for sweeping court action once an act is committed, but as official words of policy, they don't stop rocks or bullets, they don't insure education.

Therefore, the forces of might must stay. Ugly though they may be, the presence of actual arms seems virtually essential for any effective protection of Meredith. Those who see the need for Federal injunctions, should see the need for Federal arms. (CW)

Obscenity, Censorship, And Dorm Newspapers

By HARRY LLOYD

The Interdormitory Council did an about-face from campus tradition last week when it decided to do something to curb "grossness" in dormitory newspapers. The council, having the good name of the campus in its heart and the dagger of the administration in its back, took what may amount to be a meaningless step in the direction of decency and honor and all that is protected by Silent Sam's vigilance.

Dormitory newspapers have a famed, if not sacred tradition on campus. Whatever they lack on polish, political policy, or polemics, they make up for in down-to-earth earth. A dorm editor doesn't have to be a crusader, a grammarian, or a campus bigwig. He just has to be a step or two ahead of Modern Man or a step or two behind the nearest fertilizer spreader.

With a free reign on what and when to publish, some dorm papers became classics in their own day. The publication date on the more widely-renowned sheets was awaited with all the apprehension due the latest orbit shot. Editors with the wildest imagination, the best writers, and the deepest pipelines had an assured readership. Copies of their works were saved as preciously as if they were First Folios. And everybody knows how good Folio was.

If the readership of a dorm newspaper was assured, then it was also exclusive. If Johnny wanted Mom to know what was going on in the dorm, as she surely was interested, he told her in his monthly letter or his urgent wire for funds. He never sent an extra copy of a dorm newspaper. That would be almost as hazardous as telling why he needed the funds in the first place.

However, because the administration feared that copies of the Dorm Rat Gazette might get back to Mom, Dad, or the American Legion, it issued an ultimatum that the IDC censor the "news" in dorm publications. Any story that was too salty to print when Dean Joe was in school surely isn't tame enough today. Besides, there may even be some stories making the rounds now that Dean Joe didn't think of in his day.

So what does the IDC do about all this free topsoil?

They tell dorm editors, "If you grow any weeds in it, then it's you who gets harvested." They nobly rejected prior censorship, which checks the dirt before the seeds are planted. Now the plowman will be punished for all the thistles in his corn.

The editor is to be held "personally responsible" for what goes in his paper. And what editor of what paper anywhere isn't held responsible? The IDC is making a hollow gesture to try to control one finger of an arm that is flinging itself in all directions.

While the obscenities of dorm newspapers may be the most blatant, they are nevertheless for a privileged few. Other manifestations of the student's desire to show his aspersions have gone almost unnoticed.

Is the Yackety Yack less gross because it is printed on enamel paper instead of mimeograph stock?

Are "Beat Dook" parade floats less gross because they are connected with a great and glorious crusade?

Lawler Says– Hear Lowenstein

To the Editors,

"We could bring Jesus of Nazareth to campus to speak on original sin and still get only fifty people to show up."

This was the recent comment of a faculty member to me on attendance at lectures. Having been moderator at a recent program on the Peace Corps, at which most of the members of the sponsoring organization left before the panel began, I would add that we could change the topic to the question of "life after death" and still not get a crowd. And who is not interested in life after death?

Probably no one is interested in Spain. Al Lowenstein will be here anyway to talk on this attractive subject. The meeting place is Gerrard Hall, small, but we don't expect a throng—the time is 8 p.m., a good time to see the flick or bottom of a beer glass.

I heard Mr. Lowenstein speak at the National Student Congress on this subject. It was interesting, but I don't know whether I would recommend you going. One thing, most people disagree with his thesis about the political, industrial, and educational state of affairs in Spain. You might go and disagree. But you can go to so many other places and find people who agree with each other profusely—on the mistakes Hickey makes, or Kennedy, etc.

Go and see what you think. I know it is not as interesting as sin or life after death, but Spain is on every map in the Geography department.

Football Players Were Not Goons

To the Editors (CW):

I am not certain what kind of record the Tar Heels will finally achieve this season, but I am sure that their losses cannot be nearly so great as to approach the defeat of truth and fairness represented by your editorial "The Goons Are Gone."

I do not know how long you have been at Chapel Hill. I was there for only five years in the mid '50s—but I cannot believe that you have found during your stay very many men playing on a UNC football team similar to the athletes you described. There were none when I was there and from what I know of the past, no such "oafs," goons" or "slobs" have ever characterized Carolina teams.

You have done, by your generalization, a great injustice to many fine men. As one who knew perhaps two score football players while at the University, I assure you that there was never one with "whom I would not willingly claim an acquaintance." The contributions of many of them have helped build and strengthen student government, given effective leadership to student church organizations and, in countless ways, added to that spirit which is the intangible greatness of Chapel Hill. Even the least deserving of them merits better than you have given him.

You, sir, are long on adjectives but short on truth.

Writers Problem Reading Deficiency

To the Editors:

(To Mr. Exum:)

I would like you to know that not I but the DTH put the heading "Meredith is individual too" above my letter. I would also like to point out that never did I say that you didn't know Meredith was an individual. The article implied that your problem is not that you do not realize who is and who is not an individual, but that you honor the wrong kind of individuals. I now realize, however, that your greatest problem is an inability to read comprehensively the English language. Perhaps, Mr. Exum, you come from foreign lands — Mississippi?

Team Spirt Needed Here

To the Editor,

Carolina football has been nothing except a failure up to date. Why? I don't.

In any event, I strongly resent these implications that my country or the economic system obtaining in it need fear an open, intellectual encounter with its enemies. I suggest that these gentlemen look to their own loyalty.

—Wade E. Marlette

Some students blame the players themselves from lack of interest; others blame Coach Hickey (in fact I saw a sign on the Pine Room door saying, 'Hang Coach Hickey'), and a few students blame the Carolina student body.

The first reason could be some of the causes for our record so far this year. Yet, if you have ever participated in or watch a football practice, then you would realize that people don't go around banging each other from lack of interest. Coach Hickey realizes that his job is more in jeopardy each game he loses.

Finally come us, the Carolina student body. We cheered hard for our team against N.C. State. Against Ohio State and Mich. State we turned our backs on the team. Students were betting odds against Carolina as high as 30 points. Wouldn't a football player try less for his fellow students and classmates when he sees that they are Benedict Arnolds?

Legion Should Mind Business

To the Editors:

Like many other students here, I too, am concerned about the charges brought by the American Legion and others. I am particularly upset by the implications of these charges.

One such implication is that the appeal of Marxism is to the intellectuals on campus. I believe this to be patently false. Few of Harry Bridges' longshoremen would qualify as intellectuals.

Another such implication, is that Marxism in an atmosphere of academic freedom and frankness. I hold that the reverse is true, that freedom of any kind is deadly to the Marxist position. Is not the Berlin wall grim proof?

Perhaps the Legion or their supporters know of counter examples, a place where freedom and Marxism coexist, or intelligent and compelling arguments in its behalf to explain its alleged intellectual appeal.

Reflections

Reflections on the World Series:

In this time of uncertainty, with old standards and beliefs tumbling around us, when there is nothing to be sure of — nothing to hang onto against the winds of change — it is wonderfully assuring to know that something is still constant and never-changing.

The New York Yankees.

The map of the world is beting made over daily . . . The old rules of life are being replaced with new-fangled concepts . . . But always and foever, there ae those wonderful Yankees winning the American League pennant, winning the World Series, doing shaving advertisements and opening bowling alleys. Those marvelous Yankees going from year to year, winning. We wonder why the sports writers even bother to write about the American League pennant race.

. . . Yes Virginia, there are values left in this world of ours — no matter what happens, there will always be a world series for the Yankees to win. (JC)

Lowenstein To Speak Monday

Al Lowenstein, a member of the Committee for a Democratic Spain, will speak on the Spanish situation Monday night at 8 in Gerrard Hall.

Lowenstein, a UNC graduate and instructor at State College, was in Spain during the summer.

His talk was originally scheduled for last week, but he was called to Washington to confer with several leading figures in the opposition to General Franco. Lowenstein has been serving as a liason for the Committee for a Democratic Spain.

Henry Mayer, chairman of the sponsoring Carolina Forum, said he hoped all students interested in European affairs and with U. S. foreign policy toward Spain, would attend. There will be a question and answer period after the talk.

Lowenstein was president of the National Student Association from 1950-51. He attended Yale Law School and recently was asst. dean of students at Stanford University.

He is author of "Brutal Mandate", an eye-witness account of the practices of South African policy in South-West Africa. Lowenstein testified before the trusteeship council of the United Nations about his experiences in South-West Africa.

Parties Plan Conventions

Both the Student Party and the University Party will hold nominating conventions this coming week for the various student government positions on campus.

The University Party's convention is scheduled for Tuesday night in Memorial Hall, at which time candidates for the positions of President, Vice-President, Secretary, Treasurer, and Social Chairman of the Freshman, Sophomore and Junior classes will be selected.

Mike Chanin, Chairman of the party, will explain the delegation system for voting used by the UP and will lead the convention.

The Student Party is having a meeting tonight and its convention Monday night. At tonight's meeting, the party's vice-chairman will be elected and the nominating procedure and the rules of debate will be established. Chairman Robin Britt said that it is important that all those who wish to vote at the convention understand the party rule that each voter must have attended at least one party meeting. Tonight's meeting is the last opportunity to fulfill this obligation.

At the Monday night meeting, nominations will be made for the various campus offices and the candidates selected.

—Communism—

Childs said that Scales was director of a school for selected Communists from Virginia and the Carolinas which was held at an isolated farmhouse near Walnut Grove. The school met one week in August, 1952.

He also described an all-day meeting with Scales and other party members in a Duke forest picnic area near Durham in October 1952, that served as a "reunion" for those who had attended the Communist secret school in August.

Childs said that upon returning to Chapel Hill, Scales laid down in the floor of the back seat to keep from being seen."

Between Childs and Clontz twenty people were named who they said had been active Communists.

As the Scales trial was nearing an end two UNC professors and a Chapel Hill pastor pictured Junius Scales as a "sincere, honest but misguided" young man.

On April 22, 1955, Scales was convicted of advocating violent overthrow of the United States government through his position as Communist Party chairman in the Carolinas. He was sentenced to six years imprisonment and was freed under $35,000 bond pending appeal.

At the close of the nine-day trial Scales said in an interview, "I reiterate my innocence. My party has never advocated violence. The current activity of my party is devoted toward avoiding the force and violence involved in an atomic war."

He said that he refused to take the stand because he knew that he would receive a greater penalty for not revealing other members of the party who would suffer as a result. He also said that he felt "the government completely failed to make a case."

His conviction was upheld on November 7 ,1955, when the verdict was appealed before the United States 4th Circuit Court of Appeals, and his petition for a rehearing was denied.

In January, 1956, this so-called, "honest, but misguided" man approached the United States Supreme Court.

(Coming Tuesday is the completion of the Scales case and Communist activities in the late '50s and '60s.)

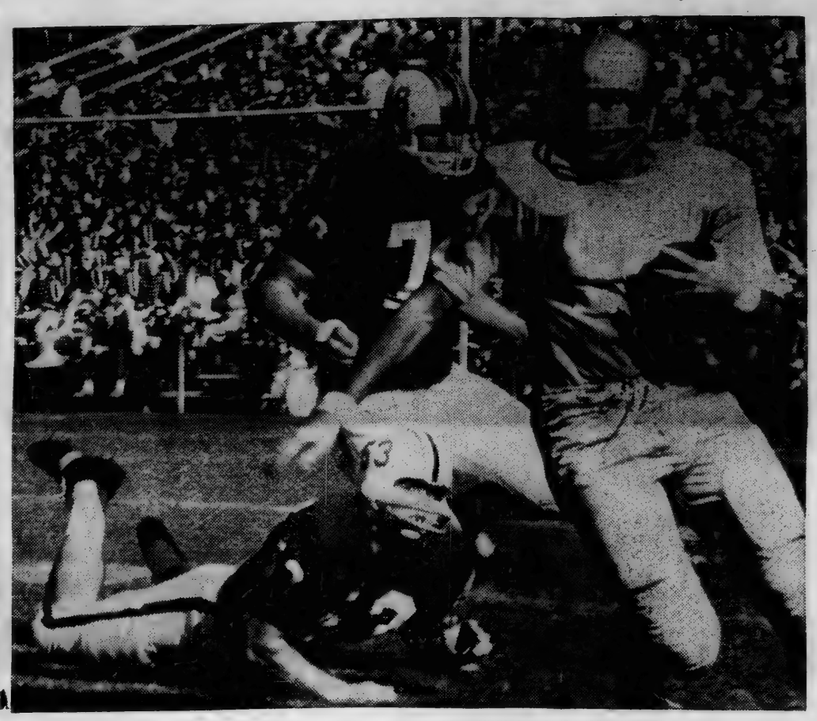
Bass: No Alibis, UNC Deserved It

By MARTIN KRUMING

South Carolina head coach Marvin Bass had no excuses. "Carolina deserved to win and we didn't. They were well prepared for us and I'll have to give them credit for the fine job they did on our end sweeps," commented the heavy-set Gamecock.

Reliving the 49-yard pass play from Tar Heel quarterback Junior Edge to famed receiver Bob Lacey, Bass criticized his defender for being sucked in so far towards the center of the field. "The same mistake happened to us twice at Northwestern and once at Duke. We have run the pattern enough times in practice so that there should be no error," he insisted.

The amusing thing about Carolina fullback Ken Willard's explosive 83-yard kick-off return in the first period was that Marvin Bass had hoped the ball would go to him. "What a crazy game," he chuckled as he stared down at his shoes.



Turning to his star halfback Billy Gambrell, the head Gamecock insisted that he is the best back in the conference and should be a sure bet for All-American honors. Needless to say all the reporters following South Carolina voiced loudly their approval. "Billy pulled a muscle in yesterday's workout and was a doubtful starter today," Bass said.

Bass praised the Tar Heels as being a fine ball club and attributed their 1-4 record to one of the roughest schedules in the nation. "When you play such teams as Michigan State and Ohio State, you have to expect some competition," he remarked.

"After our losses to Duke and Northwestern we needed this game (Carolina) to gain momentum," Bass went on to say. He called his first unit one of the finest on any team but spoke quite unfavorably of his second stringers.

Commenting on that final Gamecock pass play, Bass felt that Sam Anderson had crossed the goal line. But moments later he was informed that Anderson had stumbled on the 4-yard line and fallen short.

"This has been the darndest year I have ever seen. I say my prayers every night yet something always goes wrong sometimes," he joked.

Northwestern Beats Ohio St.

COLUMBUS, Ohio (UPI)—Unbeaten Northwestern, behind once by two touchdowns, combined the passing arm of sophomore Tommy Myers and a stout-hearted defense to upset Ohio State, 18-14, in a Big Ten football game Saturday.

A record Ohio stadium crowd of 84,376 homecoming fans watched in stunned belief as the Wildcats punched over a touchdown with 5:35 left in the game and choked off a last-minute Buckeye effort on the Northwestern 8 to win their first game here since 1943.

Ohio State breezed into the lead at the start when sophomore halfback Bob Klein returned the opening kickoff 90 yards for a touchdown and quickly added another for a 14-0 lead. Third-ranked Northwestern came back for a touchdown to trail 14-12 at the half and scored the winning touchdown in the fourth period as the seventh ranked Ohioans went down to their second defeat in four games.

Fullback Steve Murphy scored the winning touchdown on a one and eight to go plunge which put the Wildcats into an 18-14 margin in the waning minutes.

Duke Tops Tigers; U.Va. Beats Wake

CLEMSON, S. C. (UPI)—Mike Curtis, a ball-hawking sophomore, pulled himself from the goat's role Saturday by setting up two touchdowns and scoring one of them to spark Duke to a 16-0 Atlantic Coast Conference win over Clemson.

In the opening minutes o fthe game, the big fullback from Rockville, Md., fumbled on the Clemson one to spoil a long, well-executed Duke drive.

But midway in the second period he began making up for his bobble by batting an enemy pass into the air, catching it on the Clemson 35 and returning it to the 15. Three plays later he cracked over from the one for a touchdown.

He began icing the win in the third period by intercepting a Clemson pass on his 20 and returning to his 38. Ten plays and 70 yards later quarterback Walt Rappold rolled out for a four-yard touchdown.

Bill Reynolds, after making one extra point and missing another, sent a 30-yard kick through the uprights for a fourth period Duke field goal to wrap up the scoring.

The decision, witnessed by 38,000 shirt-sleeved fans, marked the first conference loss by Clemson and left Duke and Maryland as the only teams with perfect league records.

It was Clemson's first scoreless performance since it was shut out by Louisiana State in the 1958 Sugar Bowl. The last Clemson shutout here was in 1953.

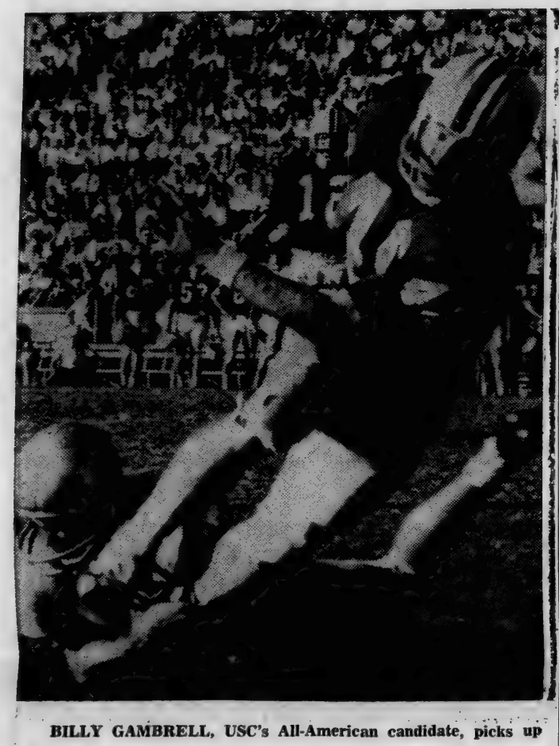
CHARLOTTESVILLE, Va. (UPI) Virginia drove for back-to-back touchdowns in the second period Saturday and then produced a rugged last-ditch defense to preserve a 14-12 homecoming victory over Wake Forest.

Defender Dave Graham preserved the win with a crucial tackle that kept the fired-up Wake Forest deacons, winless in four previous games, from salvaging a tie in the last five minutes of the game. His tackle thwarted a Wake Forest try for a two-point conversion after a 66-yard touchdown march.

The Cavaliers' offense came alive in the second period and ground out two quick touchdowns on one-yard runs by quarterback Gary Cuzzo and fullback Tom Griggs.

But Virginia, playing its first Atlantic Coast Conference game of the season, nearly fumbled the game away. The Deacons had three scoring chances in the first half, all set up by Cavalier bobbles.

On one drive, Wake Forest got to the one-yard line but Virginia staged a rugged goal line stand, took over the ball and marched 99 yards in 13 plays. Virginia Head Coach Bill Elias led the reserves and 16,000 fans in cheering for the touchdown.



Long runs by quarterback Carl Kuhn and fullback Ted Rzempoluch, along with halfback Bob Freeman, put the ball in Wake Forest's eight, but it took three tries by Rzempoluch and a fourth by Cuozzo for the score.

Six minutes later, Griggs cracked over from inside the one for a second touchdown that capped a 33-yard march.

Cheers For Hickey, Congrats For Players As Carolina Whoops It Up In Locker Room

By JOEL BULKLEY

There were cheers for coach Jim Hickey and pats on the back and congratulations for all the players yesterday in the UNC locker room after the game.

As usual the heroes of the day were beseiged by reporters asking questions ranging from 'how do you feel?' to 'how come your pants are so dirty?' But in these hectic minutes these spirited Tar Heel gridders took time out to answer everyone's questions thoroughly.

Right halfback Hank Barden, who saved the day with his last-second tackle of end Sammy Anderson on the six-foot line, said "He was just trying to catch Anderson before he could score."

"It was my fault that Anderson caught the ball," the six-foot, 177-pound sophomore added. Barden noted that today was his first full day of defensive play. He had been playing on offense until the Maryland game last week and then had only played a little.

Kicking specialist Wally Dunham reported that when the hike from center sailed over his head on an attempted punt in the first quarter he picked the ball up, looked and started running because he saw no one coming at him. Dunham added that had USC had a full-scale rush on, instead of their one-man blitz he would really have been in trouble and never would have made the first down.

Over in the corner of the room quarterback Junior Edge stood directing reporters around like a traffic cop. Edge, who tossed the game-winning 48-yard throw to his favorite target Bob Lacey, noted that it really felt good to win and that it was especially good not to be thrown for any great losses.

Bob Lacey thought the team had played real well throughout the game and had definitely deserved to win.

All of the players reported that the key to success against South Carolina was ACTION instead of words. They said that they hadn't even had a pep talk before the game.

— Tar Heels Whip Gamecocks —

Gambrell, who made the mistake of catching it. He was hit for a five yard loss. A pass to Lester gained 10 and the Gamecock outlook was rosy again. But Reeves' forward wall couldn't keep the Tar Heel defenders out forever. On third down, Jim Hammett and Vic Esposito threw him for a four yard loss, and on the fourth down, Esposito and Chris Hanburger swarmed the passer for a seven yard loss.

The Tar Heels had only to kill the clock to salt away their first win. One first down would do it.

Three running plays left them a foot shy of the first down. In the meantime, South Carolina had used up all of its time outs in trying to prolong the game.

On fourth down at the USC 41, Edge, instead of sneaking for the yardage, handed off to Ron Tuthill, who was stopped for no gain. The visitors then took over and started their desperate lunge for a final score.

On the first play, Gambrell caught a pass and weaved for 25 yards before being caught. He couldn't make it out of bounds to stop the clock. Then Reeves threw long to Anderson, the flanker back, about the eight, just inside the who caught the ball on the run at right sideline. Barden, in at safety, threw himself at Anderson and dropped him on the two. Some fifteen seconds were left when Anderson was tackled inbounds. The Gamecocks lined up as quick as possible, and got off a play just as the final horn sounded. But Reeves' sneak failed, and the Birds were in motion, anyway, and so their final effort was stopped.

North Carolina, outdone in most of the statistical departments, had heroes both defensively and offensively. Willard picked up 50 yards rushing to go with his kick return. Edge, doing most of the quarterbacking, gained 15 yards net in 9 carriers, and had 88 yards on 6 pass completions. Defensively, the ringleaders were linebackers Eddie Kesler and Joe Craver, tackles Gene Sigmon, Esposito, and Jim Alderman, ends Frank Gallagher and Hanburger, and guards Richard Zarro, Clint Eudy, and Jack Tillery.

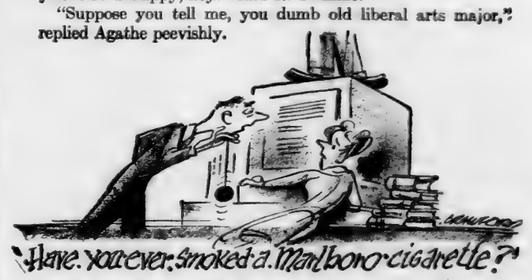
HAPPINESS CAN'T BUY MONEY

Can education bring happiness?

This is a question that in recent years has caused much lively debate and several hundred stabbings among American college professors. Some contend that if a student's intellect is sufficiently aroused, happiness will automatically follow. Others say that to concentrate on the intellect and ignore the rest of the personality can only lead to misery.



I myself favor the second view, and I offer in evidence the well-known case of Agathe Fusco.

Agathe, a forestry major, never got anything less than a straight "A", was awarded her B.T. (Bachelor of Trees) in only two years, her M.S.B. (Master of Sap and Bark) in only three, and her D.B.C. (Doctor of Blight and Cutworms) in only four.

Academic glory was hers. Her intellect was the envy of every intellect fan on campus. But was she happy? The answer, alas, was no. Agathe—she knew not why—was miserable, so miserable, in fact, that one day while walking across campus, she was suddenly so overcome with melancholy that she flang herself, weeping, upon the statue of the Founder.

By and by a liberal arts major named R. Twinkle Plenty came by with his yoyo. He noted Agathe's condition. "How come you're so unhappy, hey?" said R. Twinkle.

"Suppose you tell me, you dumb old liberal arts major," replied Agathe peevishly.

"All right, I will," said R. Twinkle. "You are unhappy for two reasons. First, because you have been so busy stuffing your intellect that you have gone and starved your psyche. I've got nothing against learning, mind you, but a person oughtn't to neglect the pleasant, gentle amenities of life—the fun things. Have you, for instance, ever been to a dance?"

Agathe shook her head.

"Have you ever watched a sunset? Written a poem? Smoked a Marlboro Cigarette?"

Agathe shook her head.

"Well, we'll fix that right now!" said R. Twinkle and gave her a Marlboro and struck a match.

She puffed, and then for the first time in twelve or fifteen years, she smiled. "Wow!" she cried. "Marlboros are a fun thing! What flavor! What filter! What pack or box! What a lot to like! From now on I will smoke Marlboros, and never have another unhappy day!"

"Hold!" said R. Twinkle. "Marlboros alone will not solve your problem—only half of it. Remember I said there were two things making you unhappy?"

"Oh, yeah," said Agathe. "What's the other one?"

"How long have you had that bear trap on your foot?" said R. Twinkle.

"I stepped on it during a field trip in my freshman year," said Agathe. "I keep meaning to have it taken off."

"Allow me," said R. Twinkle and removed it.

"Land sakes, what a relief!" said Agathe, now totally happy, and took R. Twinkle's hand and led him to a Marlboro vendor's and then to a justice of the peace.

Today Agathe is a perfectly fulfilled woman, both intellectwise and personalitywise. She lives in a darling split-level house with R. Twinkle and their 17 children, and she still keeps busy in the forestry game. Only last month, in fact, she became Consultant on Sawdust to the American Butchers Guild, she was named an Honorary Sequoia by the park commissioner of Las Vegas, and she published a best-selling book called I was a Slippery Elm for the FBI. © 1962 Max Shulman

The makers of Marlboro are pleased that Agathe is finally out of the woods—and so will you be if your goal is smoking pleasure. Just try a Marlboro.

Judge To Discuss Court Reform In Gerrard Tonight

Lee Rainey, vice-chairman of the Student Committee for Court Improvement, said yesterday that Superior Court Judge John D. McConnell will be the featured speaker at the committee's open meeting tonight at 7:30 in Howell Hall.

Judge McConnell is a graduate of Davidson College and of the UNC Law School. He has been Assistant U. S. Attorney General and is a former Secretary of the State Democratic Committee.

McConnell was also the Administrative Secretary for former Sen. Frank Porter Graham.

The Student Committee for Court Improvement is promoting the passage of the court reform amendments which will go before the electorate of North Carolina November 6.

If the amendments pass, they will bring uniform costs, fees, and procedures to all the lower courts in the state.

Rainey said, "All students who are interested in seeing their court system improved are welcome to the meeting."

UNC To Host Model Assembly

UNC will host the United Nations Model General Assembly for the Middle South, February 20-23, it was announced recently by Hugo Spechar, Secretary General of the model organization.

"The UN Model Assembly is an opportunity for a student to discover what international policy-making is, and to find out the difficulties involved in world government," Spechar said.

Spechar is a UNC economics major from Bolivia. Last year he headed the model delegation from Mexico.

Sixty-five delegations will arrive from 12 states. Colorado Air Force Academy will represent the U.S.-S.S.R. Britain will be represented by South Carolina and the U.S.A. by N. C. State.

Several delegations will come from UNC, and have not been assigned at this time.

The functions of the Secretariat will be served by Judy Alexander of UNC. Assembly Parliamentarian will be Roger Foushee.

Special guest speakers will address the Assembly. They are ABC news commentator Edward P. Morgan, who is Washington correspondent to the Saturday Evening Post; and Dr. William M. Jordan, Director of Political Affairs in the UN.

Vacancies are open to UNC students who would like to help plan the event in February. Especially needed, said Spechar, will be typists during the Assembly week.

Warships Leaving East Coast Ports

WASHINGTON (UPI)—President Kennedy Monday night clamped a naval blockade on Cuba because Soviet medium range missiles and other arms had turned the island into an armed camp capable of hurling destruction into the heart of America.

The blockade on shipment of offensive weapons to the Fidel Castro regime was part of a seven-step program ordered by the President and already under way to meet the "threat to hemispheric security posed by the Soviet arms buildup. The President said the naval blockade would not deny Cubans the civilian necessities of life.

To halt the buildup in Cuba, the President ordered a seven-step program, including a strict quarantine on all shipments of offensive military equipment to Cuba. This will involve a strict naval blockade but the blockade will not, he said, deny the Cubans necessities of life.

The buildup, the President said in a nationwide radio television report to the people, now includes medium range ballistic missiles capable of firing nuclear warheads for more than 1,000 miles. In addition to the quarantine, Kennedy also announced that he had taken these additional "initial" steps:

—A declaration of American policy that this nation will regard any nuclear missile launched from Cuba against any nation in the Western Hemisphere "as an attack by the Soviet Union on the United States requiring a full retaliatory response upon the Soviet Union."

—Reinforcement of the U. S. naval base at Guantanamo Bay and started the evacuation Monday of armed forces dependents stationed there. In this connection, Kennedy ordered additional military units, apparently in this country, to stand by on an alert basis.

—He called for an immediate meeting of the "organ or consultation" under the Organization of American States to consider what he called "this threat to hemispheric security."

—The United States, the President said, was asking Monday night for an emergency meeting of the United Nations Security Council where this contry will introduce a resolution calling for prompt dismantling and withdrawal of all offensive weapons in Cuba under U. N. supervision. The President said the offensive weapons would have to be removed before the quarantine could be lifted.

—He called on Soviet Premier Nikita S. Khrushchev "to halt and eliminate this clandestine, reckless and provocative threat to world peace and to stable relations between our two nations." His call upon Khrushchev included a demand that offensive weapons be withdrawn from Cuba, saying the Soviet leader thus had an opportunity "to move the world back from the abyss of destruction."

Henderson Comments On Dorm Papers

Dorm newspapers, which have acquired somewhat of a reputation as obscene joke sheets, have recently had restrictions forced upon them from several sources.

The mimeographing office in Graham Memorial has announced that it will not print any dorm newspapers unless an individual student is willing to take full responsibility for the contents of the paper.

Two weeks ago, the IDC passed a directive which said that the person responsible for the paper can be cited for a violation of the Campus Code if the paper is in poor taste.

Bruce Welch, President of the Interdormitory Council, said that he did not wish to censor the dorm newspapers, and that that would not be the effect of the directive. "I'm not advocating a culture sheet," said Welch. He added that the directive was merely pointing out what every editor of a dorm newspaper should already know.

Welch went on to explain that since the circulation of the newspapers is impossible to control, dorm papers are part of what forms the Carolina reputation.

Charles Henderson, Dean of Student Affairs, said that he was not opposed to dorm newspapers, but that he was against dormitory joke sheets. When asked why, he said, "You wouldn't let a person drink himself to death, would you?"

Henderson explained that he thought there were better goals than printing obscene jokes. He said that it was a question of the greatness of what was being printed. The dean was sure that Greek plays offended people but were never-the-less art.

Communism In Chapel Hill

Smith Act: It Snared Scales

This is the last of a series on Communism at UNC.

By VIRGINIA CARNES

On October 10, 1956, the United States Supreme Court heard a challenge of the membership clause of the Smith Act. The clause declares membership in the Communist Party to be illegal if a person knows it to be a subversive group.

The appeal of Junius Scales, one of the first convicted under the membership clause of the Smith Act, was before the court.

Telford Taylor, counsel for Scales, questioned the constitutionality of the proviso that mere membership in the Communist party is an offense. Scales, he said was not accused of organizing the party nor of advocating the overthrow of the government.

The court failed to reach a decision, and granted a reargument to be heard at the fall term opening October 7, 1957.

On September 24, 1957, the government moved to wipe out the two convictions of Scales and Claude M. Lightfoot, Chicago Negro, who served a executive secretary of the Illinois Communist Party, under the "knowing membership" clause of the Smith Act.

The Supreme Court in June, 1957, had directed a ne wtrial for Clinton E. Jencks, former labor union official convicted of filing a false non-communist affidavit. The court declared that Jencks should have been given access to FBI reports made by bureau undercover agents who testified at his trial.

In view of this the Justice Department issued a memorandum telling the court that the cases of Scales and Lightfoot involved the same "production-of-the-records" decided in the Jenck's case.

Each case accordingly was reversed and Scales waited in Uew York, where he was then living, for retrial.

On December 17, 1957, Junius Scales declared in a letter to the Greensoro Daily News that he was no longer a member of the Communist Party. He said he had not paid his party dues since January and ceased being a member after the party's February convention.

Scales said, "I had never planned to make my views public, until this business came up again. I certainly couldn't go through the trial posing as a party member."

His reasons for leaving the party were what he termed as "the Hungarian thing", Soviet suppression of the Hungarian revolt, and the "Krushchev Secret Report", a report by Krushchev downgrading Stalinism and revealing his brutality.

Despite this letter, Scales was scheduled to appear before the Middle District Court in Greensboro for his second Smith Act trial in February, 1958.

Two of the chief witnesses against him were again Ralph Clonz, Charlotte lawyer, and Charles Benson Childs. In direct testimony Childs told the jury how he was taught to kill a man with a pencil at Scales Communist Party school, located on a farm near Walnut Grove.

Bracing the pencil in the palm of his hand, with his thumb, Childs said that Scales would stabb in the air to show the stroke that would drive the pencil point into a man's heart or through his throat. He said this technique and some judo tricks were taught at the school because, students were told, they "might come in handy on a picket line."

Testimony was then given by Scales mother, Mrs. A. M. Scales of Greensboro, that he had urged people whom he recruited for the party to "get out".

On February 21, 1958, he was again convicted by United States District court jury and sentenced to six years in the General penitentiary. He was released under $20,000 bond pending appeal.

Attorney Telford Taylor said Scales was a "tragic figure" of "too much feeling and too little wisdom".

In June, 1959, the Supreme Court ordered a new hearing for the next fall on an appeal which questioned the constitutionality of the "membership clause" of the Smith Act.

Taylor urged the High Tribunal to reverse the second conviction on the grounds that the membership clause was an unconstitutional invasion of the First Amendment safeguards of free speech and assembly.

In October, 1960, the Supreme Court began the hearing and again Scales was convicted. He made a last attempt to have his prison term reduced.

Affidavits in his behalf from Superior Court Judge L. Richardson Preyer, a North Carolina judge of Greensboro four members of the second jury that convicted him; Martin Luther King Jr., Negro integration leader; Reinhold Nieblur, theologian; Paul Green, playwright; and Jules Feiffer, cartoonist were attached to his formal petition.

"I have no remaining affiliation with the Communist Party", Scales said. I believe myself to be a loyal Amercan citizen, and I support the Constitution and principle of our form of government."

On October 2, 1961, almost seven years after he was arrested in Memphis, Junius I. Scales, 40 years old, surrendered to federal authorioof a fellow Tar Heel, Junius Scales.

Junius Scales is the only man serving a prison term today because of the "knowing membership" clause of the Smith Act . . . he 'rehabilitated' himself six years ago when he left the Communist movement under the pressure of his own conscience. The legal process which ended with his conviction took eight years, which drained the resources of his entire family . . . granting of humanity to Junius Scales in the form of executive clemency will add to our own spiritual strength in this very struggle against world Communism. . . ."

In June, 1962, Scales petitioned President Kennedy to grant him a pardon, or alternatively, a commutation of sentence.

The petition was prepared by Scales and his attorney, McNeill Smith of Greensboro, in May at Lewisburg Prison, Lewisburg, Pa., and was filed on une 11, 1962, with Attorney General Robert F. Kennedy.

In the petition he stated his departure from the party in February, 1957, and said, "I, myself, was not charged with advocating violent overthrow . . . I have never committed any violence."

He wrote that he requested pardon or commutation of sentence because: (1) "I can best serve my country outside the Federal penitentiary rather than in it . . . (2) I do not believe myself to be a danger to my country . . . (3) I personally discussed with as many members of the Communist Party as I knew and was able to contact personally . . . and I urged them to quit the party too (after 1957). (4) . . . Nevertheless, I hope and pray that my case has served some good purpose for my country and that purpose having been served, I, myself, might be allowed to live out the rest of my life in quiet devotion to my family. . . ."

Filed with the petition were letters of endorsement by 33 persons including "nine of the twelve jurors who convicted him, two of the presties to begin his six-year prison term. He was to be eligible for parole on October 2, 1963.

In April, 1962, Harry Golden, editor of The Carolina Israeiite and author of several best-selling books, began distributing a petition to "newspapermen and writers in North Carolina. The petition sought executive clemency for Junius Scales.

The petition read as follows: "Dear Mr. President: The undersigned newspapermen and writers of North Carolina respectfully plead for executive clemency in the case ent United States District Judges in North Carolina, seven partners of five of the leading law firms in Greensboro and in the state, some of the professors who have been teaching Constitutional Law at Duke University and UNC and others. . . ."

What will become of this man, described as "poetic rather than hard-nose, a muddled idealist", as "a completely bemused and benighted young man", and as one who had truly felt that "Communism was essentially the ultimate answer of achieving the brotherhood of man"? Time will tell.

Recently the Chapel Hill branch of the American Legion advised an investigation of "Marxist" groups on the UNC campus by the legislature. The objects of this investigation— the Progressive Labor Club and the New Left.

Although these clubs claim to have no Communist affiliation, the investigation was deemed necessary because they do profess "leftist" ideas.

Other than this very little talk of Communist activity in Chapel Hill has been heard recently.

Some people still wonder and remember the days when UNC was called the "hotbed of radicalism" and the "Reds on the hill". On the other hand The Raleigh News & Observer said, "It would be disturbing, as a departure from the normal, if the University did lack some roaring young radicals. Indeed the young men who are never radical miss an important part of youth."

Gabriel M. Evans Is Outstanding Law School Grad

Gabriel Marlin Evans, a graduate of the School of Law, has been named the recipient of the United States Law Week award, it was announced today by Henry Brandis Jr., Dean of the Law School.

UP To Introduce New Nominating Method Tonight

Tonight in Carroll Hall the University Party will introduce a new nominating system which it will use to nominate Freshman, Sophomore, and Junior Class Officers. Starting with a keynote address by Inman Allen and announcements of appointments of UP Legislative Seats, the convention will procede with the new delegate voting system.

Under the system a housing unit gets five basic votes for having 10 members. In addition, a unit gains an additional vote for each ten members—including the first five. For example, if a housing unit has thirty members it will receive five basic votes plus one vote for each of the ten members thus making a total of five plus three, of eight votes.

For this housing unit to vote it will be necessary that the eight votes be represented by eight at the convention. This is the second UP Convention to use this new method.

Margaret Rhymes Chosen To Fill Legislative Seat

Margaret Ann Rhymes, a senior from Hickory, was elected to fill the open legislative seat in Dorm Women's District 2 at the Student Party Pre-convention meeting Sunday night.

Miss Rhymes, a member of the Valkyries, former Managing Editor and Associate Editor of the Daily Tar Heel, and former NSA delegate, will fill the SP seat vacated by Lee Lumpkin.

Robin Britt, Chairman of the Student Party, announced the Advisory Board's recommendations for ground rules to be used at the convention. The rules were passed without opposition by the body.

After the official business meeting there was an informal discussion of the proposed amendment to the Student Constitution clarifying Student Legislature's authority to pass resolutions on off-campus issues. The amendment was proposed by Rep. Arthur Hayes (SP).

Prizewinning Author Tells Background, Reveals Method

By LEON ROOKE

What course of action does a man take when at the age of 40 he decides to change his way of life? Suppose he thinks he has talent as a writer and wants to develop? Where does he go? What does he do?

RICHARD McKENNA

If he is a sailor with 22 years Naval experience behind him, and has decilded to write short stories, what is the most opportune way for him to learn his trade? Is there any "best" way, or many ways?

Richard McKenna, 40 years old in 1953 and fresh from a destroyer patrolling Korean waters, had several ideas on how to go about it; he would retire to a cabin in the desert: he would go to a mid-western university and enroll as a student.

Richard McKenna did not go to the desert. He didn't go to college in the mid-west. He came to UNC. In any case; he learned to write and now, suddenly, the spotlight is on him: his first novel has won the $10,000 Harper's Prize. It will be serialized in Saturday Evening Post. It is a Book-of-the-Month selection. Movie rights have been purchased by a major company to the tune of $200,000.

When Chief Petty Officer McKenna was casting about to find out what he should do in 1953, he sought advice. He wrote a letter to his former commanding officer, Captain John S. Keating. McKenna knew Captain Keating years before at the Great Lakes Naval Training Station. It was there that McKenna wrote news stores and feature articles for Navy publications.

McKenna's letter to his former commander was dispatched from a destroyer off Korea. The letter reached Captain Keating at the University of North Carolina. Capt. Keating was Commander then of the Naval ROTC in the University.

Captain Keating's reply was immediate. Come to Chapel Hill, he said. The University of North Carolina, explained the captain, is "some sort of special place for a writer." "It's a good university for "a man with a purpose," wrote Captain Keating.

McKenna had just read Thoreau's "Walden Pond" and had almost decided to do as Thoreau had done: retire to a remote cabin—and write.

McKenna's method of development for his writing talent, some

Secrecy And Democracy, The Two Don't Jive

With headlines declaring "Secrecy Shrouds U. S. Strategy," citizens all over the country awaited the announcement by the President which would put them back into a democratic "know."

Apparently, for the first time in recent history the United States Government was preparing to take action of some sort, somewhere, with an appalling minimum of advance fanfare. There had been no previous press releases, no series of television specials, no plug by the DAR, no statement from Caroline Kennedy — in effect, nobody knew nothin.

Basic to any understanding of democracy, seems to be the essential privilege—indeed, essential "right" —of every citizen to know what the administration is going to do, when it is going to do, why it is going to do, and how it is going to do, before the administration do, or rather does.

The President doesn't run the country. He just takes the credit or the blame for the success or failure of the ideas he gets from all his buddies—who are paid ideagetters; and they, if the truth were known, get their ideas from the people—from the people who keep the people informed.

It is much easier that way. That is what makes American Democracy so "democratic." Nobody does anything until everybody knows all about it. That little red button won't be pushed until the television cameras are there to "transmit the dramatic moment" into the living room of every American family democratic enough to own a TV set.

And so, with his futile attempts to build up armed forces in the Caribbean without letting everybody know why, Kennedy has made another radical break from all tradition that American citizens have come to hold so dear.

What brass! What gall! To think, an American President who would do something first, and explain why later. What impudence! Don't that man know what democracy means? Why it means tell everybody everything, reveal all to all; and then — and only then—may he do something, as long as that something he does jives with what he told everybody in the first place. That's democracy, man. (CW)

Speak Up, Alumni

The entire faculty of the Philosophy Department could leave Carolina for the assumption of higher salaried positions at "Ole Miss," and the event would pass unnoticed by the majority of our glorious alumni. But let the football team lose a few games, and thousands of old grads are immediately up in arms.

We find this inversion of values rather ridiculous, and yet somewhat troubling. Why is it that the most vocal alumni align themselves with contingents screaming for the coach's head?

The University has too good a record on the fields of academic endeavor to immediately presuppose that alumni confine their interests in UNC to athletic endeavors only. And yet, troubled times for the football team continually draw rumors of violent stirrings in the ranks of "prominent alumni."

Why is it that those old grads who donate thousands of dollars annually to scholastic enterprises are willing to leave the recipients alone to learn and make occasional mistakes; and, apparently, those who donate to athletic funds, want to fire somebody every time we lose a game?

We would prefer to think that there are quite a few alumni who donate to the Educational Foundation who are willing to leave the coaching up to the coach and the hiring and firing up to his immediate superiors. It just seems that those individuals, who are satisfied with the job being done and recognize the problems that must be overcome, feel no need for talking about it.

Quite frankly, we wish they would, would make more noise that is. Surely, if those disgruntled grads who circulate petitions and spread rumors in attempts to have a coach removed, would hear an occasional word of "confidence-in-the-coach" expressed by their fellow alumni, they might be more apt to pause for a bit of reflection and realization. . . .realization that the coach isn't doing such a bad job after all, that the season isn't over yet, and that if they got behind the program, instead of working against it, things might be pretty good in the future. Nothing, Man

Walking across the campus Saturday afternoon when everyone else is at the football game, you could easily decide that Chapel Hill is most attractive when no one is here. The campus was beautiful, the trees, late afternoon sun, the quiet, and all that.

. . . And you could decide that the essence of what makes Chapel Hill a little bit great and a little bit wonderful is what is NOT here, rather than what is here.

Much of what is good about Chapel Hill is negative—the things people don't make you do; the organizations to which you don't have to belong; the classes you don't have to attend; the time you have which isn't spent in any regulated way; customs to which you don't have to conform . . .

This is Chapel Hill—a tradition of enlightened negativism—and the basic premise that each person's affairs are his own business.

The University is noted for imposing no unreaonable infringements upon student activities or behavior. UNC offers the student an education and it's up to him to accept or reject it. And the student is left free . . .

Tar Heel Athletes Are Not 'Misfits'

'Goons' Really Fine Citizens

To the Editors,
Mr. Wyre:

I have read your editorial in the October 16, 1962 issue of the Daily Tar Heel, entitled "Tarheel Football: The Goons are Gone", with considerable distress, and I can only come to the conclusion that you are at best guilty of writing an editorial in the greatest amount of ignorance and bad taste.

For your information I attended the University of North Carolina and received an A.B., and LL.B. I live in Chapel Hill where I practice law and am raising a family and I am a member of the local Booster Club. so I do not believe you can describe me as one of the outsiders. Neither am I part of the "knowing crowd," but I wish to make the record clear. The record speaks for its self, as to those that you described as "bums" and "athletic goons". I believe that the greatest example of "athletic goons" are the teams in the Charlie Justice years at Carolina and I wish to respectfully call to your attention what some of these football slobs, as you call them, and educational misfits, who went around the campus with comic books in their back pockets have done with their education that they have received at UNC. To point out a few, I call to your attention:

1. Mr. Ralph Strayhorn, Prominent Attorney — Durham, N. C.
2. Mr. John Tandy, Principal of R. J. Reynolds High School—Winston-Salem, N. C.
3. Mr. Art Weiner — —Senior Vice President — Burlington Mills
4. Mr. Kenny Powell — Outstanding Insurance Executive — Charlotte, N. C.
5. Mr. Charlie Justice — Owner of a large Amoco Distributorship and on the Board of Directors of a large insurance company.
6. Mr. Joe Wrighte — President of Phillips 66 Distributorship
7. Mr. Ed Washington — District Solicitor
8. Mr. Hosa Rogers — Personal Director of a large chain of mills in Alabama.
9. Mr. Bob Cox—Executive Pepsi Cola Bottling Company and former President of the United States Jaycees.
10. Mr. Jim Camp — Head Coach — George Washington University.
11. Dr. Andy Miketa — Doctor of Dental Surgery and University Instructor
12. Mr. Walt Pupa — Southern Manager of the Asphalt Division of the Amoco Petroleum Company.
13. Mr. Gus Purcell — One of the outstanding high school coaches in North Carolina

These are the "bums" and the "educational misfits" that you speak about in your editorial page.

I can only hope that your other editorial writers are not as badly informed as you and from the quality of your editorial, I can only wonder what you will be doing ten years from today.

—C. B. Hodson

P. S. I doubt if you will have the internal fortitude to print this letter, but in case you do, you have my permission to do so.

Higher Education For North Carolina — There Is A Will, But The Way Is Rough

By CHESTER DAVIS
In The Winston-Salem Journal and Sentinel

Higher education in North Carolina—that is, education beyond the high school — is in trouble. This state is now entering the long antcicipated "college crisis" and the blunt fact is that we are not prepared to meet the many problems now being laid in our laps.

This fact—a fact implicit in the recent recommendations of the Governor's Commission On Education Beyond The High School —has led to an outburst of bitter recriminations.

Some blame the Board of Higher Education—an agency established in 1955 to develop a system of higher education in North Carolina — for the failure. Others say that the cause of the failure rises from the fact certain state-supported schools—primarily the Greater University of North Carolina and East Carolina College — refused to cooperate with the Board of Higher Education and, in that refusal, gutted its proposals.

Insofar as this who-shot John sort of blame-calling attempts to fix responsibility for past errors, it is simply a case of crying over spilt milk. But, insofar as the controversy attempts to assign responsibilities for meeting the problems that now confront us, it represents an invaluable first step toward too-long-delayed academic maturity in North Carolina.

In assigning this responsibility for the future of higher education in North Carolina, the first question you encounter is what place, if any, a Board of Higher Education properly should have in the development of a system of unified colleges and universities.

A BRIEF, STORMY HISTORY

Before any answer to that question can be made, it is first necessary to understand the brief and stormy history of the nine-member Board of Higher Education we now have.

That story began in the early 1950s when thoughtful men like Gordon Gray, then president of the Greater University of North Carolina, recognized these facts:

—The postwar "baby-boom," then pretty much in the diaper stage, assured that the colleges and universities were soon to be inundated by scholars. (North Carolina had 32,000 youngsters in college in 1940. The figure was 45,000 in 1950, and it hit 75,000 in 1961. Projections indicate that there will be from 110,000 to 117,000 youngsters in North Carolina colleges by 1970.)

—The private universities and colleges, financially handicapped when it came to massive expansion, simply could not begin to meet this rising tidal wave of students.

—The state-supported institutions—there were 12 in 1950—would have to expand enormously to meet the challenge. In doing this, there was the risk of wasteful duplication unless the growth was coordinated.

Gordon Gray felt it was essential that North Carolina create an agency to supervise and coordinate the then suprisingly independent and competitive state-supported institutions of higher education. Not all of ihs associates agreed with him on this point. Billy Carmichael, then comptroller of the Greater University, opposed the idea. But others — Chancellor of the UNC at Chapel Hill and Chancellor Cary Bostian of State College, for example—supported the proposal.

UNIVERSITY TOOK THE LEAD

From the outset the proposal for an agency to coordinate higher education in North Carolina seems to have been sponsored by the Greater University. This sponsorship was born of two considerations, one general and one specific:

—In a general sense it was felt desirable to create a coordinating agency to oversee the development of an orderly system of state supported higher education in North Carolina during a period of swift and enormous expansion.

—In a specific sense the administrators at the University of Norh Carolina were disturbed by the growing evidence of unrestrained ambitions in certain of the state's teacher colleges. (House, for example, was disturbed by the fact East Carolina College was talking of establishing a School of Business Administration to compete with a similar school at Chapel Hill. Bostian was disturbed by the fact E.C.C. sought to establish a School of Agriculture to compete with the agricultural school at State College.) They, frankly, wanted some protection from such ambitions and an over-all coordinating board seemed to offer a solution.

Gray discussed the proposal with Gov. William Umstead. Neither the Governor nor his legislative advisor, Frank Taylor, was particularly enthusiastic about the plan. Both men, however, were impressed by the fact that the costs of higher education were rocketing upwards (they rose 216 percent between 1945 and 1952) and they agreed that Gray's proposal deserved close examination.

The 1953 General Assembly authorized such an examination when it created a seven-member Commission on Higher Education and gave that Commission $25,000 to be used to define the problem and propose steps necessary for its solution.

This commission, headed by Victor S. Bryant, a Durham attorney, reported to the 1955 General Assembly. The report was a hair-curler Essentially the Bryant Commission told the legislators:

—That North Carolina taxpayers were not getting the results in state-supported higher education ". . . which might be expected in view of the amount of money being spent."

—"It is very apparent," the commission said, "that something is wrong with higher education in North Carolina when efforts are compared with results."

LACK OF CONTROL CITED

The failure, the commission continued, resulted from the fact there simply was no effective control over the programs (and the ambitions) of the 12 state-supported institutions. According to the commission, "the competition for appropriations, for students and for public approval leads to duplicate programs which often are unjustified." Just how unjustified is seen in a few illustrations found in the Commissioner's report:

—Eight of the 12 institutions offered master's degrees in education and three others were about to do so.

—Six of the 12 institutions offered French as a major. Yet all six graduated an average of only 26 French majors a year.

A student who took nothing but courses in English could spend seven very full years before she completed all of the English courses offered at Woman's College alone.

Efforts made by the General Assembly—the one state agency with any power to coordinate the state's colleges and universities—to correct this duplication had failed miserably. The Bryant Commission noted that in 1939 the General Assembly flatly forbade any duplication of courses between North Carolina College in Durham and at A. and T. college in Greensboro. Yet in 1953, the commission reported, N.C.C. offered 27 home economics courses while A. and T. offered 21 such courses.

Pointing to the lack of uniformity in accounting systems (in 1955 it was impossible to determine how much it realy cost to educate a youngster at the separate schools), the variance in student-teacher ratios, the difference in costs and the like, the commission concluded:

"The individual institutions, now separte and uncoordinated, obviously cannot perform this planning function, for it requires some agency with a state-wide view and over-all jurisdiction."

The Bryant Commission recommended that the 1955 General Assembly create a Board of Higher Education to meet what it described as a real need. In making this rocemmendation the Bryant Commission was positive on two important points:

1. The new board must have regulatory as well as advisory authority. On this point the commission, said, "A State Board (of Higher Education) cannot be effective if it is purely advisory. To coordinate effectively, it must have some control over programs and functions. This means that it must have some place in the budget-making process." At another point in the report the commission added, "A purely advisory board would be a mere figurehead with the form of coordination but no substance."

2. The new board should have a "statewide view." From this it is clear that the commission ruled out college presidents and regional tub-thumpers as being members of the board.

As Victor Bryant later said, "Our plan was to obtain a mandatory law and then, after employing a first-rate staff, administer that law on a cooperative and voluntary basis rather than by issuing flat-footed orders." This was exactly the sort of law that was adopted by the 1955 General Assembly.

The legislators created a nine-member Board of Higher Education. It carefully specified that all nine members were to be laymen and that "no member shall act as the representative of any particular region or any particular institution of higher education."

The new board was "to plan and promote the development of a sound, vigorous, progressive and coordinated system of higher education in the state of North Carolina."

To do that job the board was given very specific, and rather broad, regulatory powers. These included:

The power to determine and allocate the functions of each state-supported institution.

The power to determine the type of degrees to be granted by each institution.

The power to prescribe uniform practices and policies.

The power to recommend to the Advisory Budget Commission and to the Director of the Budget the biennial expenditures of each of the state-supported schools.

At the time this law was under discussion, two facts are worth noting.

In the first place, some of the educators who initiated the idea of a coordinating board became less than enthusiastic when they saw the new board was to be backed by an authoritative law filled with regulatory teeth.

AUTHORITY IS EMPHASIZED

In the second place, the men who were to administer the new board—Major L. P. McLendon, the present chairman of the board, for one—had no doubts about the board's regulatory authority. Late in 1955, even before the Board of Higher Education had really gotten into business. McLendon, in a speech at Chapel Hill, said, "The board shall make plans for a system of higher education and shall have the power to require such institutions to conform to such plans."

Bryant and his group saw the board as an agency which would formulate plans for a system of higher education and then, by cooperation if possible but by muscle if necessary, would impose those plans on the institutions. This was the philosophy adopted by McLendon and by others who were to serve on the board. It was a philosophy mirrored in the clear words of the law itself.

The heads of some of the institutions, however, tended to look on the board as an agency which would, with their help, formulate plans for a system of higher education and then would become the advocate for those plans, selling them to the General Assembly and to the public.

By mid-1957 the honeymoon was over for the Board of Higher Education. There were repeated and increasingly frequent clashes between the board and the larger state-supported institutions.

Perhaps the single most important source of friction was the budget-making process. In making its recommendations for the 1957-59 biennium to the Advisory Budget Commission, the board, undertaking a line-by-line analysis of the budget requests for each institution, cut total requests for capital improvements from $50.6 million to $25.4 million and cut operating budget requests from $57 million to $50.7 million. Much the same sort of thing occurred in the 1959-61 and 1961-63 bienniums. The institutional budgets, while they rose substantially, regularly were held down by the Board of Higher Education.

In making such "cuts" the board talked in terms of an "irreducible minimum." The institutions, believing that the board should be out in front fighting for budgets large enough to meet foreseeable needs, bitterly complained of this attitude—an attitude one editorial writer described as "antic semantics." Instead of holding up the floor the board, in the mind of some of the college presidents, should devote its efforts to raising the ceiling.

Certain of the college and university presidents — primarily Dr. Leo Jenkins of Eastern Carolina and Dr. William Friday, president of the Greater University — became convinced that the board was entirely too involved in item-by-item detail to fulfill its function as a high-level planner and coordinator; that in making a line-by-line analysis of institutional budgets the board was encroaching on purely internal affairs that properly were within the province of the boards of trustees of the individual schools; and, most of all, that the board was regulating (i.e. holding down budgets) where it properly should have been advocating, i.e. selling the General Assembly on the need for greater expenditures in higher education.

might believe, was a roundabout one. He took no writing courses. He has never had one. "I had every intention of doing so," he says, "but never could work them into my schedule."

What courses did the award-winning author take while speeding through the University with a straight A average in 40 subjects?

"I was an English major," he says. "But I purposefully took a heavy load of psychology, anthropology and the sciences."

"I took the science courses to get a background for science-fiction, the area of writing which I had selected as the best apprentice ground. I'm different from most students you will find: I wasn't just thinking about writing but had already definitely committed myself to writing when I came to the University. I came here to implement that decision. The University was more than adequate to fulfill my needs."

No Creative Writing Courses

"I'm often asked now about creative writing courses: what I think of them? Why I took none?"

"They are useful and almost a necessary part of any beginner's training. I had to get the same things on my own. I first discovered my facility with words while doing news and feature writing for the Navy at Great Lakes, but I always have read a lot. I read all the how-to-do-it books on writing that I could find and these helped in the long run — although they didn't seem to be helping at the time.

"One doesn't become a writer by taking creative writing courses just as the English scholar does not become a scholar by taking courses in English. The work has to be done in isolation."

"My encouragement came from selling in the open market, in competition with professional writers."

The writer's first published work was in the field of science-fiction and did not come, he hastens to add, until he had written 100,000 words or more. He began writing in the science-fiction genre, he says, because "they are the last pulps left on the market and are a good apprentice area. It is here that one can get published while one is learning."

Of the many science courses he took to get background material, he says he may have taken too many. "A number of my stories were returned because they were too technical." Science, at least in fiction, is, he says, a pseudo-science.

The University course which McKenna has found most beneficial to his writing was a seminar on "Theory of Ritual and Primitive Religions." It is taught by anthropologist John Honigmann. McKenna calls Professor Honigmann "one of my favorites."

Fund Drive Continues Through Wednesday

The YM-YWCA Fund Drive will continue through Wednesday. Cabinet members are asked to continue to turn in daily reports until they have completed their assignments.

Mimi Farquhar and Scott Trull, co-chairmen, have expressed their concern with the results thus far. "The faculty does not seem to be responding as well this year as it did at this point in the drive last year. We hope the faculty members will as soon as possible send in contributions by campus mail to the Y building. We feel that the Y is vital to the University and deserves support."

Reston Scores Winning Goal

Tar Heel Booters Trim UVA, 2-1

By JOEL BULKLEY

Jim Retson booted a goal with 50 seconds remaining in the game yesterday to give the Tar Heel varsity a 2-1 victory over the Cavaliers of Virginia.

This win, UNC's third in a row at home, gave the varsity a 2-0 record in the Atlantic Coast Conference and a 3-1 season mark.

Center forward Reston's goal, his ninth of the year, came on an assist by right wing Pete Blake and capped an afternoon of rough and tumble soccer at Fetzer Field.

Frank Lankford, Carolina's inside left, broke a scoreless tie after seven minutes of the fourth period with a penalty kick. Virginia bounded back to even the score a minute later on Captain Bruce Farrell's tally.

Prior to these fourth period scores, the game had been a battle of goalies. Mike Vermillion of UVA and Buddy Siegel of Carolina had been bombarded with shots all afternoon. UNC took twelve shots in the first half, against three for the Cavaliers. In the second half, however, Virginia had 14 shots while Carolina had seven.

This loss gave Virginia a 2-2 record including a 1-2 mark in the ACC.

Co-Captains Bob Kepner, left wing, and Bill Snyder, center halfback, and Bill Haywood turned in excellent performances for the victorious Blue Shirts.

The Tar Heels will face Pfeiffer College at 3 p.m. Friday afternoon at Fetzer Field in a non-league game .

Gene Mauch Named Top NL Chief

NEW YORK — (UPI) — Gene Mauch, whose Philadelphia Phillies were the hottest team in baseball for the final two months of the season and who wound up the season 30½ games better than their 1961 finish, was named National League manager of the year Monday by the United Press International.

Mauch was selected for the honor by 12 of the 24 baseball writers comprising the UPI's 1962 board of baseball experts. Manager Walt Alston of the Los Angeles Dodgers received six votes, Alvin Dark of the San Francisco Giants had three, Casey Stengel of the New York Mets got two and Fred Hutchinson of the Cincinnati Reds had one.

Mauch's firm but patient leadership paid dividends for the Phillies after it appeared on June 1 that the team was no stronger than the 1961 club that finished last in an eight-team league.

Since June 1, the Phillies won 62 games and lost 54 and in the last two months of the campaign they were the hottest team in the majors with 30 victories in 44 games. The result was a season won-lost mark of 81-80 compared to 47-107 finish in 1961.

Longhorns Remain First

Northwestern Jumps In Poll

NEW YORK (UPI) — Northwestern's surprising Big Ten Conference leaders moved into second place behind Texas Monday in the United Press International major college football ratings and Michigan State and Auburn joined the top 10 group.

Texas, which won its fifth straight game by defeating Arkansas, 7-3, in the final 36 seconds of play Saturday night, led the ratings for the third straight week.

The Longhorns' first-place margin was only 16 points over Northwestern, however, and 26 over third-ranked Alabama in this week's balloting by the 35 leading coaches who comprise the UPI rating board.

Auburn, upset winner over Georgia Tech, made the biggest jump of the week, vaulting from obscurity to the No. 10 ranking. Wisconsin advanced four places to No. 4 and Michigan State moved up three notches to No. 9.

This week's top 10 group thus was made up of four teams from the Southeastern Conference Alabama, sixth-ranked Mississippi, eight-ranked Louisiana State and Auburn; three from the Big Ten Northwestern, Wisconsin and Michigan State, and two from the Far West "Bix Six" fifth-ranked Southern California and seventh-ranked Washington, in addition to Texas's Southwest Conference leaders.

The board of coaches divided most of their first-place votes among the first three teams, Texas receiving 11, Northwestern 9 and Alabama 8. Southern California was the No. 1 choice of three coaches, Wisconsin of two, and Mississippi and Michigan State of one each.

In points distributed on a 10-0-8-7-6-5-4-3-2-1 basis for votes from first to 10th places, Texas had 298, Northwestern 282 and Alabama 272. Auburn barely edged Nebraska by one point for its berth among the top 10 teams.

Arkansas, sixth last week, and Ohio State, which had been rated seventh, dropped out of the top 10. Ohio State, which led this season's first weekly ratings, fell all the way to 8th place. Arkansas dropped to 12th.

Carolina To Honor Jim Beatty Friday

Little Jimmy Beatty, regarded by many as the world's greatest distance runner, will be honored by his University here next weekend.

It amounts to a special weekend and a birthday present for the 5-5½, 128-pound comet who holds the U. S. record for the mile (3:56.3) and world marks for the indoor mile (3:58.9) and outdoor two mile (8:29.8). Jimmy will be 29 years old on Sunday.

Beatty, who now resides in California where he is in the insurance business will fly here with his wife, Barbara. He will arrive Thursday evening and embark on a busy schedule.

On Friday, Jimmy will speak to several physical education classes. That afternoon at 4 p.m., he plans a full-scale workout. Members of the press, TV and radio are to be his special guests at this session.

At that time Beatty is expected to announce his plans for the future and indicate if he expects to compete in the 1964 Olympics.

A "Jimmy Beatty Day" dinner will be held Friday night at Lenoir Hall, at which time several dignitaries, including his former coach, Dale Ranson, will make short talks.

On Saturday, Beatty will be introduced to the crowd in Kenan Stadium at halftime of the Wake-Forest-UNC game.

Beatty gaduated at Chapel Hill in 1957 and during his collegiate career he acquired 11 individual Atlantic Coast Conference championships. He entered the University after blazing a trail in high school track at Charlotte's Central High.

As a student, Beatty held numerous campus offices and was tapped a member of the Golden Fleece, adjudged the school's highest honorary society.

Reflections of Telstar
Remember the picture above? It flashed across your television screen on a hot night last July. Perhaps you remember that it originated from France. And that it reached the U. S. via Telstar, the world's first private enterprise communications satellite.
Since that summer night, the Bell System's Telstar has relayed electronic signals of many types—television broadcasts, telephone calls, news photographs, and others.
But there's one Telstar reflection you might have missed. Look into the faces of the Bell System people below and you'll see it. It is the reflection of Telstar's success that glowed brightly on the faces of all who shared in the project.
Their engineering, administrative and operations skills created Telstar and are bringing its benefits down out of the clouds to your living room.
These Bell System people, through their talented, dedicated efforts, make your phone service still better, more economical, and more useful.
The reflections of Telstar are many.

OAS Unanimously Backs Cuban Quarantine

Forum Sponsors Discussion Of Kennedy Action On Cuba

The Cuban quarantine and the wisdom of President Kennedy's decision will be discussed by a four-member panel at 7:30 tomorrow night in Carroll Hall.

A question and answer period and general discussion will follow the panelists' commentary. The open meeting is being sponsored by The Carolina Forum.

Al Lowenstein and Charles Parrish are the only panelists announced thus far. Lowenstein, an instructor in the Department of Social Studies at N. C. State, is a graduate of UNC and Yale Law School and is experienced in international law and politics. Parrish is a graduate student and part-time instructor in the Political Science Department here.

Prof. Walter Spearman of the School of Journalism will be the moderator.

"The session will primarily be a discussion of the President's Cuban policy, especially the blockade," Henry Mayer, chairman of the Forum, said yesterday.

"To say that people are concerned about the situation is of course an understatement. A number of students have expressed a desire to discuss the issue and its implications in an open meeting, and The Forum is happy to have been able to arrange this one.

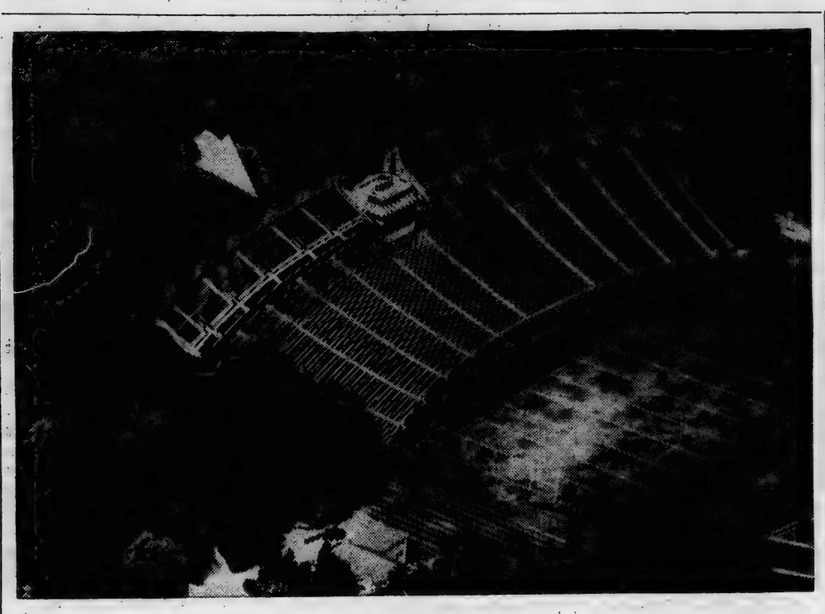
"Hopefully, there will be further opportunities for similar discussion meetings during the course of the year," Mayer added.

Reds React By Alerting All Troops

MOSCOW (UPI) — The Soviet Union, in swift reaction to the U. S. blockade of Cuba, Tuesday cancelled all troop leaves, ordered the entire Communist bloc to step up its military preparedness and accused the United States of "taking a step along the road of unleashing a thermonuclear world war."

The Soviet also postponed scheduled discharges of some rocket troops, anti-aircraft personnel and sailors of its submarine fleet.

It called a meeting of military leaders of the eight-nation Warsaw Pact — the "Communist NATO" — and ordered the "united armed forces" of the Soviet bloc to increase their land and naval preparedness.



Disclosure of the military alert was made by the official Soviet Tass news agency. Tass said the moves were made "in connection with the provocative actions of the aggressive intentions of the U. S. United States government and the armed forces."

Calls U. S. Aggressor

It followed quickly after the Kremlin, in a statement handed to the U. S. Ambassador here, accused the United States of direct aggression against Cuba and repeated the claim that the Soviet arms shipments were solely for Cuba's defense.

Moscow also called for an immediate meeting of the United Nations Security Council—as President Kennedy did in announcing the "quarantine" Monday night — and warned that "if the aggressors unleash war, the Soviet Union will deliver the mightiest retaliatory blow."

"At this anxious hour," the statement said, "the Soviet government regards it as its duty to issue a serious warning to the U. S. government warning it that by taking the measures announced by President Kennedy it assumes a grave responsibility for the destinies of peace, is recklessly playing with fire."

THIS IS HOW Kenan Stadium will look with the new concrete seats to be added this winter. The arrow shows the placement of the additional tier on the south side of the field. The renovation is to be financed by a contribution by William R. Kenan, who gave the stadium to the University in 1927. (See Story on page 4.)

Significance Of Red Arms 'Immediate'

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The Organization of American States (OAS) Tuesday approved a U. S. resolution calling for the use of armed force to prevent a further buildup of offensive military weapons in Cuba.

The council of the 20-nation organization voted 19-0 to support the quarantine of Cuba announced by President Kennedy Monday night. Uruguay abstained, saying it was still without any instructions from its government when the vote began.

Peru announced at the last moment that it had received instructions to vote for the resolution. The resolution also called for the dismantlement of missiles already in Cuba.

The U. S. resolution required the support of at least 14 nations for approval. But apparently most of the members took to heart Secretary of State Dean Rusk's warning that U. S. cities were not the only strategic targets for nuclear weapons in this hemisphere.

Mexico, Brazil, Chile and Bolivia explained their approval was subject to constitutional limits on the use of executive power by their governments.

The final vote was preceded by more than one hour of argument about style and grammar of the official Spanish text of Rusk's resolution.

In a tense morning session, the delegates gave almost unanimous approval to Rusk's blunt warning that the offensive capabilities of Cuba were a threat to all of the Western Hemisphere.

Rusk said the significance of the new Soviet missiles in Cuba is "immediate, direct, and perhaps fateful."

"The immediate character of the nuclear military threat to our peoples from these bases in Cuba is such that we cannot tolerate any further opportunity to add to their capacity," he said in a rare appearance before the council. He said "we are convinced that the evidence presented can leave no doubt that the danger is present and real."

Then, assessing the worldwide dangers of the present crisis, and with Moscow in mind, Rusk said:

"May add that crucial in this present situation will be the judgment of others, some of them far away, about the unity and determination of the nations in this hemisphere. The President made it clear last evening that we should prefer to resolve this problem through peace.

"But if others make a grave mistake, the danger will be greatly increased."

The council then acted and by a 19-0 vote agreed to constitute itself as a special organ of consultation. This is a necessary procedure under the 1947 Rio treaty. Even Mexico, which has traditionally resisted U. S. moves against Cuba and maintains relations with the Castro regime, backed this U. S. proposal for an immediate session to deal with new developments in Cuba.

Other comments were equally strong. Argentine Ambassador Roberto Aleman said Cuban actions as outlined by the United States "affect and endanger the peace of the hemisphere, and should be dealt with immediately by the OAS."

The Haitian ambassador, Fern D. Baduidy, said his country "cannot be indifferent when communist aggression threatens." Outright support for the U. S. stand was offered by the delegates from Guatemala and Venezuela, whose countries have been among the most outspoken foes of the Castro regime.

Student Leaders Here Say Kennedy Move "Debatable"

Seven Student Government officials were asked to comment on President Kennedy's action in the Cuban crisis yesterday.

INMAN ALLEN, President of the Student Body said, "I think it's the most significant diplomatic and military step taken by the American Government since the beginning of the Korean War.

"I do not think that military escolation will be the only result of the quarantine, but I do feel that the arms race will become more apparent in the minds of all Americans, and I assume, in the minds of all Soviets.

"As for what will happen, I do not think that this will lead to warfare—either nuclear or conventional—but rather I feel that America's position will be supported by the free world, and that Russia will have to compromise on her obvious intentions with respect to Cuba."

Student Body Vice President MIKE LAWLER told the Daily Tar Heel: "From my point of view, these are the questions which I am asking myself in trying to analyze the situation.

"First, the United States has a moral obligation to operate with integrity in the international community. This move by the President and the possible consequences definitely seem to be on the offensive.

"What I am questioning is the appropriateness — both morally and practically — of taking this manner of offensive in this particular situation. I don't understand how we can reach a definition of offensive weapons in Cuba and not include that definition our missile bases in Turkey, West Germany, and Scotland.

"I think we would be more justified in terms of international ethics and law to have taken this strong stand in Berlin, the Indian border dispute, or in Soutwest Africa.

"And second, would it not have been a more defensible position and better policy to have had the Organization of American States invoke a military quarantine? It is unlikely that the OAS would have taken this strong position, but our strong stand would have provided offensive pressure and at the same time allowed the Soviet Union to 'gracefully' cease these weapon shipments instead of putting them in the position of losing face.

"Instead, we have moved immediately to such a volotile situation."

HARRY DE LUNG, NSA Coordinator, stated: "From my limited perspective, I think that Kennedy has betrayed the faith of those who look to him for a sane approach to the possibility of nuclear warfare.

"This intervention into the affairs of Cuba is dangerous not only because it tempts the destruction of mankind, but because it was initiated without the cooperation of our traditional allies.

"In the 'Neutralist' countries of the world, this action will surely tend to instill an air of hesitancy about the United States' desire for international peace."

WALTER DELLINGER, Chairman of the Men's Honor Council, told the DTH, "It is impossible for the layman to be aware of all the military considerations involved, and only the Pentagon officials can determine if Cuban nuclear bases represent a more serious threat to our security than those already located in Northern Siberia.

"The quarantine will be difficult to justify morally, legally, and diplomatically. The Soviets could use much the same arguments to justify a quarantine of Spain or Turkey—not to mention Berlin.

"While concern over the Cuban crisis mounts, it would be wise to remember that the American policy towards Batista, which I feel is in a large measue responsible for the present situation, is now paralleled by our present policy toward Franco's Spain."

ROBIN BRITT, Chairman of the Student Party, said, "It seems to me that President Kennedy's quarantine of Cuba is a step toward the alleviation of two of the greatest problems facing American foreign policy.

"First, immediate action in the Cuban situation is imperative with the only alternative being to negotiate internationally in a position of weakness.

"Secondly, the quarantine is an act of initiative, and the stongest criticism of our foreign policies have been that they have merely been reactions to the cold war strategy of the Kremlin.

"Consequently, the quarantine was a necessary and strategic move."

MIKE CHANIN, Chairman of the University Party, told the DTH: "I support Kennedy's action on this issue, because I feel that it is time this country realizes that a nation of another hemisphere cannot come into this hemisphere and take over another country, making it a military base.

"I also say that those people who feel that our danger is within, must realize now that this danger is from without, from, in fact, the two large and aggressive countries, the Soviet Union and China, and that this is an active aggression.

"I also feel that this country has the legal right to take this action as evidenced by the Rio Treaty."

Chinese Reds Drive Deeper Into India

NEW DELHI (UP) — Chinese Communist troops under orders from Peiping to ignore boundaries drove deeper into India Tuesday despite stiff resistance from defending Indian forces.

An Indian spokesman admitted that Red forces are threatening Twang, a town of about 25,000, which is about 16 miles south of the McMahon line on the eastern sector of the broad battle front. He said the situation on the western front in Ladakh was unchanged.

Aid To Spain Is Dangerous —Lowenstein

By MIKE PUTZEL

Al Lowenstein, a graduate of UNC and the Yale Law School currently teaching in the Department of Social Studies at N. C. State College, told a near capacity Carolina Forum audience in Gerrard Hall Monday that continued United States support of Franco in Spain is not consistent with American ideals of freedom and could easily lead to disaster.

The speaker has observed conditions in Spain at first hand for several years; his most recent trip to the country was made this past summer.

Lowenstein said that the present government of Spain, which the United States supports with economic and military aid, is not acting in the best interests of the governed and should no longer get aid from the U.S.

According to Lowenstein, the Spanish goverument suppresses all resistence, even non-violent demonstration, and is silently opposed by the "vast majority" of the Spanish people.

The speaker went on to illustrate his point by reading portions of letters and reports from people now in Spanish prisons for political crimes. He said that political dissenters are brutally beaten, tortured, and imprisoned without trial.

Lowenstein expressed a ray of hope to secure freedom for the Spanish people. He said that the one thing which the Franco regime cannot combat is massive strikes, which he expects will break out all over Spain during November. If the strikes last for two months, said Lowenstein, Franco will begin to lose control.

When this happens, according to Lowenstein, the United States should refuse to support Franco, and the regime will fall without another civil war. Then the U. S. should support a more liberal government, possibly a constitutional monarchy, which will pave the way for a free Spain.

However, warned Lowenstein, if the U. S. continues to support Franco, the Spanish people will be forced to revolt, perhaps within five years, and the people will turn to the Communists for aid as the only power that promises peace and freedom.

Lowestein compared the present situation in Spain with that of Cuba at the time of their revolution, when the United States had supported Batista until it was too late to win back the faith and trust of the Cuban people, who then followed Castro into Communism. Lowenstein pointed out that Castro is fast becoming a hero in Spain for freeing oppressed people from Fascism.

The meeting was adjourned after a spirited question and discussion period.

S. P. Selects Full Ticket For Election

By HUBERT HAWKINS

Dick Akers won the party office of Vice-Chairman over Bill Hobbs and Haynes McFadden, defeating Hobbs on the second ballot 52-36.

In the class primaries Jack Harrell captured the party nomination for Freshman president, gaining a majority over candidates Bill Campbell, Bill Robinson, Bob Peyton, and Bill Hudson.

Harrell offered a platform of increased communication of freshman officers with all members of the class, greater interest in the Honors Program and advanced classes, and coordination between all classes by means of an interclass council. He stressed unification and identity within the student body.

The remaining offices were filled by acclamation of the party: Secretary, Polly Osborn, Treasurer, John Sheldon; and Social Chairman, Pam Weddle.

Junior class nominations then followed: Gordon Appell, President; Judy Harrison, Vice-President; and Bonnie Hoyle, Secretary. All were by acclamtion. Ann Eskridge beat Steve Leher for the office of Treasurer, and Dianne Hile won the office of Social Chairman over Prissy Bennett.

Sophomore nominations, by acclamation, were Bill Aycock, President; Kippy Carter, Vice-President; Cookie Cochran, Secretary; Judy Tyson, Social Chairman; and Paul Chusen, Treasurer.

Haynes McFdden ,protesting the previous acclamation - nomination for Junior Vice-President, requested that the floor be reopened by poular consent in order to consider another candidate. Gil Stalings and Dwight Wheless opposed this on parliamentary grounds and the Chairman ruled aginst the request, agreeing that it would be a "dangerous precedent."

Chairman Robin Britt closed the convention meeting, calling for wider participation from the membership in running for offices.

Dick Akers, newly-elected Vice-Chairman, said "The Student Party has always been a good open-forum where any ideas may be stated without malice. It's sort of spawning ground for the ideas that become actuality on th ceampus.

"I intend to help Robin (Britt) reactivate the organization, and we call on every student to come and help put their ideas into effect."

Britt said yesterday that he thinks SP will win, "since we have a fine slate of candidates and also the valuable issues as a platform in our campaign."

He cited dorm libraries now nearly ready for installation in strategic dorms, as an example of this year's follow-up of last spring's lection platfrom.

"SP representatives have been making great progress toward getting bus service to Craige and Ehringhaus," he continued, "and also in arranging transportation and special social activities for weekends at WC under the auspices of the Student Party."

He said that work is continuing toward obtaining a writer- or artist-in-residence at UNC.

"We have designated students to make special studies for Student Cooperative to offer all merchandise to students at cut-rat prices," Britt went on, "and this has been discused at length in a recent SP meeting. I think with these issues and these candidates who can put them into effect, we will win."

UP Nominates Johnson For Frosh Pres.

Dick Sayre and Hap Stuart were tied for vice-president with final votes not yet tabulated at this writing.

Johnson beat candidates Chuck Clark, Bill Thomas, and Chuck Barton for the nomination. Dusty Anderson was opposed by one candidate, Dianne Davidson.

Tommy Dunn and Chris Wright were eliminated from the vice-presidential slate, with Wright calling on his supporters to switch their votes to Stuart.

Voting was by delegation and roll call.

President of the student body Inman Allen opened the convention with a keynote speech, explaining the method of voting and calling block voting "a thing of the past; and let's put it there—in the past."

He spoke of involvement in the university community, and the enemy of such involvement, "that anonymous and detached voice whose pincipal function is to say No."

"If you have an idea of any sort, cherish it; don't let it stand by and become stagnant."

Richad Lewisohn, a fomer member of the party executive committee, then addressed the group, warning against pre-decided voting guided only by pesonal loyalties.

"We have voted for numbers instead of names," Lewisohn said, "and fraternity brothers instead of campus leaders. Don't be the tools of anyone else."

He cited this as the cause of last year's UP fall defeat, in which, he said, the voters chose the most qualified candidates.

Liberal - Conservative: What's The Difference?

College students in debate tend, even more so than their political leaders, to become enmeshed in a rolling, rising, never-ending flood of semantics. Discussion of issues of substance is often obstructed by the terminology employed.

A cause for this is the youthful tendency to be absolutist, to be reluctant to admit he knows very little (and perhaps cares less) about a certain issue, or that he is still in doubt. Another cause, of course, is that these terms have been forced upon the college student by their constant use by the political world.

No self-respecting Liberal allows himself to agree with a proposal put forth by a Conservative, and vice-versa. Liberals wouldn't dream of supporting anything so Tainted-With-Conservatism as a balanced budget or tighter welfare requirements, even though they would not constitute real violations of principle; and conversely, Conservatives force themselves to reject every Liberal proposal to ensure constitutional voting rights in the South, or to improve the U. S. foreign aid program.

Because these and many other issues have been cursed with the Mark of Conservatism or Liberalism, the other camp must cry "War" and immediately leap to the battle.

* * *

In the heat of the semantic battle, the traditional meanings of "Liberal" and "Conservative" have been obscured.

A dictionary defines "liberal" as "favorable to progress or reform, as in religious or political affairs. . . . favorable to or in accord with the policy of leaving the individual as unrestricted as possible in the opportunities for self-expression or self-fulfillment . . ." And also as "of representational forms of government rather than aristocracies and and monarchies. . . . free from prejudice or bigotry; tolerant . . ."

This definition of "liberal" (no caps) does not hold for the modern political Liberal (caps), who is often more interested in "promoting the general welfare" than in "leaving the individual as free as possible."

Similarly for the "conservative", who is "disposed to preserve existing conditions, institutions. . . . cautious or moderate. . . . having the power or tendency to conserve . . ." Very few Conservatives (caps again) want to conserve anything today—rather the opposite. Effort is expended to change U. S. foreign policy, to change the welfare state, to change the federal-states rights situation. No one would mistake a modern political Conservative for a person desiring to "conserve" or "preserve existing conditions."

* * *

So . . . the terms Liberal and Conservative are not only confusing, divisive and harmful to constructive debate—they are also lacking in meaning.

Would it not be reasonable, then, to discard these and other words of little meaning? Discard them, and return to a political system of discussion and debate where positions are accepted or rejected on their individual merits. (JC)

Dynasties And Dictionaries

With the fall congressional elections approaching and President Kennedy determined to have the country "elect more Democrats" by vigorous campaigning, the Republicans are groping for political ammunition.

Of late, several Republican candidates and individuals have made reference to a "Kennedy dynasty," nothing particularly that Teddy Kennedy is running to fill his brother's old Senate seat from Massachusetts.

This is a serious accusation. A "dynasty" is by defination a non-elective, hereditary rule completely incompatible with the American democratic system.

By using this word to refer to the Kennedys, their critics have overlooked several important facts, namely:

—That President Kennedy was elected with a majority of the popular and electoral college vote, —That Attorney General Kennedy was approved by a majority of the U. S. Senators, duly elected representatives of the people, —That candidate Teddy Kennedy was elected to run for the Senate by a majority of the Democratic voters of Massachusetts in their primary.

In other words, the critics' use of the word "dynasty" or any similar word to describe the Kennedy family's public service is inaccurate.

Perhaps the Republicans have their own dictionary. The definition of "dynasty" from such a book might read, "Dynasty — any group of individuals which consistently defeats Republican candidates at the polls; definition may be extended to include anyone we don't like."

Useful as such a dictionary might be to Republicans at election time, we don't imagine they could get along with it very well in normal, civilized conversation.

Therefore, in the public interest, we are sponsoring a new organization, to be known as FURD, the Fund to Underwrite Republican Dictionaries.

The beauty of FURD is that it is not only a fund-raising organization, but a cheer.

"FURD" as a cheer is best when screamed derisively in the middle of YRC meetings. It is best to stand near an exit when engaging in this activity.

As for FURD contributions, they can be sent to "FURD, c/o Senator Barry Goldwater, U. S. Capitol, Washington 25, D. C." FURD contributions will also be accepted at the DTH offices, although they are not guaranteed to reach Senator Goldwater.

UN: Best Hope For World Peace?

U. S. Cannot Avoid Reality

From a speech delivered by Hugo Spechar, Secretary General of the Middle South UN Model General Assembly, before the N. C. Federation of Women on October 17 at Henderson, N. C.

Suppose that a strange magician should give us a set of different colored marbles and asked us to arrange them according to color preference.

When we had finished after much sweating and hard decisions, he would hand us other colors to add to our array. The new colors would upset our preference order, and we would have to reshuffle the combinations.

I am sure that if the magician repeated this procedure many times, we would end, unable to suffer the executive ulcers of so many decisions, by throwing the marbles at the magician's head.

Even if in principle we like to play with colors, too many colors can nauseate us — too many decisions.

The same is true with government. We limit its institutions and its prerogatives and obligatons. And on these limiting assumptions we make policy.

Furthermore, to simplify the matter, we isolate domestic from international policy-making to avoid the sweat and frustration of compromising decisions, of contemplating more choices than we are willing.

Thus we reap disaster. The formula of limiting analysis is found faulty — as it happens in every discipline of knowledge. Many times state and federal law contradict each other, and domestic legislations don't make contact with foreign policy. And that is why rational policies turn so many times into irrational provocations, and why problems in international relations do exist.

But even if we are distressed by so many choices and avoid extending our assumptions, we nevertheless should search for solutions of how to avoid the stigma of limited analysis.

Thus we have appointed a magician to upset our arrays of priorities and therefore our stomachs. We have chosen the UN.

What is government?

Confronted with so many executive decisions and ulcers, we each join forces against distasteful complications of daily living, such as income-tax forms, IDC meetings, Massachusetts primaries, and females. That is, we form government.

In forming government on these contractual bases, we may reject our inherent rights of becoming sweaty and frustrated before too many decisions; or in our impatience we may end by throwing the marbles at the magician or at each other.

In accepting the UN as a source of distress and anxiety, pricking nations to avoid excessive limitations of policy and refusal of the necessarily numerous choices, we deny each other the too-conventional drug for executive ulcers: the notion that the nature of governmental authority is force — domestic and international — and the polite conventionality that the only way to preserve a nation's sovereignty and its people's is by the use of power over other nations.

Therefore if we think of the UN as a stultified and inefficient body of laws with no future of world order, we must remember that the answer is not to replace or abolish it, but for nations to grow tougher stomachs, less delicate and susceptible to executive ulcers.

Once nations learn that policy is an ever-changing series of choices, that rationality under one setting changes into irrationality under another, that domestic and foreign policy can't be divorced from each other, only then are nations able to think about policy with a clear head.

Meanwhile, as nations develop this knowledge through trial and errors at the UN, remember that life is not completely rational, and that by hiding our heads from this problem we don't solve it. Neither can we solve any problem by simplifying it to mere slogans.

And remember that by working through the UN, we might prevent frustrated nations, who have not yet learned the magician's rules, from throwing the marbles.

Today is United Nations Day — a day which supposedly is set aside for serious thought about the organization which means so many different things to so many people. Is the U.N. an effective worker for world peace, or is it just a sponge soaking up United States money? Is it the world's best hope for avoiding nuclear war, or just a platform for the Afro-Asians to rant against the West?

These columns by Mr. Hugo Spechar of the U.N. Model General Assembly, and by Sam Jones, UNC president of Young Americans for Freedom — attempt to pose and answer some of these questions.

No UN Success In Keeping Peace

October 24, 1962 has been set aside as "United Nations Day." Some say that giving up one day to UN would be worth it, if that is all it would take to satisfy the starving Africans and the Eleanor Roosevelts. But, unfortunately, the UN takes up much more time, and spends many more American dollars, than is possible to cram into one day's activities. And so for whatever October 24 signifies, perhaps it behooves us to examine man's "last chance for peace," especially in light of the recent attacks on that body from all directions.

Without wasting time on the UN's humanitarian efforts to feed and clothe a starving world, let us turn immediately to the basic purpose of the United Nations: (1) maintain peace, and (2) check aggression. How successful has the UN been? The answer is clearly, "not very." Recent aggressive action in Laos, Goa, Katanga, Viet Nam, and the volatile situations in Cuba and Berlin attest to the inadequacy of the UN as a peace-preserving body. And what's more serious, the UN itself has been fit to get into the aggressive act. The wanton attacks on Katanga can never be justified by those who hold any beliefs in democratic, self-determination. All Katanga wanted was to remain separate from the Communist dominated Congolese government and to conduct its own affairs. Against these ideas the UN resorted to military action. (The October 15 issue of NATION REVIEW exposes a secret memorandum taken from the UN which shows clearly that the UN is planning additional military attacks on Katanga, under the guise of "Congolese unity." Such war-mongering cannot be tolerated in a world union for peace.)

And why has the UN, which pledges itself to national self-detemination and peace on earth, done such a shabby job in persueing its ideals? Because, basically, not all of the "united" nations of the United Nations are for peace. Certainly the Communist nations are not for peace. The Communists have never disguised their aggressive lust for power and world dominence. Both their words and their deeds mark them as true subverters in the search for peace. And yet Adlai Stevenson sits down at the UN round table with hope in his heart and goodness in his soul, and tries to play a game of power politics in which some of the players are out to kill him and all his friends. Good ole Adlai, who takes the UN at its word, namely, let's work for peace, is a sporting fellow: he is only trying to contain his opponent. When one team goes into a ballgame trying to win, while the other team plays for the tie, who do you think will be victorious?

Many of the newer "non-committed" nations in the UN are not interested in much more than their own pocketbooks. They try to play one rich nation against another in in the hope that money will accrue to them. The Afro-Asian bloc is quite negligent in using the UN as a positive force for peace, when it is obvious that censurship or police action is necessary to thwart an aggressor. They are afraid that by condemning a great power, say the Soviet Union when it supplies nuclear weapons to Cuba, they will close the door on foreign aid gifts to themselves. In fact, upon examination of the UN, it is apparent that most of the countries are not particularly interested in working for peace, but rather are trying to realize their own greedy goals of wealth and/or power.

But the fact more depressing than the UN itself is OUR own government using the UN as idiocy of this is the fact that whenever the US delegation sees it is going to lose a vote in the General Assembly, they immediately change votes in order to stand with the "winning" side. Now what sort of foreign policy is that? If our government would accept the UN for the highly imperfect and malfunctioning body it is, and would pursue policies based on the just interests of the United States, then the UN itself would return to proper perspective: as an organization which provides needed ambassadorial services for the small nations and an occasional handout for the needy.

'Waltz' Dances To Funny Tune

Waltz of the Toreadors, now at the Varsity Theater, is the screen adaptation of Jean Anouilh's stage play of the same name, so we were informed while browsing around the contemporary American lit shelf in the front of Jeff's. How Anouilh got involved with this crowd is beyond our comprehension. Perhaps it's the plot, which deals with an English general at the turn of the Century who faces with understandable bewilderment and anguish retirement, a bitter wife, and an eager Parisian who's been waiting 17 years to consummate an affair with him.

All this takes place in the traditional Old Establishment manor reeking of regiment and giggling housemaids. Since both the play and the movie chose to ignore the more tawdry possibilities of the plot, we're at even greater loss to explain the knowledge discussion in Jeff's, but this is not to the point.

The movie, starring Peter Sellers, expectedly plays the comic aspects of the situation to the hilt. The general climbs a wisteria in the pouring rain to keep a rendezvous with his would-be mistress. Unlike Romeo, he makes it to the balcony, which collapses under his weight and deposists him in a rain barrell. Also, learning that his wife has been unfaithful to him with her doctor (his best friend and confidant), he demands that the doctor satisfy his honor. They duel, the doctor successfully defending himself against a saber with an umbrella, and the general gets nothing for his trouble but a lecture on physical fitness.

These are only two of the many humorous situations in the movie, all of which are done with the usual Sellers flair, but of far greater interest ws the pathos which is becoming more and more evident in Sellers' performances. There is an edge to the general's comic fumblings, and we see him not only as a comic figure, not only as the traditional "old fool," but also as one who, in spite of an adventurous and well-rewarded career and all the material comforts of his position in his era, feels that somehow life has eluded him and is ready to throw away the honor and reputation of a lifetime in his eagerness to catch up with life before it passes him by altogether. After a somewhat contrived set of circumstances, he sees himself as he appears to others, makes a peace of sorts with his wife in spite of the fact that each hates and pities the other, gives up his mistress to his young and naive aide, whom he reveals is the result of an earlier discretion, and retires to his manor to live out his life flirting with the chambermaids. Not exactly an entrancing vision of old age, but one which the viewer can't help but accept as his inevitable fate.

Sellers' performance is an excellent one, and he shows an increasing talent for serious acting in the tradition of Alec Guiness or even Charlie Chaplin. Irritating as such comparisions are, to actor, reader, and critic alike, they are as inevitable as they are inaccurate. Sellers will never be anything but Sellers; let us say then that we hope he'll continue to expand and improve as he has been.

Margaret Leighton does an equally good job as the general's wife, and plays as convincing a bitch as one could ever hope to avoid, at the same time forcing the audience to pity her. Without her, Sellers would have had difficulty in being as effective as he was.

Cyril Cusack as the doctor and Dany Robin as the Parisienne are also more than adequate. John Fraser as the young aide gets in an acceptable performance, but in spite of great predictions for his future, seems in this movie to be nothing more than an English answer to Troy Donahue. However, he's not so vapid as to detract from the story, and isn't really that much in evidence anyway.

Waltz of the Toreadors is certainly not one of the best movies you'll see in your entire life, but is still a very amusing one with some good performances and some particularly sharp commentary on the vanity of man.

'Weaver' Hays Thanks Campus

(The editors apologise for the lateness at which this letter is being printed. It is from a member of the Weavers, who appeared in Chapel Hill on Oct. 5).

To the Editors:

May I borrow a little space? I want to say thanks to the students who attended our concert inside and outside Memorial Hall and who accorded the Weavers such great honor that we could not find words to express our pride and our humble appreciation.

We have sung at dozens of campuses in all parts of the country with the exception of those which are segregated, but I think our concerts at Chapel Hill have been the most exciting and rewarding experiences of our long career. Our visits to the colleges at Raleigh and Greensboro were mighty fine too, but there is a special feeling about singing at Chapel Hill which we don't experience anywhere else. Why is this? I think it is because we don't have to 'sell' our songs, or explain them too much, or apologize for them, or to be afraid to experiment with new ideas. A good audience provides more than one-half of the success of a concert, and you beautiful young people at Chapel Hill raised the percentage considerably.

I also want to thank the Tar Heel, its editor, its letters-to-the-editors-writers, and the students at the Inn and elsewhere who helped me to understand the Ole Miss mess. I wish all of you great success in all your pursuits, and I hope you have a fine school year too!

Job Openings Announced

Because of increased enrollment a number of half-time secretarial and clerical jobs have opened up, according to an announcement today by Mrs. Doris McCauley of the University Personnel Office.

Mrs. McCauley said that the Personnel Office has had difficulty in finding persons to fill these positions and suggested that housewives whose children are now in school might be interested in applying for them.

Most of the positions are within the academic area, in the offices of department chairmen and school deans. A limited number are available in University business offices.

Hours can be arranged at the convenience of the accepted applicant, she said. The jobs will be for a five-day week or about 20 hours of work per week.

Typing is usually essential, she said, but short-hand, while convenient, is not a necessity.

Interested persons should apply to Mrs. McCauley, care of the University Personnel Office in Steele Building on the campus.

Chess Team Wins Over Georgia Tech

UNC's top three chess players won their games Saturday night to give the team a 3-2 victory over Georgia Tech here.

"They were better than I had expected," said president and No. I player Simpson. But he indicated Carolina did not just squeeze by.

This past summer she studied at the U.N., long one of her special interests. Her speech will be "The Trusteeship Council and Dependent Peoples."

Of particular interest to students will be a prior talk by Earl Koontz, a Political Science grad student here who worked as an intern at the UN this summer. He will speak of his experiences while working there. After each speech there will be a question and answer period.

In order that as many people as possible may benefit from the speakers, the A.A.U.W. has consented to open its meeting to the public. The meeting wil take place in Peabody Hall at 8:00 tonight. All students and other members of the community interested in the U.N. are urged to attend.

Hickey Revises Units, Prepares For Wake

By ED DUPREE
Sports Editor

North Carolina's football team starts the second half of its season this Saturday against a team that is always a problem for Tar Heel teams.

Wake Forest's winless Demon Deacons will be the foe and they will have a pair of reasons for wanting a victory over Carolina. First, they are winless. Second, they are playing their most hated rival.

Coach Jim Hickey was asked at his press luncheon yesterday why Wake Forest is always "up" for Carolina. His answer was that Big Four teams are always up for games against their three state rivals.

It's a mystery, though, the way the Deacs have given UNC headaches in past seasons. In Hickey's first season, UNC eked out a 21-19 triumph in Winston-Salem.

But, behind, Norm Snead, Wake came from behind and won the 1960 game, 13-12. Norm, now with the Washington Redskins, had a bad day, but hit Donnie Frederic! with a 15-yard pass in the fina quarter for the triumph. Earlier Snead had kicked the first extra point of his career, one which turned out to be the winning margin.

Last year thee was an apparent reason why UNC lost, 17-14. The Tar Heels were lifeless and it was amazing that they stayed in the contest all the way. The 6-3 loss to Duke the week before had deflated a team that made a game try to win the ACC champion-ship.

But this year it's the Tar Heels who are down—but not quite as far down is the Deacs.

Coach Hickey has moved his personnel around and revised his three-platoons to the point that Carolina hardly has the three team system any longer. But the Tar Heel coach points out that 39 men still saw action in the South Carolina game.

The Tar or defensive unit backfield is now the first string backfield on defense. It consists of Dave Braine, Tommy Ward, Hank Barden—three sophomores—and senior John Flournoy.

The Blue team back will still be used on offense and defense, while the Rams will now be a two-way outfit playing with the Tar line.

Players who were strictly offensive and defensive specialists earlier in the season will now see more two-way action. One of these is Chris Hanburger, a sophomore who has stood out on defense. He'll see more offensive play duing the season's second half.

Hickey was impressed with the play of Gene Sigmon and Cole Kortner against the Gamecocks. Sigmon, just moved up to the first team last week, responded very well. Kortner, a junior out for football for the first year, turned in a stellar performance on defense. Both are tackles.

Ken Willard and Ronnie Jackson, offensive backs, and Barden and Ward, defensivists, were all cited for their work against South Carolina.

Richard Zarro was also commended for his play as roving linebacker, and Jim Alderman played better at guard than he had at tackle in the previous games, thought Hickey.

Young Deacs Hustle, Says UNC Scout

By ED DUPREE

Head scout Emmett Cheek was impressed with Carolina's next football obstacle, Wake Forest, last Saturday in a game he says the Deacons "could have won from Virginia."

The Cavaliers handed Wake its fifth straight loss, 14-12, but Cheek was nevertheless impressed with the young Deacons. Five sophomores started the game against UVA.

Cheek was most impressed with the team's hustle. "They play the last play of the game just like the first one."

Coach Billy Hildebrand won't have to worry about getting his men up for this week's contest. They'll handle that themselves, just as Deacon teams have done in the past.

"They're an improving team," said Cheek at the football press luncheon yesterday, "and they always put out 110 per cent effort against Carolina. They figure if they can beat Carolina, they'll have a successful season."

Cheek thought that Wake played its best game of the year against Virginia. "The thing that stopped Wake in the last two games (South Carolina and Virginia) was its own miscues," the scout pointed out.

Donnie Frederick, Wake's break away threat, scored a long touchdown on a flare pass, but it was nullified because of a holding penalty.

"Frederick may not be as good as Billy Gambrell," said Cheek, "but he's just as dangerous. He can change directions real well."

John Mackovic, a soph who started the first two games at quarterback, has yielded in favor of a junior, Wally Bridwell. Bridwell, says Cheek, handles the team real well. Another soph, Ralph Brandewiede, is the team's top passer. He's good size for a signal-called—6-3, 210 pounds.

Frederick and the left end, Henry Newton, are the top passing targets.

University Receives $7,500 Grant For Enlargement Of Kenan Stadium

A gift of $750,000 from William Rand Kenan Jr., scientist and benefactor, has been earmarked for an expansion and beautification of the picturesque stadium here which bears his name.

Work on the project, which will eliminate temporary stands and replace them with 16,000 permanent concrete seats, will begin immediately after the final home game this fall, said Athletic Director Chuck Erickson.

"By eliminating the temporary stands we will be able to enhance the beauty of a stadium which is recognized now as one of the most beautiful in the world," said Mr. Erickson. When the project is completed, permanent seats will number 40,000.

The stadium will be tiered on both north and south sides, allowing several thousand seats to be under cover of the top deck. Beneath the new structure will be comfortable rest room facilities, concession stands, office space and a large area for general use.

Kenan Stadium was originally constructed in 1926 as a memorial to Mr. Kenan's parents, William R. Kenan and Mary Hargrave. The project was completed in 1927 and was dedicated at the Carolina-Virginia game in November of that year.

The seating capacity at that time was 24,000 and the cost of the structure was $375,000. Mr. Kenan also directed building of the Kenan Fieldhouse in the east end of the aena at a cost of $28,000.

The stadium has been a favorite project of Mr. Kenan through the years. It was his gift sometime later that enabled portable seats to be installed in the end zones and to provide an upper deck above the permanent stands. Total capacity reached approximately 44,000.

In 1949, a modern press box providing space for newsmen, photographers, and radio and TV—and a guest box on the opposite side of the field for 300 guests — were constructed on orders from Mr. Kenan. The Fieldhouse was improved at a cost of 465,000.

"Mr. Kenan's latest gift will enable us to provide permanent seats for our expanding student body, faculty and alumni," said Mr. Erickson. "When Kenan Stadium was put into use some 35 years ago, the student body was about 2,400. Today it is almost 10,000."

Mr. Kenan, who now lives in Lockport, N. Y., was born in North Carolina in 1873. He was a graduate of the University, class of 1894. In 1944, his alma mater awarded him the honorary degree of LL.D.

Mr. Kenan's love for the University and particularly for his interest in football date to his boyhood. He was an outstanding player in his student days at Chapel Hill and won letters as a halfback.

A vigorous and active person, Mr. Kenan's gifts to the University have been many. He and his family set up the Kenan Professorship fund, which supplements salaries of distinguished professors.

When Kenan Stadium was originally built, it was considered something of an outpost from the campus. Today, with the building program at Chapel Hill mushrooming, the handsome edifice is becoming closer and closer to the heart of the campus. Since Mr. Kenan's heart has always been in Chapel Hill, this should be most pleasing to him.

Willard: Top Rusher

Ken Willard, the spohomore fullback from whom big things were en Willard, the sophomore fullexpected this year, has really come into his own as UNC's chief ball carrier.

The 6-2, 216-pounder from Richmond, Va., has carried the ball on 42 of UNC's rushing plays and has netted 155 yards, a 3.7 average.

Ken, who turned down a bonus to play baseball for the Boston Red Sox, has been thrown for a loss only one time this year—for one yard.

And it was his first kickoff return of the year that brought the loudest pro-Willard cheers yet in Kenan Stadium. The bruising soph returned one 83 yards for a touchdown against South Carolina Saturday. He's also credited one of five Tar Heel pass interceptions which he returned for seven yards.

On the other end of the pass, Junior Edge is doing his share. He has completed 51 of 82 passes and yielded only three interceptions. His 51 completions have netted him 64 yards. Four Edge tosses went for touchdowns.

Edge and Lacey share the team scoring honors with 18 points. Edge has scored nine points on a TD and three extra points, while Ward Marslender has the other six points on a TD.

Intramurals Feature Upsets

By STUART BALL

Upsets marred the status quo in Monday's Intramural Tag Football game as the Dormitory Division playoffs got underway. In three of the four games the underdog teams came up to slap the favorites in the face and eliminate them from contention.

In the biggest upset of the day, unbeaten-unscored on Parker was stopped dead in their tracks by an aroused Joyner team. Earl Moore scored twice for Joyner and Tom Wright once in the 19-0 victory. The contest evened both teams' marks at 3-1, but most importantly kept Joyner alive in the playoffs.

Still another undefeated team bit the dust as a previously unheralded Aycock team topped the Air Force Navigators in a close one, 8-7. The Air Force, which has specialized in winning close ones all year, couldn't pull this one out as the Aardvarks played a heads-up game and finally won in an overtime on total yardage. Butch McCall scored for Aycock and Tommy Walker scored the Air Force's TD.

In a game that matched a superior record against a superior offense, the offense reigned supreme. The Old East Atlantics and their highly touted offense whipped unbeaten Avery, 14-6. Dave Toton tallied twice for Old East and Bob Newman scored Avery's only touchdown.

The only favorite to win was unstoppable Manly as they crushed their fourth straight opponent by walloping the Navy Pilots, 52-0. Both Jim Clark and Bob Johnson scored twice as the red-hot Riverrats, under the direction of quarterback Gale Edison, ran their season scoring record to 174 points.

In other games the Alexander Playboys, Craige Crusaders, and Mangum Mavericks all won by default over the Teague Tots, Graham Crackers and Ehringhaus Edsels, respectively.

Only two games were played in the Fraternity White division with Delta Sigma edging Beta, 7-6, and TEP topping Phi Kappa Sigma, 6-0.

This afternoon at 4 o'clock the intramural track meet gets underway with over 40 teams and more than 800 participants. The meet will last two days and awards will be presented to both individuals and teams tomorrow following the finals.

All three divisions—Dorm, Fraternity, and Graduate will be competing for points in the over-all point standings. Absolutely no substitutions or late entries will be accepted because of the number of contestants entered.

Frosh Booters Beat Duke On Murphy's Overtime Goal

The Blue Imps scored once in the third quarter and added another in the fourth, making it 2-2. Then Penn Szittya followed up his ow nshot and scored to give UNC the lead again. The boys from Durham pleased the small Duke crowd by tieing the score again, but the Tar Babies went on to win in the two five-minute overtimes.

The loss was the first in three games for Duke. Coach Bob DeVoogt's men meet Appalachian next in Boone on November 2.

Shiner Shines In ACC

By CURRIE KIRKPATRICK

ACC figures released yesterday from Greensboro indicate Shiner has piled up 893 total yards in 141 plays for an average of 6.3 yards a crack. This is a wide 249-yard lead over his nearest competitor, Carolina's Junior Edge.

Shiner was magnificent in Maryland's 28-24 defeat at Miami last Saturday. The blond pitcher completed 15 of 21 passes for 173 yards in losing a passing duel to Miami's George Mira.

This performance boosted Shiner's passing credentials to 70 completions in 105 attempts for 860 yards. Edge is second with 51-82 for 604 yards.

Dan Reeves, the young South Carolina sophomore, is third in the passing derby. Reeves has thrown 70 times with 33 being complete for 401 yards. He also maintains third place in total offensive distance with 568 yards.

In the rushing department, the Gamecocks' Billy Gambrell is number one. The fleet Gambrell picked up 81 yards here Saturday to bring his season's total to 350 yards in 51 tries.

Carolina's Ken Willard coming off his finest performance is eighth this week, having rushed 42 times for 155 yards. This is an average of 3.7.

The team statistics after five games are fairly well-balanced. Maryland leads in total offense and passing offense, while South Carolina maintains the margin in the rushing department.

In total offense Maryland shows an average of 333.8 yards a game with Duke next at 303. The Terrapins lead the passing parade by better than 50 yards a contest over second place North Carolina. The margin is 18.6 to 132. South Carolina's rushing total is 197.6 yards while Duke is also second here with 174.6.

Virginia, surprisingly, has played the best defense in the ACC so far. The Cavaliers total defensive yield is 222.8 yards so far, a slim two-yard margin over second-place Maryland.

Maryland is the leader in rushing defense, however. The Terps have given up 12.2 yards a game on the ground. Virginia is second with a 116.3 average-per-game mark.

Wake Forest, winless in five games, nevertheless is the league pass defense leader. The Deacons having given up only 99.4 yards per game through the air. Virginia is again second at 106.5.

Showdown Seems Possible Between Opposing Ships

Di-Phi Passes Resolution To Blockade Cuba

The Di-Phi Tuesday night passed, by a 17-4 vote, a bill resolving that "the Organization of American States apply direct military action against Cuba in order to preserve the peace and security of the American Continents.

Roger Foushee, temporary critic of the society, introduced the resolution and said that he had prepared the bill two weeks ago "without premonition of its present significance."

The three hour debate reflected a strong general interest in the subject as well as a wide variety of opinion.

Representative Wright Doyle advocated an invasion of Cuba saying, "If we use only a blockade, we will not be able to topple the regime. If we invade Cuba, the Communists can do nothing but protest. Nuclear war would end their hopes for world domination."

Mike Putzel, self-acknowledged pacifist, declared that the Soviet missiles in Cuba pose no greater threat than those in Siberia. He denounced American foreign policy as a negatively anti-communist instead of pro-freedom. He added, "By supporting the tyrannical Batista regime, the United States has to take a part of the blame for the present situation in Cuba."

Contradicting Putzel's statement, representative Foushee remarked, "If Hitler had been stopped when he moved into Austria, there would have been no World War II; if the communists are stopped now, there may be no World War III."

Joe McDonald, a psychology major, expressed his dismay at the Cuban blockade. "A blockade constitutes, under international law, an act of war. I think that most of the world can not visualize the tremendous physical, social and economic aspects of nuclear war . . . to avoid war should be our ultimate goal," he said.

In "chicken" Putzel said, "Two children in cars drive, at full speed, directly towards each other. Whoever swerves aside first is the "chicken." Putzel denounced the immaturity of this method for settling problems.

Re-interpreting the anology, representative Nat Dean emphasized that whether we like it or not, we must play "chicken" with the Russians. He added, "We have three alternatives—To back up, to run off the road or to swerve into the Russian's lane. We must make a stand."

Chanin Announces UP Appointments

Mike Chanin, chairman of the University Party, yesterday announced the following appointments to the Student Legislature. In the Town Women's District: Johnsye Massenburg, Monett Powers and Gayle Ragland; Dorm Women I Nancy Heath, Dorm Women II Sue Russell, Dorm Men I Larry McDevitt, Dorm Men II Phil Coleman, and Dorm Men VI Dick Shins.

These seats were formerly held by UP members but were resigned to the University Party.

Chanin asks all new legislature to come to the UP party caucus Thursday night, at 6:30 in the Grail Room of Graham Memorial.

Students Voice Mixed Emotions On Blockade

By United Press International

Students on several American college campuses have demonstrated against the nation's Cuban policy. But some of the groups encountered opposition from collegians who approve of the quarantine.

Some University of Wisconsin students passed out handbills Tuesday which called President Kennedy's action against Cuba a "bellicose, unilateral act."

The Wisconsin students said they were from two organizations — the Socialist Club and Students for Peace and Disarmament.

Students at Michigan's Wayne State University joined other demonstrators at Detroit in carrying signs that said, "Hands off Cuba." and "There are alternatives to war." They said they were members of the Student Peace Union, Committee for Sane Nuclear Policy and the Women's International League for Peace and Freedom.

But their picketing attracted other students, also from Wayne State, who carried signs that said, "JFK we're with you" and "To hell with Fidel." Some members of the Young Democratic Club and others said they were Young Republicans.

About 75 students from Antioch College, Yellow Springs, Ohio, picketed the Ohio statehouse Tuesday night protesting the quarantine. They said they were from the Student Peace Union.

Members of the peace union at the University of Minnesota said they would stage a rally against the quarantine. But a campus Republican group planned to picket the rally.

At Wesleyan University, Middletown, Conn., an association for disarmament, which includes faculty members and townsfolk, planned a "vigil for peace" beginning Friday.

Immediately after the President's Monday night speech 1,000 students from the University of Connecticut staged a "March on Cuba" demonstration. They lit bonfires and shouted, "Viva la Kennedy."

About 1,000 students and residents at Tallahasse, Fla., joined in a demonstration Tuesday night at the main gate of Florida State University. They chanted "To hell with Fidel."

DeLung Says NSA Report Available

"The first comprehensive report of this school's participation in the N.S.A.'s National Student Congress is now available for all students," announced Harry DeLung, National Student Association Coordinator yesterday.

DeLung said that the report would be submitted to the Student Legislators tonight, and then made available for all students. The 25 page booklet has contributions from the eight students who attended the Congress at Student Government expense.

The introduction to the report, edited by DeLung, explains that the purpose is to justify the expense and to stimulate student interest in the activities of the Congress. It includes a list of the resolutions passed by the delegates which deal with such topics as integration, nuclear testing, communism, and student disciplinary methods.

In the reports submitted by individual delegates, there was a universal feeling that the Congress was extremely democratic in its procedure. Both conservatives and liberals also praised the "political awareness" demonstrated by those present. All indicated that they favored continued UNC membership in N.S.A.

Inman Allen, president of Student Government, called the Congress "an enlightening experience with results I have found applicable on the university campus." However, Allen stressed that the value of the Congress would differ depending on the individual, and the type of campus he was from.

Vice President Mike Lawler's report emphasized the "excellence" of the leadership in the association. He dealt primarily with specific aspects of the Congress, applying favorable and unfavorable criticism.

Mac Armstrong, who counts himself in the "conservative minority" which attended the Congress, cited the influence of political "pressure groups" who "would like for the Congress to become a mouthpiece for their partisan platforms." He criticized the conservative factions as "not as well organized or as well supplied with information" as the liberals.

Jim Clotfelter, who attended for the DTH, complained that the procedure was becoming "more anarchistic than merely democratic." Clotfelter cited Carolina's "traditional prominent role at the Congress."

Personal reports are also published in the booklet from Bill Harriss, Hank Patterson, Arthur Hays, and Harry DeLung. Each delegate's voting record and expenses are listed.

After the reports are distributed in Student Legislature tonight, they will be available in the Student Government Offices.

Hays Bill Won't Be Considered

A bill allowing the student body to define Student Legislature's power to pass resolutions will not be considered by the body tonight.

The bill, introduced last week by Arthur Hays (SP), was held in the ways and means committee yesterday, which means that it cannot be acted on by the legislature.

A constitutional amendment was called for in Hays' bill which would limit legislative resolutions to matters that "directly affect the student body and other such issues as substantially affect the American student in his role."

UP Nominates Shaffer For Junior Prexy

Approximately 400 students attended the meeting as the UP nominated candidates for all positions at stake in the November 6 campus election.

Johnson, in gaining the frosh presidential nod, defeated Neil Thomas and Chuck Barton.

Dusty Anderson took the nomination for class secretary by defeating Dianne Davidson. Paul Jansen defeated Mal Dunlevie by seven votes in a runoff contest for treasurer. Earlier they had ousted candidates Buddy Cooper and Burt Marshall. Katherine Jones was nominated by acclamation for Freshman Social Chairman.

In the sophomore nominations, Merrill, Johnsye Massenburg and Dee Johnson were selected by acclamation for the positions of President, Secretary, and Social Chairman. Pud Hassell defeated William Kirkland for Vice-President and John Schultz won over Buddy Siegal in a runoff for sophomore Treasurer.

Shaffer was nominated by acclamation for junior class president. Other candidates selected were Watts Carr for Vice-President; Pam Rudy for Secretary; Gerry Goode for Treasurer and John Haley for Social Chairman.

Carr defeated both Ivars Lama and Mickey Blackweli in the Vice-Presidential race while Miss Rudy defeated Monett Powers to gain the Secretary spot. Goode won in a runoff over Eddie Kanal, who together had beaten Charlie Brown for Treasurer. Miss Haley took the Social Chairmanship over Missy Westmore.

Mike Chanin, UP chairman reported yesterday that, "This year the University Party presents one of the strongest slates ever. There are several reasons for this—the main one being the intense competition for UP endorsement as shown by the five runoff contests." Chanin added, "We have nominated candidates who have proven themselves to be leaders, who represent every aspect of campus life, who have definite plans for their classes and who will carry them out. We are confident of their ability to win office and are behind them one hundred per cent."

Thant Appeals To Khrushchev To Stop Arms

From DTH Wire Reports

UNITED NATIONS, N. Y.—Acting Secretary General Thant Wednesday night appealed to Soviet Premier Nikita Khrushchev to stop shipping arms to Cuba. At the same time he asked President Kennedy to suspend the U. S. naval blockade of Fidel Castro's island.

Thant appealed to the two leaders for a two to three week moratorium on any further moves in the Cuban crisis that arose from Soviet shipment of missiles and other arms to the island.

Thant said he was making himself available for whatever services he could perform.

Ships

At DTH press time of 10 last night, some of the 25 Communist ships headed toward U. S. forces blockading Cuba were steaming toward a possible clash with U. S. warships. Other Communist ships apparently changed course, the government announced in Washington.

The Defense Department made the announcement in one of the most cryptic statements of the Cuban crisis. It also said that American blockading forces had not yet been forced to order any of the vessels to halt.

The announcement from Washington came simultaneous with Secretary General Thant's simultaneous messages to President Kennedy and Premier Khrushchev. Kennedy has replied to the appeal.

In his message Thant said he believed it would contribute to a peaceful solution "if construction and development of major military facilities and installments in Cuba could be suspended during the period of negotiations.

"I feel that on the basis of discussion, some common ground may be found through which a way might be traced out of the present impasse," Thant said.

"I now make a most solemn appeal to the parties concerned to enter into negotiations immediately, even this night, if possible, irrespective of any other procedures which may be available or which could be invoked."

Colleges

Across the nation, there was a flurry of campus demonstrations by left-wing and peace groups who protested that the blockade was unnecessarily warlike and dangerous.

Bierck, Dawson Join Panel For Debate Tonight

Professors Harold A. Bierck and Raymond H. Dawson will participate in the Carolina Forum's panel discussion on Cuba tonight at 7:30 in Carroll Hall, Forum Chairman Henry Mayer announced yesterday.

Dr. Bierck is a specialist in Latin American history, and Dr. Lawson, assistant professor of Political Science, is an expert in matters of national security and defense policy.

Allard K. Lowenstein of N. C. State College, whose field of interest is international law and politics, and Charles Parrish, UNC graduate student in Latin American studies, are the other panelists.

Prof. Walter Spearman of the School of Journalism will moderate the discussion, which will explore both the President's policy and its possible consequences.

Following the informal panel discussion, the floor will be open for additional questions and comments.

Did President Do The Right Thing? –88% Reply Yes

Students at UNC seem to be nearly unanimous in their belief that the Cuban situation has come to a point where the President had no other choice than to blockade Cuba.

The Tar Heel sent reporters out on the campus yesterday to see the general reaction of the student body to the President's action.

Of the 100 students interviewed 88 approved of Kennedy's action, three disapproved and nine were undecided. When asked if they thought the President's actions would lead to war, 76 students said "no", five said "yes", and 19 were undecided.

One student who disapproved of the President's actions said "I think a global war will result and that a little island like that isn't worth it." The student asked to remain anonymous.

David Chambers: "I don't feel that the action is strong enough. If the Russians offer resistance, we should retaliate with nuclear weapons (On Russia)."

Dorothy Wilder: "We have waited too long. Now it is a bad position for both sides — and neither side can back down. I also feel that Kennedy was undiplomatic in placing these nations in such a situation. But then, something should have been done a long time ago."

Dale Johnson: "Sugar always draws flies. Kennedy is using some Real-Kill now."

Fred Van Eck: "I'm in full accord with the President's action. I think that he did the right thing by waiting until he had definite proof about Cuba's offensive buildup. The show of power has gained respect for the U. S., especially among the Latin Americans.

Lann Malesky: "The real test will come when we see what Russia will do in retaliation, especially in Berlin, and how we will cope with this retaliatory action."

Mike Gladstein: "The President never made any councilatory gestures toward Castro, such as negotiations. Under the present circumstances he left himself no choice but the use of force.

Curtis Hardy: "Action should have been taken during the Eisenhower administration to safeguard U. S. rights and property. Since nothing was done at that time, Kennedy could not act until sufficient further provocation occured. Because of this delay the U. S. has been forced to take an action which is questionable as far as international law is concerned, but seems to be the only recourse to insure our national security."

Edgar Hoepker, a student from Costa Rica: "I think it had to come to a head. I think action on Cuba should have been taken a long time ago. We (the people of Costa Rica) always felt Cuba should have been dealt with. I think the U. S. should have put all effort behind the Bay of Pigs. They had nothing to lose as they lost face anyhow".

Susan Matuszak: "I think I support Kennedy's position because I think the situation demands it. I think it's about time the U. S. took a firmer stand in international issues."

Robert Angell: "I'm backing Kennedy. I think he just waited too long. If he had supported the Bay of Pigs invasion fully Castro would have been overthrown."

Unidentified girl said only, "I'm scared."

Mr. Kenneth Byerly: "I've been deeply disturbed about Cuba and was pleased when the President took firm action as he did. I think and suspect that we will have less trouble in the long run because of this."

Chris Farran: "I'm very pleased with President Kennedy's firmness. I hope that Latin America, South America, and Europe will give us the support that they haven't in the past."

Gene Hendrix: "I fully agree with the President's decision on Cuba. He's finally shown Krus. that the U. S. means business, and will fight if necessary to preserve freedom."

Herb Youngkin: "I'm glad that Kennedy took a stand on such a vital issue. I hope that the results will not be war—but the 'word' of the U. S. must be upheld at any cost."

Open Trials Amendment Goes Before Legislature Tonight

The proposed constitutional amendment to open honor council trials to reporters will go before the Student Legislature tonight in a changed version which now has the support of both the Men's and Women's Council chairmen.

The new version of the bill, which provides that a defendant "shall have a non-public trial upon his request to the attorney general," was passed favorably out of the legislature's Judicial Committee after two hours of discussion Tuesday afternoon.

Men's Council Chairman Walter Dellinger, who had originally proposed that all council trials be open to reporters automatically, said he felt the changed version would "accomplish essentially the same results without undue embarrassment to the defendant."

Bev Haynes, chairman of the Women's Council, said she would support the new version of the proposal. Miss Haynes and other members of the Women's Council opposed the first proposal on the grounds that the rights of a defendant, particularly in women's Campus Code cases, would not be adequately protected.

Bill Hobbs, DTH Associate Editor and co-sponsor of the bill with Dellinger, said he opposed the new version of the bill. "This leaves the situation right where it has always been. A constitutional amendment should change something, should offer the student body with some significant decision. The bill as it now stands fails to do that."

Hobbs said he would "certainly support" the changed version if the legislature passed in that form, but stated he hoped it would be returned to the original form by the legislature tonight.

Another change in the bill provides that the council chairmen will submit a report to the Tar Heel on the decision of the council for all trials not open to reporters.

The proposal was also changed to place responsibility for keeping the defendant's name secret on the individual reporters at open trials. The reporters would be on their honor under the Honor Code to neither "publish, report or otherwise make known" the names of anyone involved in the trial without written permission.

Judicial Committee Chairman Charlie Cooper explained that this provision would, "not only insure this secrecy quite definitely, but protect the traditional freedom of the Tar Heel from restrictions by the constitution."

Before the Judicial Committee meeting Tuesday, the bill would have opened all Honor Code and Campus Code trials to two reporters from the Daily Tar Heel.

It also set up a three-men board to which students with "strong personal reasons for desiring a non-public trial" could appeal to have a closed trial. The board would have consisted of the student body President, and the chairman and attorney general of whichever council was considering the student's case.

Cuban Blockade: Campus Discussion And 1-A

To the student who is 1-A with his draft board, to the student whose parents live in Washington, to the student who has a Navy friend in the Carribbean . . . the Cuban blockade crisis strikes him personally.

The crisis also leads to very personal reactions. The first "quarantine" announcement generally caused a dulled feeling of confusion — what does this REALLY mean? Is is just another move in the Cold war propaganda battle — or is this something different? How will Russia react —— will Soviet ships try to go through?

The headlines Tuesday morning reinforced an uneasy feeling that this was different, that this was playing for keeps, and a resultant attitude that the President must be supported "in this time of crisis." The desire for national unity went to an unfortunate extreme when UNC students harshly criticized several student government officials for not whole-heartedly endorsing the blockade of Cuba; and when students criticized the Carolina Forum for holding a discussion tonight on Cuba, on the basis that no discussion should be allowed "in this time of crisis."

The uneasy feeling has remained, despite the casual comments heard everywhere that the Soviets will "back down" — perhaps this is heard so often because we cannot conceive of what would happen if Russia didn't "back down."

Yesterday afternoon the crisis became more acute: Russian ships heading for Cuba, U. S. troops sent to Florida, propaganda statements on both sides, frantic discussion in the United Nations. . . . The feared incident, when a Russian ship going to Cuba is stopped by an American ship has not happened yet (as of 7 p.m. Wednesday).

* * *

As the Security Council argues the issues, as means of compromise are attempted, as th OAS coordinates its proposed action against Cuba . . . there are still questions to be asked of himself by every American.

Is a naval quarantine legal in international waters — and is it the best way to deal with the Cuban situation?

How far will the Latin American nations follow the U. S. lead and what will happen if and when they refuse to go along with Uncle Sam?

Can the United States morally defend their possession of bases ringing the Soviet Union, and simultaneously (as Ambassador Stevenson attempted with little success) argue that Cuba has no right to set up missile bases?

And how far are the American people really prepared to go to crush Communism in Cuba?

* * *

These are questions which, it seems, should be discussed and answered, even in this tense and dangerous time. There is no time short of outright war when discussion is out of place in a democratic country.

The President has acted strongly to curb a menace — the menace of Communist missile bases in Cuba. We think he has acted correctly — we fervantly hope so.

We hope United States action always will allow the Soviets some "out" — so they can retreat from a dangerous position and yet save face.

We hope the president will continue in his resolve to keep the hemispheric peace, together with the Latin American nations — always remaining open to negotiations on those issues which are negotiable, within or without the United Nations.

And we hope the American people will never fear to dissent, to question their government at all times, in hopes of retaining peace in the Americas and the world. (JC)

Future Alumni

The erection of new buildings on any campus is, indeed, a good sign. It is a sign of progress, progress in numbers, and, hopefully, progress in the educational enterprise.

With the swelling enrollments, construction of more class-room buildings is an absolute necessity if the University is going to do its share in the higher education of the state. Thus, the continuing construction of buildings on this campus, an event too often merely taken for granted by students, should be cause for some immediate, if not lengthy, reflection on the part of everyone now attending classes in these buildings.

There are numerous old saws about contributing alumni, but this continues to be if not absolutely necessary then at least an essential means to furthering the hopes and aspirations of present and future students. Trite as it may seem, we too often as undergraduates overlook the fact that progress requires backing, not the least of which is financial backing — or more colloquially put — money.

The University continues to gratefully receive gifts from the Kenans and the Moreheads, but this alone is not enough; the burden of backing continual advancement in all areas of University undertakings should willingly be borne upon the shoulders of all who have been fortunate enough to receive education at UNC.

And it is now — now as undergraduate students benefiting from the gifts of others—that we should pause, look around and understand why we should do "our part" after graduation. (CW)

N. C.'s Board Of Higher Education— A Stormy History And A Few Gains

(Eds' Note: This is the second installment of an article on higher education in North Carolina. The first article dealt with the formation of the Board of Higher Education)

By CHESTER DAVIS
In The Winston-Salem Journal and Sentinel

SETTING THE BATTLE STAGE

This set the stage for the specific clashes that were to follow. For example:

Late in 1957 State College requested permission to build 500 housing units for married students, The board cut this request to 300. This triggered an outcry. Officials of the Greater University complained that while the board conceivably has an obligation to decide the policy question of whether a state-supported institution should provide housing for married students the board had no business deciding how many such units were required. That decision, men like Bill Friday contended, properly belonged to the trustees of the Greater University.

Some time later Eastern Carolina College proposed to establish a four-year nursing school. The board vetoed this request, pointing out that the state already had one such school and that it was connected with a four-year medical school. Again there were cries of "excessive interference." Eastern Carolina went over the head of the board, taking its case to the General Assembly. The college, as politically potent as it is ambitious, won in this showroom. Thereafter, any time either ECC or the Greater University had a dispute with the board they had only to appeal their case to the legislature to win more than the board had originally agreed to give them. The university, for example, obtained a boost in faculty salary scales in this fashion.

When, late in 1957, the board sought to send surveying teams onto the campuses of the Greater University to obtain information on physical facilities and the use of those facilities, the university refused them admission. Objecting to the competence of the people doing the survey and saying that the presence of outside investigators would create problems, the university said it would gather the desired information itself and give it to the board. This it did.

Throughout disputes like these you heard the same repeated theme: That the board was so engaged in regulating details that it was not filling its function of creating a system of higher education in North Carolina, "Excessive interference" with internal problems became a sore point on the campuses of the Greater University.

President Friday and others felt that the board created another obstacle between the university and the General Assembly. In January, 1958, William Aycock, chancellor of the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill, said:

"The executive head of this institution is in the middle. He is the narrow neck in an administrative hour-glass. One bulb consists of internal administration and the other bulb is superstructure. For the past few years the sands of administrative authority have been flowing from the internal bulb into the bulb of the superstructure."

One month later W. C. Harris Jr. of Wake County, reflecting a common feeling among members of the university's 100 member board of trustees, said, "The university is slipping away from us . . . We have reached the point where we either don't need our board of trustees or we don't need the Board of Higher Education."

ABOLITION IS ADVOCATED

The faculty of the Greater University shared this view. In February, 1958, a petition asking for the abolition of the Board of Higher Education was circulated on the Woman's College campus. In May of that year a university committee, headed by Henry Brandis, dean of the Law School at Chapel Hill, issued a statement criticizing the board for its interference in university affairs. Such interference, the committee said, "is direct and ultimately can be devastating."

By this point two facts were clear: first, that the presidents of the larger state-supported schools felt that the board was abusing is regulatory functions and ignoring its function as an advisor and as an advocate and, second, that this fundamental clash was aggravated by the personality of Dr. James Harris Purks, the executive director of the Board of Higher Education.

Dr. Purks, who has since retired and has been replaced by Dr. William Archie, was an educator in the classic arts and sciences sense. He took a dim view of using the state's colleges and university as places for vocational-type training. In advocating this iew he sailed on a collision course with men like Dr. John Messick —and later Dr. Leo Jenkins—of East Carolina College. To these men Purks was just one more "aca-damn-ician."

Moreover, Harris Purks was unskilled in the art of political diplomacy. Brilliant and knowledgeable, he lacked the ability to sell himself and his program to the institutions, to the legislators or to the people. To ag gravate matters, he possessed a somewhat brusque talent for bruising what, perhaps, were too easily offended sensibilities.

By 1958 the uproar had reached a point where Governor Luther Hodges felt compelled to intervene. He asked a committee of University of North Carolina trustees, headed by Tom Pearsall of Rocky Mount, to sit down with the Board of Higher Education and "work out the differences."

The upshot of these sessions was less of a compromise than it was a case of trimming the wings of the board. The trustees felt that the board was overemphasizing its regulatory functions and that, to correct 'his, those functions should be clipped.

The clipping was done by the 1959 General Assembly. That term of the legislatiure:

Re-wrote the budgetary authority of the board with the intent of making this function more advisory and less regulatory.

Limited the board's authority to "prescribe uniform practices and policies" to one of prescribing "uniform statistical reporting practices and policies."

Specially gave the individual institutions the right of appeal to the General Assembly in cases where the board sought to make an institution dscontinue an existing function or activity.

By new wording added to the law, insisted that the board meet its objectives through "the cooperation of all the institutions of higher education . . . each operating under the direction of its own board of trustees in performance of the functions assigned to it."

This wing clipping—and it was designed to be precisely that—closed out the first act in the story of North Carolina's Board of Higher Education. It did not, however—at least not in the minds of men like Leo Jenkins and Bill Friday—settle the fundamental question.

If it was the intention of the 1959 General Assembly to strip the board of its regulatory functions—and, according to men like Senator John Jordan of Wake County, this was the intention—the actual changes made in the law did not do the job.

For example, the 1955 act contained these words: "The board shall make for the development of a system of higher education and shall have the power to require such institutions to conform to such plans."

Those words were dropped from the 1959 act. But they were replaced by words almost as authoritative. They were, "All institutions included in the State System of Higher Education shall conform to the educational functions and activities assigned to them respectively:"

In short, the 1959 amendments did not settle the question of whether the Board of Higher education was to be a regulatory-advisor agency or whether, instead, it was to be essentially an advisory advocate with a minimum of regulatory authority.

The first five years of existence for North Carolina's State Board of Higher Education were stormy.

This agency, created in 1955 to plan and promote the development of a system of higher education in North Carolina at a time of enormous expansion, was intended to bring order in what, prior to 1955, was a disorderly situation; a situation marked by competition among the state-supported institutions, by duplications in the programs in those institutions and by a marked lack of any overall planning to meet the crisis—a crisis born of the postwar "baby - boom" — then sweeping down on the state's colleges and university with the force and inevitability of a tidal wave.

By 1961 two facts were clear:

First, the Board of Higher Education, despite mounting friction and despite a wing-clipping administered by the 1959 Legislature, had accomplishments. These accomplishments included:

A Community College Act, passed by the 1957 General Assembly, under which five two-year colleges have been established.

A series of laws under which nine of the 12 state-supported senior colleges were assigned specific functions. This put a curb on the somewhat exuberant ambitions of institutions like East Carolina College.

Undertook a long-range program designed to beef up the state-supported schools (both by expansion and by more efficient use of existing facilities) so that they would be better prepared to meet the fast-rising wave of scholars headed their way.

One part of this expansion was a recommended $90 million capital construction program. A part of this program was achieved in 1959. A second part, turned down by the public in 1961, remains to be realized.

Between 1955 and 1961, the board successfully increased salary scales in the state's colleges and universities, improved the libraries in those schools, established a state-financed scholarship program, experimented in new teaching techniques (closed circuit television, for example) and all in all, contributed to the betterment of higher education in North Carolina.

ACHIEVEMENTS INADEQUATE

But—and this is the second point — these accomplishments, and they should not be minimized, did not add up to a system of higher education that was anything like capable of meeting the crisis in the colleges that had become a reality by 1961.

Less than half the children who entered North Carolina's public schools in 1949 graduated from high school in 1961.

As a result, in 1961 less than 27 per cent of this state's college-age children actually were in college. The national average then was 42 per cent.

But even with this sorry record of preparation for college, North Carolina's colleges and universities were being inundated by a flood of youngsters seeking an advanced education. In 1961 the number of youngsters entering college in North Carolina increased by 18,000. We can expect the same sort of an increase for each of the next five to seven years. The blunt fact is that our state-supported schools — the schools that must assume the greatest part of the burden of this rising wave of students— are not equipped to meet the challenge.

THE COMMUNITY COLLEGES

Members of the Board of Higher Education were aware that this was the situation. They recognized, for example, that much remained to be done in the way of establishing two- year community colleges and, in some instances, of advancing existing community colleges to four-year, senior college status.

Major L. P. McLendon, chairman of the Board of Higher Education, went to Gov. Terry Sanford midway in 1961 to suggest that the governor appoint a citizens commission to study the community college question.

Other people—and the group included Dr. William Friday, president of the Greater University of North Carolina—were inclined to place the blame for conditions in higher education in North Carolina directly on the doorstep of the Board of Higher Education. "After all," they said, "the board was created in 1955 to solve a problem. In 1961 the problem not only remains unsolved but it i more critical now than it ever has been."

Friday and others urged the governor to appoint a commission to study the entire question of higher education in North Carolina and to recommend ways and means for meeting the challenge born of the postwar "baby boom." In essence this was the same general assignment given the Board of Higher Education in 1955.

In September, 1961, Terry Sanford appointed a 25-member Governor's Commission On Education Beyond the High School. Irving Carlyle, Winston-Salem attorney, was named chairman of the new commission. The commission's assignment was "to identify and define the state's needs in higher education . . . and to recommend the most efficient plans and methods for meeting those needs."

One of the jobs—perhaps, in the long run, the central job—was to define the place of the Board of Higher Education, if any, in the state's educational program.

RADICAL CHANGES FAVORED

A number of influential members on the Carlyle Commission —Dr. William Friday, Dr. Leo Jenkins, president of East Carolina College, and John Jordan, senator from Wake County—apparently favored radical changes in the entire operation of the Board of Higher Education from the outset. Their position was given a substantial boost by Dr. Harland Hatcher, president of the University of Michigan.

Dr. Hatcher visited Chapel Hill in January, 1962, and spoke to the members of the Carlyle Commission. In his talk he warmly praised Michigan's Advisory Council of (College) Presidents. This council—entirely advisory and made up of professional educators rather than laymen—had done much, according to Dr. Hatcher, to coordinate higher education in Michigan. (It might be noted that not all Michigan educators are equally enthused over the accomplishments of the council. Some among them say this advisory council of professional educators has done little but add to the taxpayer's burden and dilute the standards of excellence in Michigan's university system.)

Listening to Dr. Hatcher some members of the Carlyle Commission began to nod their heads and say to themselves, "This is precisely the sort of an approach we should have here in North Carolina."

Within a month two subcommittees of the Carlyle Commission came up with a proposal. Stated as kindly as possible, it was a proposal to gut the Board of Higher Education.

Steno To Council 'Wait A Minute'

To the Editors:

(Note all honor council members:)

To quote a recent Daily Tar Heel editorial, "come on fellows, let's be serious." I read that you boys are going to spend $400.00 to buy a steno-machine to record future trials. "This machine is operated by a clerk who speaks into a steno-mask. He identifies each speaker and repeats the exact words by persons at the trial." (See yesterday's Tar Heel for further information.) Picture this scene at the next honor council trial where this $400.00 wonder is being used for the first time.

Presiding Officer: I guess we're ready to begin. Are you ready with that machine?

case is the University versus John Stimson Koznosky. He is charged with entering a girls dorm after hours. How do you plead Koznosky?

Kosnosky: Not guilty! I was in that dorm during visiting hours. I just got lost and couldn't find my way out.

P.O.: We'll have to clear that up later. Our first witness is . . . . .

Steno.: Wait a minute, wait a minute!

P.O.: What's the matter?

Steno.: What did Koznosky say?

P.O.: He pleaded not guilty.

Steno.: (Into the mask) "He pleaded not guilty."

P.O.: Our first witness is Adolph Gruber, Koznosky's roommate. Will you tell the council what Koznosky was doing the last time you saw him on the evening in question.

Gruber: Well, he was walking . . .

Steno.: Just another damn minute! Don't go so fast. I can't talk in shorthand.

Thus I reach the point of the drama. Court reporters are paid good salaries to use this machine and keep records. Are you going to get a trained person to use the machine or will it be somebody who may forget to plug it in? I would suggest buying a good $200.00 tape recorder and have a reporter jot down the names of the speakers. It would be no trouble to add the names to any transcript of the trial, which I presume, is typed up after the trial. A home recorder would give you four hours of recording time if you used both sides of the tape. The $200.00 saved could be turned over to the Daily Tar Heel travel fund which I'm sure is somewhat depleted. Or perhaps given to another worthy organization such as the Red Cross Cancer Research or even the Campus Chest. I would hate to see you boys waste $200.00 of the students money on a project which may or may not prove successful.

Truck Convoy, Rocket Launchers Move In To Defend Florida Keys

KEY WEST, Fla. (UPI)—Troops armed with ground-to-air rocket launchers rolled into position Wednesday in the Florida keys—America's front line of land defense in the Cuban crisis. The first convoy of 26 trucks loaded with spotlights, radar equipment, rocket launchers and other gear reached Key West about 2:19 p.m. EDT.

The trucks, each carrying at least one guard armed with a carbine, proceeded with police escort to the Navy seaplane base to unload material.

The Monroe County road patrol reported that one truck in the convoy plunged into the water and submerged at Saddle Bunch, key, 26 miles northwest of Key West.

The patrol said there were no injuries in the accident but other details were lacking immediately. Troops aboard the truck convoy were unsmiling but a few soldiers waved to groups of curious townsfolk and dozens of photographers that gathered to watch alongside city streets.

Frat Favorites Triumph Easily

By STUART BALL

The undefeateds rolled merrily along in Tuesday's Fraternity Division tag football games to keep ten teams with perfect marks at this late date.

Most impressive of these is SAE which crushed its second straight opponent. The victim this time was Pi Kappa Phi and the score was 44-0. Ned Martin and Keith Stoneman both scored twice, and Scott Trotter and Bob Segrest each scored once for the visitors. In two games SAE has amassed 101 points while holding the opposition scoreless.

Sigma Nu also rates high in the overall standings with 3-0 mark. In Tuesday's contest they blanked AK Psi 37-0 and clinched a playoff birth. Both Warren Price and Calvin Jones scored two TD's in the win and Frank Furr and Bobby Madry added one each.

Lambda Chi Alpha bounced back after a 19-6 loss last week to top APO, 44-0, in a one sided contest. High scorer in the game was John Doyle with three touchdowns to his credit. Cary Olsobrook scored twice for the Chis.

In a 27-0 contest Beta outplayed KA and remained unscored on through its first two games. George Wyman scored twice for the Betas and Steve Wilson and Stan Cocke added a touchdown each.

ATO and ZBT kept their perfect marks intact with wins over the Phi Gams and PiKAs, respectively. In a 23-0 win over Phi Gam, Joe Turner, Steve Simpson and John Canull all joined in the ATO scoring. ZBT built up a 14-0 first half lead and spent the rest of the game protecting it. John Coan scored both ZBT touchdowns and Frank Rosenbaum added a safety.

Fencing Club Seeks Varsity Recognition

By TOM WILLIAMS

As the UNC Fencing Club prepares for the coming season, an old and somewhat stale question reappears, "Should fencing be recognized by the University of North Carolina as a varsity sport?"

Until the question is discussed and approved by the University Athletic Advisory Council, the fencing club cannot receive varsity recognition. The council is made up of three students, three faculty members, and three alumni. A vote of approval by five council members is required before varsity recognition can be given.

Erickson Cites Problems

When the question was presented to Athletic Director Chuck Erickson, he replied, "Because of the numerous problems that would develop if the fencing club should receive varsity recognition, I can't see how the club would benefit from this. If fencing becomes a varsity sport, who is the team going to compete with? There isn't enough fencing interest in the south."

He feels that since none of the colleges in this area have fencing as a varsity sport, the team would have to go to the north for its competition, causing financial difficulties. The team would be required to have competition on the same level within a limited area.

If the club should receive varsity status, there would be strict regulations placed upon it. The fencers would be limited to one years' residence before they could compete; thus, freshman would not be eligible. They would also be required to maintain a high enough scholastic average to qualify for competition.

"It's not that I have anything against fencing," he said, "for I think it is a wonderful sport, but it just doesn't make sense to recognize fencing as a varsity sport at this time."

Pebley Barrow, coach of the fencing club, strongly advocates that fencing should receive varsity recognition. "I feel that the boys deserve recognition for their work and efforts, and that over the years they have shown a record that merits varsity competition."

Budget Is Adequate

Coach Barrow says that the budget set aside each year for the fencing club by the athletic council is adequate, and that attaining varsity recognition would not present a serious financial problem.

At one time N. C. State did offer fencing as a varsity sport, but due to lack of leadership, the sport was dropped.

Coach Barrow, who has been coaching fencing at Carolina since 1950, has recently started fencing clubs in this area. One of his formal pupils is now coaching the fencing club at Duke. Clemson and the Citadel also have clubs. There is a club in Winston-Salem that could move into Wake Forest College.

Concerning the problem of eligibility, he says that fencers usually have high scholastic averages because, "this sport requires the mind as well as the body."

Senior Don Hubbard, last years' team captain is in favor of varsity status because, "We want to be able to compete with better schools like Yale or Harvard. We want to see fencing become more popular in the south."

Rebirth Of Fencing

He emphasized the fact that fencing requires long hours of diligent work. When speaking of the accomplishments that Coach Barrow has made with fencing, Don stated, "Coach Barrow has brought about a rebirth of fencing in this area, and he has done a damn good job of it too!"

Tom Welch, a junior who fences in the saber division, would like fencing to be recognized because, "The club has been here so long and it has always shown up well. I think it would do the same as a varsity sport."

Another fencer who is deeply dedicated to the sport is Jon Weber. Jon, who fences in the epee division, says that, "the University owes at least this much to Coach Barrow to make fencing a varsity sport." In speaking of Coach Barrow, he states, "He is one of the most qualified and most understanding coaches I have ever known."

This year the fencing club plans to fence Johns Hopkins of Baltimore, VMI, Duke, Detroit, & Ohio State. The seaso nwill be climaxed by the national finals at the Air Force Academy in Denver, Colorado, March 30.

Ranson's Runners Top Gamecocks

By LASZLO BIRINYI, JR.

Carolina's cross country team traveled to South Carolina Tuesday to score its fifth straight victory of the season, 23-38. Coach Dale Ranson left his top two runners, Larry Henry and Bob Bennett, at Chapel Hill but the runners still managed to overwhelm the home team.

Jerry Stuver lead the way as he won his first meet of the year. Second and third places went to Smith and Rose of South Carolina but the Carolina runners came back to sweep the next six places. Charley Little, who last week tied Henry for first, finished fourth, Jerry Smith was fifth and Obie Whichard was sixth.

Friday night the entire cross-country team will be guests at a dinner honoring Jim Beatty, the greatest runner in UNC's history. Beatty will fly in from California and will arrive at Raleigh-Durham airport Thursday night. The dinner, which will be held in the Blue Room of Lenoir Hall, will be attended by Governor Terry Sanford.

Fight Promoter Loses $50,000

SAN FRANCISCO (UPI) — Promoter Norman Rothschild lost an estimated $50,000 on Tuesday night's Gene Fullmer-Dick Tiger fight, but said Wednesday he expected to make it back on a rematch.

"I have a contract with both fighters for a return bout on Jan. 19 at either Bozeman, Mont., or Las Vega, Nev.," said Rothschild. "But that doesn't mean it has to be held at either place."

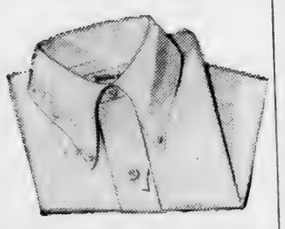
New Frosh Coach Expects Swimmers To Be Tough

Freshman swimming coach Alan Gentry reported yesterday that prospects for a successful season for his Tar Baby swimmers are very good. Gentry noted that he expects to have a winning season although meets with Maryland, Stanton Military Academy and the Westminster School may prove the sternest tests of the team's ability.

Gentry added that seven of the 30 candidates who reported to him last week for pre-season practice and conditioning have made outstanding performances so far. These hot prospects include Fred Lipp (butterfly); Tom Murphy; John Sheldon (freestyle); Tom Bennett (backstroke); Al Schriver (backstroke); Dick Boardman (breaststroke) and Rick Forem (breaststroke).



Gentry, a former swimming coach at Spartanburg (S. C.) High School is in his first season as frosh mentor. His main interest at present is gaining his Masters Degree in Physical Education at UNC.

JFK's Cultural Adviser To Speak At Graduation

A man who believes that "cultural life of a free people must be sought out" and who is the cultural coordinator of the White House will give the commencement address at commencement exercises, June 3, it was announced this week by Chancellor William B. Aycock.

August Heckscher, the first man in the history of the United States to hold a post as the President's special consultant on the arts, believes that all levels of government should more seriously consider art and architecture. He will address students, faculty, trustees and guests on the occasion of the 169th graduation exercises.

Formerly chief editorial writer for the New York Herald Tribune, Heckscher is known as a teacher, philosopher and writer. He is the author of several books and articles and a former instructor in government at Yale University.

Appointment

Heckscher's appointment to the part-time post as the President's consultant on the arts was announced in February of this year. He had previously formulated his views on culture in a chapter entitled "The Quality of American Culture," prepared for the President's Commission on National Goals report in 1960.

In this report, Heckscher stated that cultural life can be "encouraged guided, sustained." He said that the goals of cultural activity must consist of being able to distinguish between real art and faddism and must embrace an awareness and a deep appreciation of what is going on in society.

As President Kennedy's special consultant, Heckscher acts as a cultural affars liaison between the White House and government and private agencies. He also surveys the general relationship between the government and the arts.

Directs Fund

Since 1956, Heckscher has been the director of the Twentieth Century Fund, a research institution that subsidizes public education projects and studies involving economic and soial questions. He is also a member of the International Council of the New York Museum of Modern Art, has served as art commissioner of the city of New York, and is a member of the Council on Foreign Relations, the American Civil Liberties Union, and Phi Beta Kappa.

Following assumption of his duties as cultural coordinator, Heckscher has shown particular interest in the areas of architecture, theater, and music. He believes that the United States can do more to show its appreciation of architecture through public buildings, and compared the construction of U. S. embassies and consulates abroad as examples of what this country and what government can do in architecture. He has said that "if someone suggests elegance in a public building, the matter is hushed up as if it were a scandal."

Commenting upon the relative absence of public buildings in New York for example, Heckscher said, "There's no place here (New York) except a hotel in which to entertain the Queen of England or de Gaulle."

Art Subsidies

Heckscher has said that it is normal for municipalities and states to subsidize the arts and believes that the freedom of the artist is not hampered if the federal government should give aid to an individual artist. He has referred to musicians as being unpaid. He has also met with playwrights to discuss their mutual problems.

Heckscher attended St. Paul's School in Concord, New Hampshire. He received a B.A. degree from Yale University in 1936 and a M.A. degree from Harvard in 1939. He served as an instructor in government at Yale from 1939-41, and as the editor of the Auburn, N. Y. Citizen-Advertiser, 1946-48.

During World War II, he served with the Office of Strategic Services in North Africa. He was decorated with the Chevalier French Legion of Honor.

Heckscher is a trustee of Mt. Holyoke College, the New School for Social Research, International House and the St. Paul's School. His activities include the presidency of the Woodrow Wilson Foundation.

"The Public Happiness," Heckscher's most recent book, was published in August by Atheneum Press. He is also the author of "These Are the Days," 1936; "A Pattern of Politics," 1937; "The Politics of Woodrow Wilson," 1956; and "Diversity of Worlds," with Raymond Aron in 1957.

Heckscher served as a judge on the National Book Committee for the 1962 National Book Awards. He is a governor of the Yale University Press, and a frequent contributor to the "Saturday Review."

An honorary doctor of laws degree was awarded to Heckscher by Fairleigh Dickinson University, Madison, N. J., on June 9.

U.S. And Russia Agree To Cuban Talks With U Thant

Novelist Steinbeck Awarded Nobel Prize For Literature

STOCKHOLM (UPI) — American novelist John Ernst Steinbeck was named winner Thursday of the 1962 Nobel Prize for Literature for his "realistic and imaginative" writings.

Steinbeck, 60, is the sixth American to win the literary award. His prize money is worth $50,043.

The Swedish Academy of Letters hailed Steinbeck for "his at one and the same time realistic and imaginative writings, distinguished as they are by a sympathetic humor and social perception."

In New York, Steinbeck said he was overcome by the honor of winning the award.

First Reaction Disbelief

"I was just sitting down to breakfast and watching television about the Cuban situation when I heard the announcement," he said. "My first reaction was disblief. Then I had my cup of coffee."

At a news conference, Steinbeck said one of the reasons that his latest books do not contain "criticism" and "dissent" that were in his earlier novels is because he is "no longer annoyed with anything" and it is now hard for him to tell "just who the underdog is."

"They've been sort of spread out," he said. "Some of the underdogs are on top now. Thirty years ago, you could tell the underdog by looking at him—he was broke and hungry. Now, he might be on top of his office building."

He said that the major contribution of a writer to his time, however, is criticism, and that the writer must "dissent" to criticize. "My favorite authors were Faulkner and Hemingway," he said. I haven't had a chance to get new favorites."

Steinbeck's books include "Grapes of Wrath", "Mice and Men", and "Tortilla Flat." The 18 Swedish Academy members singled out one of Steinbeck's latest works, "The Winter of Our Discontent," published in 1961.

"Here he has attained the same standard as in 'The Grapes of Wrath', and at the same time has resumed his position as an independent expounder of the truth with an unbiased instinct for what is genuinely American, be it good or ill," they said in the announcement of their decision.

Improvement Committee Eyes Dorm Library

The Dorm Improvements Committee held a preliminary meeting Wednesday night to discuss plans to set up two experimental dorm libraries.

The Committee is presently investigating the cost of basic social science texts to be used as a beginning for the libraries. The experimental libraries will be located in Ehringhaus and Craige.

Ford Rowan, President of Ehringhaus, said that the two dorms were chosen because they contain nearly half of the freshman class and are most distant from the Wilson Library.

Rowan added that he hoped that the committee would consider his proposal of setting up libraries in "six geographically located dormitories around campus."

Rowan said he is confident that the experiment will work, and he hopes that it will be instituted in the near future.

The Dorm Improvements Committee, as it was reorganized by the Student Legislature, has $2,000 to use for programs it feels are necessary.

It consists of the President of the IDC as Chairman, the President of the WRC as vice-chairman, and five members appointed by Bruce Welch, IDC President. The members are appointed for a term lasting until they leave the dormitories.

The Chancellor of the University and the President of the Student Body may appoint non-voting representatives to the committee.

University Civil Defense

Defense Plans Nil

"We're doing all we can without funds," was the comment of Dr. George Spooner last night regarding the local Civil Defense situation.

Spooner is head of the Chapel Hill defense unit, which cannot receive federal funds except through the county unit.

Orange County has no civil defense unit.

In a meeting with local leaders Spooner stressed the need here for warning devices, auxiliary power supplies ,and adequate shelter from fallout. Practically none exists.

University Business Manager Arthur Branch is head of the campus subcommittee for CD. He said the University has no plan at all for action in case of attack.

But he cited studies completed by the University Engineer, M. J. Hakan, and said that a complete survey of possible shelter facilities for the community in campus buildings will soon be finished. A tentative survey indicates only two adequate town buildings and not enough University buildings to accommodate the area.

Stevenson Debates Soviet Ambassador

LATE BULLETIN

The United States and Russia yesterday accepted Acting Secretary Thant's proposal for suspension of Russian arms shipments to Cuba and the lifting of the U. S. quarantine of the island. Thant will begin talks on the crisis this morning with Cuba, Russia, and the U. S.

* * *

UNITED NATIONS, N. Y. (UPI) —The United States challenged Russia Thursday night to deny in the Security Council that the Soviet Union "has placed and is placing medium and intermediate missiles in Cuba."

Dropping diplomatic niceties, U. S. Ambassador Adlai E. Stevenson asked Soviet Deputy Foreign Minister Valerian A. Zorin to give an immediate "yes or no" answer without even waiting for the translation of the challenge into Russian.

The fireworks came after replies to Thant's proposals had been read to the council by Stevenson and Zorin.

Zorin denied to the council that Soviet offensive missiles were in Cuba and berated Kennedy for not having taken up the "falsified" evidence of the United States in talks with Soviet Foreign Minister Andrei Gromyko last week. He said Stevenson, in an earlier speech Thursday, changed his position because he did not have evidence to support it.

Stevenson took the floor immediately after Zorin. Not even using the courtesy of addressing Zorin, who is this month's council president, as "Mr. President," Stevenson said:

"Mr. Zorin, I don't have your talent for obfuscation, distortion, confusing language and double talk. I must confess I am glad I don't.

"Well, let me say something to you, Ambassador Zorin: We do have evidence. It is incontrovertible.

"Let me say that those weapons must be taken out of Cuba!

"You said our position has changed since I spoke the other day because of the pressures of world opinion. Let me say to you, sir, you are wrong again. We have had no pressure from anyone whatsoever. . .

"There has been a change. You, the Soviet Union, sent those weapons to Cuba. You upset the balance of power.

"Let me ask you a simple question," Stevenson said, pointing a finger at Zorin who sat scribbling with his head down.

"Do you, Mr. Zorin, deny that the Soviet Union has placed and is placing medium and intermediate range missiles in Cuba?"

As Zorin appeared to wait for the translation of the remarks into French, Stevenson said to the English-speaking Russian:

"Yes or no: Don't wait for a translation. Yes or no!"

Zorin laughed and then said he was not in the dock of an American court and would not answer immediately.

"Right now, I want to know if I understand you correctly," Stevenson persisted.

"You will receive your answer in due course, don't worry," Zorin retorted.

Stevenson then said he was willing to wait "until hell freezes over."

Georgi Kornienke, counselor to the Soviet Embassy, and Richard Barnet, the Assistant Chief of the Office of Political Research and Analysis of the U. S. Arms Control and Disarmament Agency will speak on "Disarmament, World Peace, and the United Nations." The forum will be moderated by Professor Daniel Pollitt of the UNC Law School, and will take place in Hill Hall tonight p.m.

Sponsors of the forum are various peace study groups, religious groups, and U.N.-affiliated agencies.

Students To Protest Cuba Quarantine

CHICAGO—(UPI) — The Student Union (SPU) Thursday organized a march on the White House Saturday to protest the Cuban blockade and planned weekend rallies in more than a dozen cities around the nation.

But student demonstrations against President Kennedy's quarantine order were meeting increased opposition by students who favored the President's firm stand against the Communist military buildup in the island nation.

Eggs splattered anti - blockade demonstrators at the University of Michigan and University of Minnesota, and on most campuses the majority student opinion appeared to be solidly behind the U. S. policy.

At the Student Peace Union headquarters in Chicago, National Secretary Gail Paradise said more than 1,000 students from eastern colleges planned to demonstrate at the White House Saturday.

The students also will march on the Russian Embassy, she said. The SPU also planned sympathy demonstrations, in New York, Chicago, Boston; Cleveland and Columbus, Ohio; Seattle, Wash.; Berkeley, Calif; Miami, Fla.; Austin and Houston, Tex.; Honolulu, Hawaii; and Rockford, Mount Carroll and Carbondale, Ill.

Police moved in Wednesday night to prevent fighting between pro and anti-blockade demonstrators on the Michigan campus at Ann Arbor.

Students supporting the blockade removed a United Nations flag from a flagpole and tossed eggs at those who opposed U. S. moves in the Cuban crisis. Witnesses said pro-quarantine pickets outnumbered anti-quarantine demonstrators by two to one.

A crowd estimated at 1,000 surged over streets on and around the Marquette University campus in Milwaukee, Wis., Wednesday night shouting support for the Kennedy moves to halt the Red military buildup in Cuba.

At the Harvard campus in Cambridge, Mass., 2,500 students from the Boston area showed up for a blockade protest rally where H. Stuart Hughes, Harvard history professor and independent candidate for the Senate, said an invasion of Cuba "would shatter American prestige around the world." Three-hundred students sent telegrams to Kennedy opposing an invasion.

Poetry, Fiction Contest Initiated By Reflections

By BILL HOBBS

A group of "distinguished, practicing" writers including Paul Green and Reynolds Prices will be the judges for Reflections From Chapel Hill magazine's first fiction and poetry contest.

The magazine, a literary, political and artistic journal published independently here by UNC graduates and students, will release its fourth issue next week.

Editor and Publisher Bob Brown said fiction and poetry submitted for the fourth and fifth issues would be eligible for the contest. The awards will be announced in the fifth issue, to appear later this fall.

Cash awards totalling $100 will be made. The Carolina Coffee Shop (Bryon's) has contributed $50 toward this sum. The other $50 will be contributed by the magazine itself.

Brown said the contest was initiated at the suggestion of the Coffee Shop. He also said any person wishing to contribute to the contest fund could do so, "no matter how small the amount."

Green, a Pulitzer Prize winner, is the author of "The Lost Colony" and serveral other plays. He has also published numerous short stories, poetry, and essays. Currently he is teaching at the University.

Price is the author of a widely acclaimed first novel, "A Long and Happy Life." The novel was reprinted in its entirety by Harper's magazine earlier this year. He is now a faculty member at Duke as a Rhodes Scholar. He has also received the O. Henry Prize for the best story of the year.

Miss Rehder is the author of the recent creative writing text, "A Young Writer At Work," which she uses in her creative writing courses here. She edited a collection of student work, "The Young Writer at Chapel Hill," and has written a novel, "Remembrance Way."

Webber is Editor-in-chief of the UNC Press and was responsible for its Contemporary Poetry series. He originated the much-admired North Carolina Poetry Circuit which brings leading poets into the state to read their work. His own poetry has been published in several mag-

'Welcome,' Jim Beatty, A Dedicated Individual

A living symbol of supreme dedication, these are the words that seem best to describe Jim Beatty, a Carolina alumnus, and one of the greatest distance runners the world has known.

It is indeed an honor and a privilege to welcome him back to this campus. When he was here he participated vigorously in numerous phases of Carolina college life, contributing much to athletics and to other extracurriculars. His services were appreciated by many—his athletic powress was read about by all.

But that which is played up and read about an athlete like Jim Beatty seems too often to focus on the sensational—on the isolated instances of athletic success. We read most often about the "good race" or the world-record time—and not often enough about the great amount of personal sacrifice or discipline which are, so to speak, the "occupational hazards" of post-collegiate athletic endeavors.

We read and talk about Jim's success in particular track meets, but we seldom pause to reflect on the many many hours of work that have brought him that success; we tend to think of the great athlete in terms of glory and newspaper headlines, rather than in terms of work and personal dedication. And this puts the emphasis in the wrong place.

The true strength and character of a Jim Beatty seems not to reside in the fact that he can outrun any other man in the world for two miles, but rather, in the fact that he is a dedicated individual, that he has powerfully strong convictions, and that he is willing, in a time when most of us won't even walk to work in pursuit of the American dollar, to run miles daily in pursuit of personal and physical discipline.

This dedication and pursuit of convictions makes Jim Beatty and other amateur athletes of his stature truly great men. They do not receive monetary remuneration, they do not run in search of headlines; they strive in the pursuit of excellence, they sacrifice because of convictions—and it is this for which we seek to honor Jim Beatty, a living symbol of supreme, successful dedication. (CW)

Are You A Rude Student?

In this age of hustle and disorganization, too many crude and rude acts are becoming a common-place occurrence. That which was shunned by our elders seems to find its place in the younger student-generation as quite the thing to do.

The faults and foilbles of students are, certainly, not without parallels in other segments of American society, but they are none-the-less disconcerting when encountered with overwhelming frequency.

A discussion of rude acts, performed in most cases even unconsciously, would lead one afar, but staying close to home, it is with regret that we note two particular rude acts which seem highly indicative of a thoughtless student body. It is not so much that the student body as a whole commits these blunders, but rather, by toleration we seem to admit their acceptability.

Not the worst, but the first and most common rudeness we would mention is the frequency with which students totally—indeed ignorantly— disregard signs which plead for "No Smoking." These signs are most often posted in new or "renovated" buildings; they seem to be pleading for the preservation of the desks and floors which suffer from the scars of cigarette burns; they seem to ask only one small favor from the "weed fiend" that he refrain — for fifty paltry minutes — from scarring and stinking up the place with his ugly habit. Surely, this is not asking too much. It is not a demand, merely a request— a request that we passively preserve the limited supply of buildings and desks with which we are trying to educate ourselves.

Second, and most disgusting, of the rude-students' habits is the "packing-up" which occurs at the end of a lecture period. In many instances, a professor will inadvertently run his lecture or comments over the established time for a particular class, but this seems, in most cases, to be in attempt to make a point more clearly to the class, in an attempt to help them understand something.

Therefore, we fail to see how the rude student can justify shuffling his feet and books, as he packs up his junk to charge on to his next "educational" encounter. How can he stop taking notes so rapidly? How can he forget the point being made so suddenly?

We can only conclude that if the student's mind can be "turned off" so quickly at the end of the hour, it must never be "turned on" in the first place—which must account for his ignorance. (CW)

Happy Day

The silly observances of "Days" for everything from Strained Grapefruit Juice Day to Organized Ping-Pong Day has gone too far.

The Security Council of the United Nations adjourned for five hours yesterday afternoon, in the midst of the all-important Cuban discussions, to observe U.N. Day.

And how was U.N. Day observed? — the delegates heard a concert given by the Leningrad Philharmonic Orchestra. (JC)

The Other Road

Higher Education Board Was Evaluated Along Mich. Lines

(Eds' Note: This is the third installment in an analysis of the state's Board of Higher Education and its role in developing North Carolina's colleges and Universities.)

By CHESTER DAVIS
In The Winston-Salem Journal and Sentinel

In essence the subcommittees proposed to (1) turn control of the board over to professional educators by increasing the board's membership from nine to 15 and requiring that seven of the 15 be college presidents, and (2) to strip the board of every regulatory function it possessed.

When you recall that the Board of Higher Education originally was intended to be a regulatory-edvisory body with broad powers and, what's more a board made up entirely of laymen with a statewide viewpoint, it is not stretching the facts to described these proposals as disemboweling.

The curious thing is that these proposals made by the subcommittees were supported by Dallas Herring, a member of the Board of Higher Education, they were at least accepted for the moment by Major L. P. McLendon, chairman of the Board of Higher education, and they were approved by Dr. William Archie, executive director of the Board of Higher Education.

The fact these men tolerated and even endorsed what amounted to the gutting of their own operation reflects disenchantment (Dallas Herring), awareness that the board was not meeting the function for which it was created (William Archie), and the fact the doughty Major was sound asleep at the switch.

But not for long.

By May of 1962 Major McLendon was crying, "While I was silent and in this the Major is kinder to himself than the facts justify) they gutted the board."

McLendon's objections to the proposed changes ran along these lines:

The claim that the Board of Higher Education must have regulatory as well as advisory powers if it is to be effective. (This claim is entirely in line with the recommendations of the study commission which recommended the creation of a Board of Higher Education in 1955. It is in line, also with the thinking of the legislature as reflected in the plain wording of the 1955 law establishing the board.)

The argument that college presidents have no more business serving on a board designed to regulate the colleges than the president of the Duke Power Company has serving on the State Utilities Commission.

The claim — a valid one on the facts — that the law which established the board plainly ruled that college presidents and other self-interested p e r s o n s should not serve as members of the board.

The claim—more subject to question but very possibly valid —that these changes would, in effect, place the control of the Board of Higher Education in the hands of the University of North Carolina. Here McLendon argued that the college presidents on the board would tend to support the university's position on all issues since they so badly needed the univerity leadership and political potency in their struggle for increased financial support from the General Assembly.

A QUESTION OF PURPOSE

The essential issue posed by the sub-committees' recommendations was whether the Board of Higher Education was to remain an advisory and a regulatory agency controlled by disinterested laymen or whether, instead, it was to be changed to a purely advisory body dominated by college presidents.

In posing that question, McLendon triggered a great outburst of editorial — and other— wisdom. In the main this opinion tended toward two conclusions: (1) that North Carolina had a real need for some overall board to plan and supervise the development of an education system in a time of vast expansion and expenditures, and (2) that to be effective such a board probably should have regulatory as well as purely advisory functions.

Leo Jenkins and Bill Friday, two of the most politically potent educators in the state, supported the proposed changes. Inasmuch as the Board of Higher Education originally was established, among other things, to protect the university from the ambitions of schools like East Caroline College, the two men made strange bed-fellows. In this instance they were not willing to take on a bitter and probably prolonged fight as a price for sleeping together.

Instead they suggested a compromise. Their compromise proposal was approved by the majority of the Carlyle Commission on July 6, 1962. Under this proposal:

The membership of the Board of Higher Education would be increased from nine to 11 members. Of these seven would be laymen and four would be college presidents. The president of the Greater University of North Carolina would be the only permanent member of the board.

The board's important power to allocate functions to the various institutions would be restored.

The board's budgetary functions would be made more advisory and much less regulatory. The old idea of a line-by-line analysis of each institution's budget was ruled out.

The board's power "to prescribe uniform statistical practices" was watered down to one of collecting, analyzing and publishing statistics on higher education.

Under the existing law the board is "to plan and promote the development of a sound, vigorous, progressive and coordinated system of higher education in North Carolina." In the proposed compromise plan this is changed by deleting the words "and promote."

A TWO-FOLD PROPOSAL

Boiled down to essentials the compromise proposal does two things: (1) it gives laymen a seven-to-four majority control of the Board of Higher Education, and (2) it so re-words the law that the Board of Higher Education is made into more of an advisory than a regulatory body. Even so, the compromise plan permits the board to retain some of its more important regulatory functions.

In approving these proposed changes, the majority of the Carlyle Commission made these points:

First, the Board of Higher Education, as presently set up, has not fully met the purpose for which it was created.

"The chief defect of the Board of Higher Education is that it has not provided the affirmative, creative leadership which higher education needs in this state."

"It has not done the necessary job of formulating state-wide higher education plans and policies which have coherence and perspective in broad trms."

Out Of The Fryin' Pan...

Several times, during the preceding weeks, it has been our great pleasure to be a guest of the Spencer girls and their fine piano. Seldom have we spent more enjoyable evenings, and never have we entertained for a more gracious and responsive group of people.

This gives the lie to the oft repeated maxim that today's college audiences are among the rudest and least appreciative to be found. Indeed, after a too long spate of night of night club engagements around the county, we found the comely residents of Spencer dormitory to be as warm and receptive as any audience we have known.

(Note to those girls from Cobb who asked for equal time: your piano has had the course. If you pressure your dorm mother, she just might have it tuned, repaired or replaced. Try it and see.

It was on a day not wholly unlike this one that we were sitting in Professor Lyman Cotten's course in Modern Poetry—some eight years ago. To the immediate left of us sat a good friend, who when called upon to speak, would deliver his opinions in organ-toned rhetoric.

We turned to him and expressed the opinion that with a voice such as his, he should be in radio or television.

On the subject of courses, one of the most stimulating offered here at at university is Professor Hugh Holman's course in the English Novel. You will have to look long and hard to find a more richly rewarding and deeply satisfying experience than this.

The weight lifting boys keep complaining to us that their sport is being slighted by the powers in charge. They suggest the weights be moved from the dark and chilly cranny of the Tin Can to a more appropriate place — such as a certain unused room in the warm, snug confines of Woollen. State has such a room set aside, as does Wake Forest. How about it, someone?

Special memo to coeds, all ages: The "Supplement on Women" in October's Harper's magazine may shock you or anger you, but it is guaranteed to make you think and examine your values anew in this constantly changing society, where pressure sems to come from all sides. On Lincoln, Duke, And Cuban Trips

By ARMISTEAD MAUPIN, JR.

MAIL

This one admirer informs us that it was "just like a damned conservative to live 100 years in the past." And, after graciously conceding that many Carolina graduates had been so fortunate as to win posts in the Kennedy administration, the writer concludes that our "conservative propaganda lies won't work."

Well now. We're a bit taken aback by this eloquent assault on our principles. And he's right, of course. We conservatives do live in the past. We cling with a stubborn tenacity to such outmoded documents as the Constitution of the United States and the Declaration of Independence. We live with the illusion that the decentralized government of our forefathers was a desirable and healthy thing. We still look for a solution to the nation's problems in the philosophies of Thomas Jefferson and John Locke, rather than entrusting our futures to the wisdom of Walter Reuther and Harry Golden . . . we're funny that way.

There's no doubt about it, Sam; you made a good point there. Yes sir, a really good point.

TEDDY

William F. Buckley, Jr., editor of NATIONAL REVIEW, contends that "the argument against electing Ted Kennedy to the Senate is not that he is the brother of Jack Kennedy, but that he approves of Jack Kennedy."

FIGURES

Since Wednesday was U.N. Day in N.C. or somehting, we were particularly interested in some State Department figures on the subject. This year the U.N. and its affiliated organizations will spend $502 million. The United States will pay 47% of it.

P.L.

For the first time in a long time we agree with a DTH editor. We are referring to Chuck Wrye's wish that Larry Phelps and other members of the Progressive Labor Club would have a "very, very long" stay in Cuba this Christmas. And this raises the point that the American Legion might not be needed after all. For, if the P.L. keeps up at this rate, it will simply be laughed out of existence.

Letters To The Editors

Talk Shouldn't Be Harangue

Lowenstein: Give Analytic Speech

Never have so many been so happy about so little at UNC. Monday-night Mr. Lowenstein talked about Spain and the Franco regime. Part of his audience was disgusted; part was romantically excited.

Mr. Lowenstein infuriated that part of his audience expecting a rigorous political analysis — as it should be — in the case of Spain — with a thorough desmription of the brutality of the Franco dictatorship, more representative of a demogogic campaign than of the business to which universities are usually dedicated. Then he concluded, for the good of the American and the Spanish people, that American aid to Franco should be stopped, as to enable a more democratic regime to come into power through free elections.

Granted that Franco's regime is a dictatorship supported by force, that the Spanish workers' living conditions are miserable relative to the rest of Europe, and that Franco's era is passing for the betterment of Spanish democracy through its integration into the Common Market. But the fact that Mr. Lowenstein presented an emotional spectacle rather than a political analysis is granted too.

It is pitiful, at a university dedicated to intellect rather than emotion, to hear a 50 minute presentation of Spain's politics engulfed in so much detailed "documentations" of crimes committed by Franco's police and to hear a speaker admit, at the beginning of his speech, that he is emotionally involved in the problem to be analyzed and discussed—scientifically, I suppose. But it is more pitiful to hear an attempted discussion on Spain ignoring the consideration of essential factors of Spanish political life without which conclusions will necessarily lead to falsehood, such as, 1) what brought about the Spanish Civil War, 2) political alternatives of Spain at the time, 3) economic alternatives of any kind of regime after the war, and most important 4) to what extent could Spain have been democratized given the anarchy of Spanish institutions and beliefs at the time.

I am sure some people will think I am too petulant and impractical, for matters of disqussion, in asking for so many "unnecessary details" from so far back. Well, it is a matter of opinion whether we should at least try to think analytically or not, and this is also a reason why Ayn Rand hasn't been the only one to preach at Gerrard Hall.

Phelps, Blanchard Remain In Cuba

To the Editors:

I would like very much to be the first contributor to a fund I hope to see established for a great cause on the UNC campus. This fund will be a part of the great GPTCC action otherwise known as the "Get Phelps to Cuba Campaign". I believe the majority of the UNC students would aid this cause and would like to envision Larry Phelps accompanied by the Progressive Labor Club and the New Left roaming around Castro's kingdom.

This campaign will be conducted if Mr. Phelps in consultation with his publicity manager Mr. Gary Blanchard, most noble supporter of free thought, will agree to the following conditions:

1. That Larry take all members of the P.L.C., New Left, and a dozen other useless groups at UNC with him.

2. That Phelps take Gary Blanchard along to supply the great? news story to the CHARLOTTE OBSERVER and take our own outstanding? Jim Clotfelter, more commonly known as (JC), along so the DTH can once again bring on-the-spot publication of distorted news.

3. That Phelps and all his comrades stay in Cuba until I (and all other students who are sick from reading about Phelps) graduate.

Maybe some student who has lots of excess time on his hand could write or go to the State Department and express our desire to see Phelps get permision for his Cuban trip. We could even send pickets to Washington or parade to the South Building and have "A Minute for Phelps" demonstration. Pending survival of the Cuban campaign, one way tickets on extremely slow boats to Red China will be supplied to the Phelps delegation.

Tar Heel Booters Seek Fourth Straight Win

The varsity soccer team will be seeking its fourth consecutive win of the season this afternoon when the Tar Heels host Pfeiffer College in a non-league game at 3 p.m. on Fetzer Field. The varsity has compiled a 2-0 ACC record and a 3-1 overall record to date, with all the victories coming in home contests.

The varsity bowed, 4-0, to a strong Navy team in its opener and has since scored impressive wins over Davidson, 7-3, and N.C. State, 9-1, and a narrow 2-1 decision over Virginia earlier this week.

Center forward Jim Reston heads the list of team scorers. Reston has scored 9 of the team's 18 goals. Jim Talbot and Bill Haywood have two goals apiece while Marty Krumig, Charlie Ferguson, Herman Prakke, Charlie Shelton and Frank Lankford have one goal each.

Brown said the judges had been selected "because they are both distinguished and practicing writers. They are fine examples of what can and has come out of this area in recent years, and we felt this would be a good group to judge young writing from the same area."

"The contest is an attempt to broaden our efforts to stimulate and recognize young writers, particularly from this area," Brown said.

"We want to encourage writers who have never been published before by presenting their work together with that of already recognized authors in the magazine. There is a great deal of young talent here, in the South as a whole, and in the entire country which has no outlet. We are trying to provide an outlet for some of this talent," he said.

The magazine, which is sold in college towns and large cities throughout the country, also publishes articles and art work. Brown said he hoped to be able to offer awards in hese area sin the future.

The publication, started in summer of 1961, has grown in size and distribution with each publication. Brown said the current issue would go on sale here next week.

Smith Unveils Basketballers Tonight In Intrasquad Game

UNC basketball coach Dean Smith is looking forward to the coming season—and he has a number of good reasons for doing so.

At 8:30 tonight in Woollen Gym he will unveil his reasons in the team's first intrasquad game.

One reason is the return of last year's starters and part-time starters Larry Brown, Mike Cooke, Dieter Krause, Charlie Shaffer and Bryan McSweeney.

Another is a fine crop of sophomores. Last season's freshman team was the best in the conference until Billy Cunningham was lost because of scholastic ineligibility. Even after "Billy the Kid" left the team, Ken Rosemond's boys continued to amaze Tar Baby spectators.

Another pair—Yogi Poteet and Bill Galantai—should help improve last year's 8-9 record and fourth place finish in the Atlantic Coast Conference.

Poteet was a backcourt starter two seasons ago, alternating with Larry Brown as All-American York Larese's sidekick. Yogi was scholastically ineligible first semester last year and Smith decided to hold the Hendersonville product out for the full year, giving him two semesters of eligibility this season.

Galantai has never played in a college basketball game, but Smith expects him to help the team. "Bill's attitude is wonderful," said Smith. The second-year coach cited the effort Galantai is making to reach normal playing weight of 215 as an example.

The 6-5 New Yorker, who weighs 228 now, has been swimming and running long distances, in addition to regular basketball practice.

Bill played at Wilmington Junior College two seasons ago and transferred to UNC where he was ineligible last season.

"The prospects are much brighter than last year at this time because of our depth," said Smith. "We're not quite as tall, but we might play as tall. We'll miss Hudock and Walsh, but we'll have better speed."

Jim Hudock and Donnie Walsh—along with Jim Donohue—were lost to the team by graduation. Hudock was the team's top rebounder with 171 in 17 games and followed Brown in the scoring derby with a 14.9 average.

Walsh was third in scoring with a 13.4 average and set a new school record for field goal percentage, hitting .559 per cent of his shots. Walsh is now assisting Ken Rosemond with the frosh team.

Donohue followed Hudock and McSweeney in rebounding. "Huey" rebounded 73 times in 14 games and had a 5.4 scoring average.

He pointed out that the shuffle offense used so effectively last season has many variations—and it is adapted to the type of team Carolina will have. Cunningham, who should be the starting center, can play either back or front court and the shuffle wil enable him to do so.

Three of the top four guard positions are fairly well sewed up. Brown, who averaged 16.5 points a game last year, Poteet, and Cooke, a valuable sixth man in 1961-62, make up the trio.

The fourth guard spot is up for grabs between Peppy Callahan, a senior, Charlie Burns, a senior, and two sophomoress—Bill Brown and Bill Taylor.

McSweeney, who averaged 7.5 and pulled down 84 rebounds, will be out of the lineup during the early part of the season. The 6-4½ junior from Hewlett, N. Y., tore a ligament in his ankle in the first practice session and will be wearing a cast for at least six weeks. It will take him a while to get back into shape, so he will not be ready for most of the December games.

The competition up front is very good, according to Coach Smith. There are seven men, including McSweeney ,who could be starters during the year. Cunningham, Galantai and Respess—all sophs—and holdovers Shaffer, Krause and Art Katz.

The visit amounts to a special birthday present for the 5-5½ 128-pound track star, who since his graduation from Carolina in 1958, has established himself as one of the world's finest distance runners.

Beatty, who is in the insurance business in California, was scheduled to arrive at the Raleigh-Durham airport last night with his wife, Barbara. He will celebrate his 29th birthday on Sunday.

Today has been acclaimed as "Jimmy Beatty Day" and a full slate of activities is scheduled.

This morning, Beatty will speak to several physical education classes. At 4:00 he will stage a short workout on the Fetzer track. At that time, Beatty will display the form that has brought him world marks for the indoor mile (3;58.9) and outdoor two mile (8:29.8) and the U. S. record for the mile (3:56.3).

Beatty has ivited members of the press ,TV and radio to this session and it is expected that he may announce his plans for the future, which could include the 1964 Olympics Games.

Tonight, Beatty will be honored at a banquet program in the Blue Room of Lenoir Hall. Gov. Terry Sanford, chancellor emeritus Robert B. House, track coach Dale Sanford, chancellor emirtus Rob-Erickson are among the scheduled speakers.

Demonstrators March Down Franklin Street

Demonstrators Burn Fidel, Shout Anti-Cuba Protests

By JIM CLOTFELTER
And MIKE PUTZEL

More than five hundred students burned Fidel Castro in effigy Thursday night, then marched down Franklin Street chanting support of President Kennedy's Cuban blockade.

The student schanted "Hold that blockade," "To Hell with Fidel," and "We want Cuba."

The demonstration was organized by five Ruffin dormitory residents: Samuel Eanes, Thomas Dinero, James Clark, Milford "Whitey" Cox, and Charles Coble. They were given police assistance in handling traffic throughout the demonstration.

Dean Long stated yesterday that he did not expect that any disciplinary action would be taken against the students envolved.

Arthur Beaumont, Chief of Campus Police, said, "We had heard rumors the night before and knew that there might be some kind of demonstration. I was on hand the whole time and followed the crowd in my car.

"It was a noisy but orderly crowd of boys, and there was no danger. The Chapel Hill police were very cooperative and directed traffic as the demonstration moved up Franklin St."

The students began gathering in the Upper Quad around 10:30 as a result of telephone calls to all men's dormitories. An effigy of Cuba's Premier Castro was burned and the crowd began to move down Raleigh St. At this time the crowd reached its highest point at more than 500, according to police estimates.

The demonstrators turned left at Franklin St., marched through town, and down Columbia St. to Cameron Ave. Most traffic stopped until they were off the street. Police kept cars from entering from the W. Franklin direction.

There were chants of "Rip 'em up, tear 'em up, give 'em hell, Jack," "Castrate Castro," "Cuba no, Yankee si," and "Go to hell, Fidel, Go to hell!"

Then the demonstration turned onto Cameron Ave. and back into the center of campus.

Part of the crowd moved off toward Cobb with screams of "panty raid," but according to Chief Beaumont, one student got up in front of Lewis dorm and told the students, "We have accomplished our purpose. Now go back to your dorms."

The students had dispersed by 11:30. Most of the demenstators had gone back to their dorms before the "panty raid" talk began.

Several campus policemen followed the demonstrators around, but none made any attempt to disperse the crowd.

Fee Increase Decision Is Up To Vote

Residents of men's dormitories will vote on a referendum, which would increase the current dorm social fee by 75 cents, when they go to the polls on November 6.

"The present fee of 75 cents is inadequate," said Owen Bishop, secretary of the IDC. "This fee was set up in 1949, and 75 cents will not do now what it would do then."

He further stated that most dorms are using the current funds wisely, but that one combo party may completely bankrupt a small dorm. As evidence, Bishop offered statistics showing that eleven men's dorms ended the 1962 spring semester with less than $20 in their social funds, despite limited social programs.

The reduction in the number of three man rooms this year has reduced the potential source of income for most dorms. Dorms that attempt to extend their activities to include newspapers, parade floats, and similar activities are often forced to assess residents to defray expenses.

The IDC proposed the raising of the fee in the belief that $1.50 is an amount more in keeping with current costs, and will allow dorms to offer more and varied activities for their residents.

Bishop indicated that he did not feel that dorm residents should object to the increase, but that they should realize the benefits it could bring. He said that participation is directly related to the quantity and quality of activities offered, citing Alexander's combo parties as excellent examples of this.

"I urge all dorm residents to cast their ballots for this referendum on November 6," Bishop added. "They will be helping themselves by doing so."

Panel Splits Over Need For Blockade

By HARRY LLOYD

The legality, morality, and possible danger of President Kennedy's move to quarantine Cuba was a major point of disagreement among the four members of a panel which discussed the Cuba situation here Thursday night in Carroll Hall.

Two members of the panel expressed the opinion that Kennedy was not justified by calling for the blockade. The other two said that for purposes of national defense and for the well-being of the Americas, Kennedy's unilateral action was his only recourse.

Members of the panel included Dr. Harold Bierck, professor of Latin American History; Dr. Raymond H. Dawson, assistant professor of political science; Al Lowenstein, instructor in social studies at N. C. State, and Charles Parrish, part time instructor and a student of Latin American politics. Professor Walter Spearman was the moderator.

Lowenstein was the most vocal panelist against the blockade. "In international law, there is no way a country can blockade another without a state of war," he said. "However, Cuba is not going to declare a state of war. We took the position without international sanction.

"As a lawyer, I want to feel that my country respects international law. There can be no contention but that this action was a serious breach of international law. The only comment that I have heard to abrogate this action is that 'I know it's wrong, but I'm glad we did it,' a sort of virgin's lament."

Dr. Dawson contended that the President's action was both wise and necessary, although dangerous. The Russian policy over the last two and a half years, since its alliance with Cuba, has been "bullish," he said. "I became very concerned about Khrushchev's comment to Robert Frost that the U. S. is too liberal to fight. The President has met the challenge the only way he could. He did what was necessary.

"There is one major point of contention which must be settled: how can we justify our objections to the Russian buildup of missiles in Cuba when we have bases in the United Kingdom, Spain, and Turkey? There are two answers to this question.

"First is the fact that the Americas are a regional organization, and the Rio Pact pledges the U. S. to defend the hemisphere. There is a unanimity of opinion in the OAS to recognize the threat.

"Second, our bases in Europe were created in a historical situation. After the Sputnik success in 1957, we had to construct these bases to catch up in the space race. But these missiles are becoming obsolete. We have not put our most modern equipment into our European bases," Dawson said.

Dr. Bierck explained that our traditional dealings with Cuba and its closeness to the U. S. colored our thinking about it. "If Cuba were removed to the center of the Atlantic, the situation would not be what it is today," he said. "Why did the President have to do what he did? Their refugees in this country have the best answer. We should do what we do for the Cuban masses."

Parrish called the dealings with Cuba the greatest failure of the Kennedy administration. "The U. S. played Cupid in Castro's romance with the Communists. We have allowed other leaders — Nasser, Nkumrah, and Ben Bella, for example, to follow the same course.

"Today's plight became inevitable when Khrushchev made the mistake of putting missiles in Cuba. The missiles in Cuba are no more dangerous to our security than those in Russian submarines off our coast. If Castro is but a puppet of Moscow, then we should fear him no more than we fear the pilot of a Polaris-type submarine. If Castro is not a puppet, then our policy in dealing with Cuba has been all wrong.

"If we invade Cuba, Castro will send nuclear weapons against us. Castro would not halt at bombing the U. S. if he were attacked." On this point, Dr. Bierck said that he did not agree—that Castro would not actually set off a nuclear war which would inevitably destroy Cuba.

Parrish suggested that action should have been taken through the United Nations.

Dawson defended Kennedy's unilateral action against Lowenstein's protests. An approach of carrying the protest to the UN or OAS would only have tied up the case while more arms poured into Cuba, he said.

Lowenstein predicted that the U. S. will pay dearly for its action in international prestige. "We so often base our protests on international law, but now we are ignoring the law," he said.

Bierck called the reasoning of Lowenstein and Parrish "spacious," saying that because the existence of the U. S. has been challenged, its action can be supported.

Lowenstein said that this country is being unfair in only allowing the Cubans to have defensive arms. "We should give Cuba the right to attack if we give her permission to defend herself," he explained.

Indians Call Emergency; Reds Advance

NEW DELHI (UPI) India proclaimed a state of national emergency Friday as the Chinese Communists pushed deeper into its territory along the 1,000-mile border and threatened an Indian army headquarters controlling an invasion route to the rich plains of Assam.

Indian President Dr. Sarvepalli Radharkrishman's proclamation made because of "external aggression" had the effect of imposing martial law throughout the subcontinent. It was effective immediately although it will not be approved by parliament until that body meets Nov. 8.

The national emergency was proclaimed under the terms of the Defense of India Act which was written by the British when India was part of the empire. It was under that act that Prime Minister Jawaharlal Nehru and his associates were arrested in 1942 and held without trial in World War II.

It permits the government to suspend "fundamental rights." It permits arrests without warrants, imprisonment without trial and far-reaching press censorship. The power extends not only to the central government in Dehli but to the state legislatures.

The government also called on Indians to surrender their jewelry and hoarded gold to pay for India's war effort. It announced a new issue of defense bonds and hinted at stronger economic measures if the public did not cooperate to keep prices down and end hoarding.

The communique announcing the emergency action coincided with the first time India has ever stood up in the United Nations to charge the Chinese Communists with "flagrant, massive and premeditated aggression." But that the same time India stuck to its view it would be better to deal with Peiping as a U.N. member.

The heaviest fighting — which posed the gravest threat yet to India — was in the Towang area of the northeast frontier area near the borders of India, Tibet and Bhutan. A breakthrough there would lay open the rich areas of Assam to possible invasion.

Also, for the first time, there will be an admission charge of fifty cents. Tickets will be on sale at Kemp's, GM, and from any member of the Yack Staff.

In addition to the grand door prize, other door prizes will be awarded, including three toy football players from Ledbetter-Pickard, a shirt from Town and Campus, a madras shirt from Stevens-Shepherd, free passes from the Varsity Theatre, a Chanel No. 5 set from J. Kemp, a flask from The Hub, a wall plaque of the Old Well fom Huggins Hardware, a blouse from the Fireside, and a bottle of champagne from the Ranch House.

An additional attraction will be the master of ceremonies—Kemp B. Nye. The five judges who will select the winning girls with the help of their additional winning helper, are Mrs. Ray Macdonald, Mr. Curtis Albertson, Dr. Stephen P. Baxter of the History Department, and Mr. John Schnorrenberg of the Art Department. The name of the fifth judge could not be obtained at this time.

A full list of the contestants and the organizations sponsoring them will appear in the DTH next week. Ninety girls are expected to participate, twelve of whom will be selected for the Court, and one of whom will be selected as Queen.

Sanford Talk To Highlight Morehead Day

The governor will appear with Chancellor William B. Aycock, Student Body President Inman Allen and Morehead Day chairman Bob Spearman in a 15-minute program honoring "Uncle Mot" on his 92nd birthday. The film will be broadcast on WUNC-TV at 2:15 p.m. on Sunday, Nov. 4.

It will consist of a statement by the Governor, and a panel discussion by Chancellor Aycock, Allen and Spearman on the significance of Mr. Morehead's gifts to the University.

Mr. Morehead will also be honored by a radio program on WUNC-FM on Thursday night. An exhibit has been set up in the Wilson Library with pictures of Mr. Morehead, his late wife and the Morehead scholars.

Mr. Morehead's birthday (Nov. 3) was designated as Morehead Day by the student legislature in 1960 in gratitude for his many gifts to the University. These include the Morehead-Patterson bell tower, the Morehead Planetarium and funds to establish the Morehead Scholarship program.

New Missile Bases Said Being Built

WASHINGTON (UPI) — U.S. blockade forces Friday for the first time boarded and released a Soviet-chartered ship bound for Cuba. At the same time, the White House reported continued rapid construction of missile bases in Cuba, with attempts to camouflage them.

In still a third development in the Cuban crisis, the State Department served notice that "further action" may be taken against the missile bases.

The 7,628-ton freighter Marcula of Lebanese registry, and presumably Panama-owned, was halted in the Atlantic about 500 miles northeast of Havana. It was searched by an armed boarding party and allowed to pass through the U. S. blockade when no prohibited weapons were found.

Cooperates In Search

The freighter, cooperating in the search, was boarded by men from the destroyer Joseph P. Kennedy, Jr., named after the President's dead war hero brother, and the Pierce, which on May 24 picked up astronaut M. Scott Carpenter's space capsule.

After a three hour search, the vessel was cleared to continue toward Havana with its cargo of trucks, truck parts, paper rolls and sulphur. None of these items is considered offensive war material.

Several hours after the successful boarding, the White House pointedly declared that there had been no evidence of any intention on the part of the Russians to heed President Kennedy's demand that missile bases in Cuba be dismantled.

"On the contrary," it said, "the Soviets are rapidly continuing their construction of missile support and launch facilities and serious attempts are under way to camouflage their efforts."

Army Bolsters Forces

White House Press Secretary Pierre Salinger declined to reveal any steps that might be taken against the buildup. But the Army was rolling mighty forces into Key West, Fla., including semi-trailer trucks marked "explosive."

And at the State Department, spokesman Lincoln White drew attention to President Kennedy's Monday night warning that should "offensive military preparations in Cuba continue, thus increasing the threat to the hemisphere, further action will be justified."

White told a news briefing he wanted to emphasize the significance of the President's statement and to cite "the gravity of the situation." All indications pointed to some action soon against the missile sites.

Open Trials Bill Delayed Till Tuesday

An "open trials" bill was postponed by Student Legislature Thursday night until a special session next Tuesday. A resolution supporting the Student Services Discount Club was tabled until the body could see further information dealing with the establishment of a student cooperative.

A $150 communications committee bill was passed after short debate. The money will come from the student government's general surplus.

The student cooperative resolution was debated by several legislators who considered how much support the Legislature could give. Bob Spearman, (UP-SP) chairman of the special legislative committee on cooperatives, presented a three-page report of the committee.

There was no debate on a bill which would put a constitutional amendment before the student body on Nov. 6, providing for honor council trials open to two Daily Tar Heel reporters. The special session to consider the bill will be at 8:30 p.m. Tuesday.

A bill to expand the appointive powers of the summer school student body president, introduced by Dave Williams (SP), was sent back to the ways and means committee. It had been passed by the wrong legislative committee.

Arthur Hay's (SP) bill to define legislative authority to pass resolutions did not come up at the session.

SSL Interviews Planned Next Week

Interviews will be held next week for U.N.C. delegates to the State Student Legislature which will meet in Raleigh Nov. 29, 30 and Dec. 1.

The S.S.L. serves as an open forum of student opinion and is made up of delegations from schools throughout the state. Current state and national problems and issues will be discussed and debated.

"S.S.L. is a unique opportunity for college students in North Carolina to participate in a discussion of state and national affairs. We would like to urge interested students to come by for interviews," said Beth Walker and Scott Summers, co-chairmen of the committee.

More Cuban Questions: U. S. Always Right?

The Cuban crisis has caused confusion among all segments of the American political spectrum, resulting in many strange bedfellows. Republicans and YAFers have demonstrated for Kennedy and so-called "liberal" Democrats have found themselves caught between allegiance to the president and their sincere doubts about some aspects of the blockade situation.

Through it all, some discussion has proved possible. It has brought out basic questions, basic to the blockade issue and more broadly, to the direction of United States foreign policy.

* * *

Some questions to be answered:

Is United States policy, by definition, always right?

(An answer of "Yes" necessitates the assumption that whatever the Communists favor is wrong, and therefore we must act directly contrary. An answer of "No—but we must act as if we were always right" means that the U. S. must consciously implement improper policies to the detriment of the nation and world.)

* * *

Is all United States arms buildup, missile sites and military maneuvering strictly defensive? Does the U. S. never contemplate aggressive action — therefore justifying Ambassador Stevenson's statement that our bases are defensive, hence good, and Russian bases are offensive, hence bad.

(But have they forgotten the Bay of Pigs and April, 1961? Where were those sanctimonious words of "defensive precautions" when the US-trained and armed rebel force invaded Cuba? How can the world take America's words of defense seriously when it still remembers the Bay of Pigs?)

* * *

Some people go so far as to doubt the loyalty of any American who questions the merits of the Cuban blockade — there are cries of "treason" at every turn. This was most closely seen at Thursday night's Cuba debate, and as comment on the Tar Heel's "student leader reaction to Cuba" story.

These are irresponsible accusations.

Many of the accused feel, as we do (in Albert Camus's words), "If I seem to love justice more than my country, it is because I wish to love my country in justice." And this can best be accomplished by full rational discussion. (JC)

Conservative Lizards

In spite of the ambiguities surrounding any labeling as to "liberal" or "conservative," there has generally been held a vague notion that one could differentiate between these two types of individuals according to their demeanor.

That is to say, a conservative took pride in being clean and wholesome —wearing stylish shoes, button down clothing, and keeping his voice under control. A conservative never got emotional, he had access to the facts, and based his arguments on those facts. Cort of a la Fulton Lewis, Jr., very suave, almost svelt.

And a liberal, well, he was noisy always shouting about things, never having any facts, but basing his arguments and accusations on emotionally held beliefs. He never wore a coat-and-tie, he never spoke slowthings. Sort of a la Mike Harrington, very interesting, but not really ly, he usually got excited about smooth like a good conservative was.

Usually, if one were politically neutral to the pleas of these two groups, or if one even lacked respect for the conservative stand, he nonethe-less had to respect the manner in which the conservative conducted his arguments and took his stands.

But after the discussion on Cuba, held in Carroll Hall Last Thursday night, one is forced to wonder if indeed the "conservative" image is merited or correct in application.

The "conservative" manners displayed to guest panelists in the course of that discussion constituted some of the most asinine student behavior ever witnessed on this campus. They, the "conservatives" that is, were there in full force they came in all sizes—all styles. Some wore green windbreakers and horn-rimmed glasses, some had ties on, some had black hair, and some—mercy be—had red hair. But whatever their outward appearance, their approach was anything but conservative, and their hissing was highly indicative . . . lizards all. (CW)

Block That Cuban

Thursday night's pro-blockade demonstration, organized by several Ruffin students, was a healthy and well-organized expression of student opinion.

We would disagree with some of the chants, such as "We want Cuba" (you can have Cuba, we don't want it), but that's not the point. The point is that several hundred students took the trouble to leave their warm dorms for 30 minutes or an hour to shout something beside "Hold that line" (instead, they shouted, "Hold that blockade"), and for once, the students cared about something.

Sure there was the atmosphere of a football rally, sure there was talk about a panty-raid but basically, the demonstration was refreshing to see and very rare at this campus. (JC)

Cuban Blockade Supported

YAF President Backs Kennedy

To the Editors:

Over the past two years I have had many opportunities to take exception, in and out of print, to the policies of the Kennedy administration. Most recently in the Daily Tar Heel, October 24, 1962), I reflected unfavorably on the UN and our government's foreign policy as represented in the UN by Adlai Stevenson.

However, actions in recent days by our government have made me, and other writers, eat their words that the present administration is too weak-kneed to assume the initiative in the cold war. This is obviously not the case. Kennedy's decision to blockade Cuba, and to back it up with military force, if necessary, is certainly one of the most positive and heart-warming decisions in the history of American foreign policy. UN ambassador Stevenson's speech in the UN of October 23 was the greatest he ever delivered. I wholeheartedly applaud this courageous effort of President Kennedy, Ambassador Stevenson's and the rest of the administration, to secure the blessings of liberty that Americans hold so dear.

Peace Not Worth Freedom Loss

To the Editors:

As this is written, a Soviet freighter is headed toward Cuba and a showdown with the U. S. blockade of that island. I believe most UNC students will applaud the President's action. In today's DTH, however, we see that some of our student "leaders" do not. There are undoubtedly various other "leaders" around the country who share this opinion.

There is a profound falacy here in modern liberal thought. The belief that all countries really want peace and actively seek it, that no country really desires world domination and that the contrary opinion is out-moded and old-fashioned—all this and no qualifications. If the country takes any action of an offensive nature, we are internationally immoral and impractical.

I submit that the cause we undertake is moral — if the preservation of freedom in the world is to be considered moral. The only danger in our action is not that it is rash or impractical but that it might have been too late. If the results of this action should throw us into a war, conventional or otherwise (and may God protect us from that), it would not be a consequence of our recklessness or impudence in this case but a result of the inability to take action when action was called for.

Nobody wants war. And we all desire peace — but at the price of freedom? No. A thousand times no. If the cost of freedom should prove to be war, I believe most Americans are prepared to pay it. Providence has been on the side of freedom — we must all pray that it remains there.

Dorm Meeting Backs Kennedy

To he Editors:

At Tuesday night's meeting of Everett Dormitory, I was instructed by its members to inform you of the following resolution which was unanimously passed, excepting three abstentions, in the meeting.

"Resolved: That on the night of October twenty-third, in the year of our Lord, one-thousand nine-hundred and sixty-two, the residents of Everett Dormitory go on record as taking exception to the attitude satirized in the editorial by Mr. Chuck Wrye which appeared in the Daily Tar Heel of this date, entitled "Secrecy and Democracy, The Two Don't Jive," concerning the secrecy which shrouded the recent actions of the President of the United States in relation to the present Cuban Crisis; that they recognize the conditions which prompted the President to move in secrecy while formulating plans to meet this threat to our national security; and that of this date the residents of Everett Dormitory, in formal assembly, do solemnly affirm the fact that the ydo categorically and without reservation support the actions of President John Fitzgerald Kennedy with regard to this brazen threat to the security and well-being of the United States of America."

—Donald W. Carson

Cuban Blockade Legal, Moral

To the Editors:

The main furor over President Kennedy's acton against Cuba seems to center around whether the U. S. can justify its atcions morally and legally, to the world.

The argument against justificaton is that the Cuban government has the right to make an agreement with the Russian government allowing them to establish military bases in Cuba just as the U. S. has done in Spain fo rexample.

Is Russia dealing with a government that has ever been a legal independent Cuban government. No! Overwhelming evidence from the security files of a number of Latin American governments states that Castro as early as 1948 was a member of the Cuban Communists underground and a student of Russian undercover agents who were specialists in the overthrow of Latin American governments. At this time, while taking an important part in several violent Communist led demonstrations—the most notable being the Bogota uprising of 1948—Castro and other Latin American Communists were plotting the overthrow of the Cuban government and the establishment not of a democracy or even a Castro dictatorship but of a Russian satilite.

There is equally strong evidence that brother Raul was even sent to Russia to study Russian techniques in subversion.

The revolution led by Castro was, in fact, a Russian directed revolution and the establishment of Cuba as a Russian satillite was the inevitable, conscious plan. Evidence of these facts, available to the U. S. before the revolution actually started, was unfortunately ignored and Russia was allowed to take over Cuba in a manner just as illegal as would have been an invasion of Cuba by the Russian military.

Is the U. S. to continue in the direction of past mistakes? It is too late to overthrow the Cuban (Russian) government. We must prevent further satilites from being established in Latin America; at the same time we must minimize the gains Russia will receive from its FORCEFUL and ILLEGAL capture of Cuba.

—Louis Calhoun

Rah, Rah, Rah For President

To the Editors:

Our President has made a decision . . . a decision that most people feel is long over-due. But these war-mongers have not looked at the facts closely. If we had moved into Cuba before sufficient evidence had been developed about Communist missile bases, we would be re-activating our imperialistic movements in the Latin American states. This movement, incidentally, is one of the causes of apathy toward the United States from the Latin-American people.

But the Republicans are saying, 'All Kennedy is doing is starting the final war." I think that our President and the Russian President and a great number of people over the world know that the next war will be a final war. This realization causes me to believe that there will be no full-scale war. America and Russia realize that a war now would be internecine. I wave my nose at the person who criticizes the President's decision for he is the type of person who would love to fight the Civil War over, now that he knows the mistakes made. And to President Kennedy, I say Rah, Rah, for he is standing up for the ideals, security and preservation of America.

—Robert Gullette

Writer Complains Of DTH Writing

To the Editors:

"But as long as the question of 'recognition' arbitrarily can be drug into future situation, there always will be the danger of this power being misused against controversial organizations." (Jim Clotfelter, lead editorial in "The Daily Tar Heel," Wednesday, October 17, 1962.)

Filled with at least three blatant grammatical errors and innumerable offenses against clear syntax and good English prose, the sentence quoted above is so representative of the hasty composition and faulty style to which readers of the "Tar Heel" are daily subjected that such writing can escape criticism no longer. One can readily understand and make allowances for the pressures exerted by deadlines, typesetters, and printers under which the staff and editors are laboring, but one wonders whether all the errors can be so excused, and even when, where, from whom, or if Mr. Clotfelter ever took a course in English grammar and composition. Examples equally bad could be taken from the editorials of Mr. Chuck Wrye. Surely a literate, academic community has a right to expect from the editors of its newspaper, at least acceptable journalism, if not good English prose.

News Coverage Unfair To JFK

To the Editors:

What the hell is wrong with you people in the DTH office? When 400 UNC students sent their support to Meredith you ran a large headline and a good bit of space was given to the story.

But, now in a time of world crisis, when President Kennedy received 4 THOUSAND telegrams from citizens congratulating him on his stand on Cuba, you write a little paragraph in the bottom right-hand corner of the front page telling of it.

On the same page, under a tremendous head, you tell what the "campus leaders" (this term is debatable) have to say about his action.

Chuck Wrye called for a minute for Meredith. Don't you think Kennedy deserves at least equal time? After all, he is the President, isn't he?

N. C. Education Board: Advise—Not Regulate

(This is the fourth and final part of a series on the reorganization of the N. C. Board of Higher Education and its implication for state-supported universities. This part sums up the positions of Mc. McLendon and University President Friday.)

By CHESTER DAVIS
In The Winston-Salem Journal and Sentinel

Second, the commission attributed these failures to:

The statutory make-up of the board, an oblique way of saying that the 1955 General Assembly gave the board too much regulatory authority.

The board's faulty conception of its role, an equally oblique way of saying that the board took its regulartory powers too seriously.

The inability of the board to gain the full confidence of the institutions, the Advisory Budget Commission and the Governor's office.

In making these points the majority group of the Carlyle Commission put their finger on the central issue in the controversy. They said:

"The conception that the Board of Higher Education is essentially a regulatory body is, in our view, erroneous, although based in part on the statute. This conception, coupled with a tendency to become too involved in the details of institutional budgets, had obscured the proper mission of the board."

BASIS OF CHANGES SET FORTH

Third, the majority group justified the changes they proposed on these grounds:

They would serve to emphasize the board's coordinating and planning functions and, by implication, deemphasize the board's regulatory activities.

Replace line-by-line budget review—a duplication of the work done by the Advisory Budget Commission and the Legislature —with a broad (to the point of being vague) review in terms of general fiscal policy.

Increase the board's function as an advisor of the Advisory Budget Commission and the Legislature and, again by implication, decrease its regulatory interference with the institutions.

Assure that the board will be supplied with a staff large enough to enable it to meet its responsibilities.

And, by placing four college presidents on the board, improve the communication between the board and the institutions and better enable the board to serve the state as a knowledgeable forum on questions of higher education.

A minority report, signed by six of the Carlyle Commission's 24 members, took the position that a Board of Higher Education, if it is to be effective, must possess regulatory powers as well as advisory functions and should be made up entirely of laymen who approached all questions from a state-wide rather than a regional or institutional point of view.

McLendon, leader of the minority group, felt that it was "immoral" to permit college presidents to serve as judge and jurors on their own case. The fact the majority proposed to delete the requirement that "No members shall serve as a representative of any particular region or any particular institution of higher education" caused the minority to complain that the door was being opened to every Chamber of Commerce and other pressure group out to advance their own local interests.

It is probable that the recommendations of the majority group—and they are only recommendations to be made to the 1963 General Assembly — will be further changed. It is likely be further changed. It is likely, for example, that further effort will be made to dilute objections to having voting college presidents on the board. This may be done by increasing the membership of the board to 15; 11 laymen and four voting college presidents. Or it may be done by a requirement that no college president serving on the board will be allowed to vote on any question affecting his own institution.

Major McLendon, who has shown no inclination toward compromise on the matter of placing college presidents on the board and giving them a vote, says he intends to fight this matter out in the 1963 General Assembly. It very well could be that this one aspect of the report of the Carlyle Commission will become so controversial that it will obscure other — and in many ways more important—recommendations made by that commission.

THE ISSUE IN PERSPECTIVE

It is difficut to make out a clear-cut, black-and-white case of right and wrong in this matter. There are two points of view — to personalize them you can call them the Friday and McLendon points of view — and they are viewpoints which are held by intelligent, sincere and dedicated men.

Certain observations may help to put this controversy in some perspective.

The very fact Governor Sanford felt it necessary to appoint the Carlyle Commission indicates that many people believe the Board of Higher Education has not fulfilled the function for which it was created. For the study made by the Carlyle Commission was precisely the sort of study the board was told to conduct when it was created in 1955.

This conclusion is bolstered by statements made by persons closely related to the board. In January, 1962, just prior to his retirement as executive director of the Board of Higher Education, Dr. Harris Purks admitted the board had fallen short of expectations. Dr. William Archie, present executive director of the board, has said, "The board, as currently constituted, has never been able to be as effective as such a board should be."

Dallas Herring, a member of the Board of Higher Education since 1955, repeatedly has urged a change in the law creating the board in the belief such a change is necessary if the board is to make the contribution to higher education it is capable of making.

The majority of the members of the Carlyle Commission reached the same conclusion. The reasons advanced to support that conclusion—that the board tended to over-emphasize its regulatory functions and tended to become so immersed in detail that it lost sight of its over-all planning function—appear to be justified by the facts.

This seems to have been particularly true of the board's efforts to conduct a detailed, line-by-line review of the budget of each state-supported institution. As Dr. Archie says, "The board lacked both the staff and the competence for such a review." In this area the board clearly seems to have lost sight of the forest because of the trees.

It is true, also, that the board alienated East Carolina College and the Greater University of North Carolina. But it is equally true that the smaller and less politically potent schools have on the whole, found the board to be a good and a helpful friend.

Florida Residents Begin Scare Buying

By MATT WEISMAN

This story is taken from first person accounts given by Florida residents who are relations of this reporter. These residents have just come up to North Carolina from Florida.

Housewives, scared by the Cuban crisis, have set off a wave of buying in southern Florida. First hand accounts, tell of how lines are formed outside of grocery stores.

Stores' supplies of canned food are near depletion. Many paniced shoppers have found nothing but sparcely stocked shelves to look at. One Ft. Lauderdale resident reported that there was a rush to buy bottled water. After one day, bottle water became an extremely scarce commodity.

This same resident reported that school children coming home with notes advising that parents store up a two week supply of dry and canned goods. Part of the stampede to stock up can be contributed to this.

However, the constant military flights of low flying jets and transports which nearly blacken the sky in no small way contributed to the scare.

A resident of Miami reported of tanks and troop convoys rolling down Biscayne Blvd., a main road between Miami and Miami Beach. One train traveller from Miami to Raleigh, reported of a four-hour stop at Jacksonville, Fla., while troop trains and supply trains laden with tanks and missiles passed on their way to Miami.

Without doubt, the build up is big in Florida. The people sense this. Hoarding, and atomic attack preparations will probably go on for some time.

Calligraphy--Writing With Brush And Ink--Is Analyzed

The Japanese art of calligraphy, or writing with a brush stroke and ink, was the subject of a public demonstration Thursday at Ackland Art Center.

Writing is simply the strict translation of thoughts into symbols. But calligraphy, explained Kawasaki's translator, is the expression of one's ideas, feelings, impressions, and needs, using the characters of the Japanese language as a basis of this revelation. Thus it is truly an art; an important one in Japan.

There are now two types of calligraphy. The first, o rOrthodox, is an ancient art, dating back over 1300 years. It is strictly governed by many rules and techniques which must be followed, and which require as much as thirty years intensive study to master. All the writing must be done with black ink on white paper.

The new style is something which Mr. Kawasaki has developed himself in the past four years, but which has already made some impact on the art world.

It involves a new way of thinking, using colors as well as black, and expressing the mood or feeling of a word by using the word itself as a basic form of character, using various brush techniques, and using ancient forms of characters as well as modern.

The work is generally done on sheets of white paper about four feet long and one foot wide, with each character being up to a foot in size. Many different sized round brushes are used, from one-fourth up to almost two inches in diameter.

Kawasaki, well known in Japan, was a professor of calligraphy in a Japanese university for almost twenty-five years. About ten years ago he opened his own studio, and now he is teaching, as well as experimenting in new methods and doing commissioned works. He has privately instructed over 2,000 students.

His current U. S. tour has carried him from the west coast through the Midwest to New England and thence to here. The next demonstration will be in Oklahoma City.

During this tour some of his works have been bought by art galleries and private persons and Princeton University kept many of his works for a two week exhibit.

The purpose of the trip he says, is simply to let the people of America know about Calligraphy.

HIGH TEST, LOW TEST, NO TEST

Just the other night I was saying to the little woman, "Do you think the importance of tests in American colleges is being overemphasized?" (The little woman, incidentally, is not, as you might think, my wife. My wife is far from a little woman. She is, in fact, almost seven feet high and heavily muscled. She is a full-blooded Chiricahua Apache and holds the world's hammer-throw record. The little woman I referred to is someone we found crouching under the sofa when we moved into our apartment several years ago, and there she has remained ever since. She never speaks, except to make a kind of guttural clicking sound when she is hungry. Actually, she is not too much fun to have around, but with my wife away at track meets most of the time, at least it gives me somebody to talk to.)

But I digress. "Do you think the importance of tests in American colleges is being overemphasized?" I said the other night to the little woman, and then I said, "Yes, Max, I do think the importance of tests in American colleges is being overemphasized." (As I have explained, the little woman does not speak, so when we have conversations, I am forced to do both parts.)

To get back to tests—sure, they're important, but let's not allow them to get too important. There are, after all, many qualities and talents that simply can't be measured by quizzes. Is it right to penalize a gifted student whose gifts don't happen to be of the academic variety? Like, for instance, Gregor Sigafoos?

Gregor, a freshman at the New Hampshire College of Tanning and Belles Lettres, has never passed a single test; yet all who know him agree that he is studded with talent like a ham with cloves. He can, for example, sleep standing up. He can do a perfect imitation of a scarlet tanager. (I don't mean just do the bird calls; I mean he can fly South in the winter.) He can pick up B-B's with his toes. He can say "Toy boat" three times fast. He can build a rude telephone out of two empty Marlboro packs and 100 yards of butcher's twine. (Of all his impressive accomplishments, this last is the one Gregor likes to do best —not building the telephone, but emptying the Marlboro packs. Gregor doesn't just dump the Marlboros out of the pack. He smokes them one at a time—settling back, getting comfortable, savoring each tasty puff. As Gregor often says with a winsome smile, "By George, the makers of Marlboro took their time finding this fine flavor, this great filter, and by George, I'm going to take my time enjoying 'em!")

Well, sir, there you have Gregor Sigafoos—artist, humanist, philosopher, Marlboro smoker, and freshman since 1939. Will the world—so desperately in need of talent—ever benefit from Gregor's great gifts? Alas, no. He is in college to stay.

But even more tragic for mankind is the case of Anna Livia Plurabelle. Anna Livia, a classmate of Gregor's, had no talent, no gifts, no brains, no personality. All she had was a knack for taking tests. She would cram like crazy before a test, always get a perfect score, and then promptly forget everything she had learned. Naturally, she graduated with highest honors and degrees by the dozen, but the sad fact is that she left college no more educated, no more prepared to cope with the world, than when she entered. Today, a broken woman, she crouches under my sofa.

© 1962 Max Shulman

And speaking of tests, we makers of Marlboro put our cigarette through an impressive number before we send it to the market. But ultimately, there is only one test that counts: Do YOU like it? We think you will.

...for a life of pride and purpose

Among the young people being graduated from college in these times, there are some who think and feel—perhaps a little more deeply than the others—about the world we live in, the future we face. They ask, "How can I make my career really meaningful? More than just personally rewarding?"

And many of today's most successful young people are finding a fulfilling answer to these questions as officers on the Aerospace Team... the United States Air Force. They can tell you that no career could better combine the opportunity for achievement—and the deep inner satisfaction of knowing that they are helping preserve the very future of America.

If you are a college senior and not currently enrolled in ROTC, Air Force Officer Training School provides an opportunity to qualify for a wide variety of career fields. The graduate of this three-month course receives a commission as a second lieutenant. As the Air Force continues its technological advance, officers with college training will move into positions of increasing importance.

For full information—including the opportunity to earn graduate degrees at Air Force expense—see the Air Force Selection Team when it visits your college, visit your local Air Force Recruiting Office, or write: Air Force Officer Career Information, Dept. SC210, Box 805, New York 1, New York.

Wurfel Given Grant By Ford Foundation

Seymour W. Wurfel, University of North Carolina professor of law, is the recipient of a Ford Foundation grant to study legal problems of private investment and business dealings in Colombia.

The grant is one of a series of similar grants administered by the American Society of International Law. Prof. Wurfel is the fourth to receive an award of this type. Previous grants have been given for studies in India, Nigeria, and Japan.

The "idea in the study is to try to bring to bear the sociological, historical, economic and political factors of the country as they influence the formation and application of pertinent laws—to point out the difference between theory and practice," said Dr. Wurfel.

The award is for a 21 month period, six months of which will be spent in Colombia. Dr. Wurfel will work out of Bogota, the country's capital. Before leaving for Colombia in the fall of next year, Prof. Wurfel will be attending conferences in this country and holding consultation on matters associated with his Colombia study.

Dr. Wurfel, who speaks Spanish fluently, joined the University of North Carolina Law School faculty in 1960. He previously taught at San Diego State College, Pamona College and Claremont Men's College.

Finger Painting Originator Opens Exhibit Tomorrow

WUNC TV's Miss Ruth Faison Shaw, the originator of Finger-Painting, will hold an exhibition of her own and her student's work in the garden of her home at 112 Estes Drive from noon until dark Sunday and Monday.

Miss Shaw originated the art of Finger-Painting in her school for English and American Children in Rome in 1929. Since then Miss Shaw has continued to perfect her art and is now a training consultant in the art of Finger-Painting in the Department of Psychiatry at Memorial Hospital.

In an interview, Miss Shaw stated the importance of Finger-Painting to the psychiatric patient as a means of communication. For the college student, Miss Shaw feels that Finger-Painting "creates movement" and it can also discover a "measure of individual creativity".

Concluded Miss Shaw, "I wish I could tell them all (students) to come and Finger-Paint."

Carolina Hopes To Break Wake Jinx Today

By ED DUPREE
Sports Editor

North Carolina's Tar Heels will try to find the combination to the Wake Forest safe before an expected 25,000 fans this afternoon at 2 when the Big Four rivals meet on the gridiron for the 59th time.

The safe has been locked since 1959 when Carolina eked out a 21-19 victory in Winston-Salem. UNC leads the series, 38 to 18. Two games have ended in ties.

The boys from Reynoldsville have been nothing but trouble for the past two seasons. In 1960 they came to Chapel Hill and went back to the tobacco city with a 13-12 victory. That was with Norman Snead calling the signals. Then without Snead, the Demon Deacons topped a sluggish Tar Heel bunch, 17-14, last year behind Mickey Walker's big toe.

Actually this is the first of a series of revenge contests between Carolina and Wake Forest. This winter Coach Dean Smith's basketball team will try to avenge two losses on the hardwood in last year's dismal season. And, came spring, Walt Rabb's baseballers will have the same thing in mind.

When the smoke cleared at the end of the 1961-62 school year, a somewhat dignified gent dressed in black was waving a cane in front of Wait Chapel on the Baptist campus. His athletes had conquered their hated Carolina enemies in five straight major athletic contests.

But Jim Hickey and his men would like to start a new streak today, and — as usual — they are favored over the men from the small Baptist college.

The rivalry between the two schools is unusual. The Wake Forest students hate Carolina with a passion. It seems they would rather beat Carolina and have a 1-9 record than to have a winning season and lose to the Tar Heels.

But in Chapel Hill the rivalry is of a different nature. UNC's chief rival is Duke, with Wake and N. C. State holding down second place. Maybe this is why the Deacs are always tough for Carolina teams — they think they deserve the top spot.

The Deacon gridders go into today's contest with a clean slate—of losses. In succession, they have bowed to Army, Maryland, Clemson, South Carolina and Virginia.

Coach Billy Hildebrand's men lost to Maryland, 13-2. The Terps tore into North Carolina, 31-13. But UNC topped South Carolina last week, 19-14—beating the same team that belted Wake, 27-6.

Comparison of scores is a weak yardstick for football, but the figures indicate that the Tar Heel bandwagon is ready to make its move.

The Deacs boast a young, inexperienced backfield. Wally Bridwell, a 5-10, 165-pound junior, quarterbacks the first team. Donnie Frederick, whose brother Larry played for UNC a few years back, is the voice of experience in the backfield. A 5-10, 175-pound senior, Frederick ranks first in the nation in kickoff returns. He can scamper with the best in the country.

Wayne Welborn, a sophomore who stands 5-10 and weighs 175, is the right halfback. Another soph, 6-0, 200-pound Brian Piccolo has started at fullback, but Larry Thomason has moved up to the first team. Thomason is 6-1, 185-pound soph.

The tackles are 6-0, 225-pound sophomore Tom Brawley on the left side and Kent Martin — a whopping 6-3, 245-pounder on the right. Henry Newton, along with Frederick, rates as the top pass receiver. Newton, a senior left end, stands 6-2 and weighs 195. At right end should be either junior Jim Tejeck (6-1, 193) or soph Wilbert Faircloth (6-3, 200), the younger brother of guard William.

Jim Hickey goes into this game with a slightly revised three-platoon system. He no longer has three distinct and separate units, but nevertheless it is a three-team system.

With his first string line of center Joe Craver, guards Clint Eudy and Jerry Cabe, tackles Vic Esposito and Gene Sigmon, and ends Bob Lacey and John Hammett, the Tar Heel coach will alternate backfields.

On defense John Flournoy and a trio of sophomores, Hank Barden, Tommy Ward and Dave Braine will join the Blue line.

This foursome is the Ram unit backfield. They will team up with an offensive line which is a mixture of the Rams and Tars.

Outstanding linemen in this group are Frank Gallagher and Chris Hanburger, a pair of sophomore ends, Duff Greene and Bob Zaback, linebackers, and an improving right tackle, Cole Kortner.

The Tar Heels can match Wake's sophomore number on defense or offense. Clint Eudy is the only soph in the Blue line, but three are in the backfield on defense and two on offense.

Six sophomores will be playing with the Tar-Ram combination.

Kicking, in the form of extra points and field goals, has decided the last three Deac-UNC games. Walker is the after-TD man for the Deacons. Edge handles the chores for UNC.

Wake has a slight edge in the punting department. Bozarth has kicked 17 times for a 38.6 average and Steve Warren, another sophomore, has kicked 16 times for a 37.3 average.

Wally Dunham is UNC's top punter with a 35.9 average on 17 kicks. Edge has kicked 13 times for a 35.3 mark.

The highlight of the game should be the individual duel between kickoff return specialists Jackson and Frederick. Carolina's Jackson is fourth in the nation with 263 yards, while the nation's leader, Frederick, has ran for 320 yards. The Wake speedster is closing in on the single-season ACC record for most yards returning kickoffs. The mark of 506 was set by Sonny Randle of Virginia in 1958.

By Ed Dupree

There comes a time when one wonders if one is stupid. I won't claim that adjective—yet. But if that one good week doesn't come along soon, I'll start wondering—aloud.

Last week was hell on my football prediction percentage. Stumbling along with better than a .700 mark for the first four weeks, I was able to live with myself. But last week's 14 out of 24 was a miserable showing. Down to a .680 mark, there's no place to go but up.

I did have some consolation, though, when I glanced over the predictions of a few other college sports editor's.

Down at Louisiana State University, a fellow named Joe Loftin made ten predictions and hit on half of them. And for the year he's only .691. That's not quite keeping up with the big-city writers, either.

Out in the mid west Eric Zoeckler at Iowa University had a good week, but the last prediction really threw me. It read: Duke 21, North Carolina 7. It seems that Eric is jumping the gun by a few weeks. I hope he knows by now that Duke played Clemson last week.

And Reed Straus of the Columbia Daily Spectator is having his problems. He matches his picks against Columbia faculty members. A professor of English blitzed him two weeks ago by picking a perfect 10 for 10.

And there's a fellow over at Durham who fits into the big-city category. Jack Horner is not Carolina's favorite sports writer, but everyone reads his column. Jack sat in a corner and decided to pick Wake Forest over UNC by less than a touchdown. Jack wants to find out if the Horner Hex is for real.

Me, I'll have to go against "The Pillar" and find out if the Dupree Hex is for real. I've missed on my UNC predictions in three straight ACC games.

Wake Forest's two-year domination of the Tar Heels is ready for a halt. I still think Wake will win a game this year, but it won't be today. UNC 19, WAKE FOREST 10.

I'll not go against the strong Duke Blue Devils this week, but N. C. State can give them a fit if they play like they did against Nebraska. DUKE 27, STATE 13.

And for the upset of the week it's time for Maryland to stumble within its own conference. SOUTH CAROLINA 21, MARYLAND 17.

Clemson plays at home against an Auburn team that surprised Georgia Tech last week. It seems that the Alabamans are trying to keep up with their state rivals, the Crimson Tide. Auburn should romp, AUBURN 24, CLEMSON 7.

Virginia is coasting along with a 3-1 record, but hasn't met a tough ACC team yet. The Cavaliers will win one more, but four straight league games will slow them down. VIRGINIA 26, DAVIDSON 7.

Out of the Atlantic Coast Conference I hit on 14 out of 20 last week—so here we go around the nation, where I seem to be more of an expert.

OHIO STATE 21, WISCONSIN 14. Three straight weeks Wisconsin has foiled my prediction, but the Buckeyes are playing much too strong a schedule.

UCLA 21, STANFORD 10. Both teams have topped a strong Big Ten team. Stanford's win was a fluke.

OKLAHOMA 34, KANSAS STATE 6. An easy win for The Sooners.

OREGON STATE 27, WEST VIRGINIA 15. It's a long trip to the west coast and it'll be a bad one for the Mountaineers.

KANSAS 26, OKLAHOMA STATE 12. The Kansans bounce back after losing to Oklahoma.

Intramural Marks Fall On Track

By STUART BALL

Two records fell as the 1962 Intramural Track Meet concluded its two-day stand with over 40 teams and 800 individuals participating in the nine events.

In the 440-yard relay NROTC eclipsed a record Mangum established last year in the Dorm Division. This year the Navy boys ran it in 50.0 seconds as opposed to a 51.2 Mangum time in 1961. In the Grad Division Maurice McDonald of the Dental School ran a 1:59 half-mile, topping a record set last year by Larry Henry of the Med school. Henry ran it in 1:59.9.

In the overall team standings the Fraternity, Dorm, and Grad Divisions differed greatly in their final makeup. In the Fraternity division Beta ran away from the rest of the pack by accumulating 28 total points. The second and third place Dekes and Phi Delts were separated by only .75 point, however. In the Grad Division the Peacocks also made a runaway of the race by amassing 39.5 points to Law School's 22 points. Physics was a distant third with 16.5 points. The closest race occurred in the Dorm Division where NROTC barely edged Aycock 26 to 25.5. Alexander was third with 10 points.

Top performances were turned in by Sam Hunt of Aycock and John Boyd of Beta in the 60 and 100-yard dashes. Hunt paced both events in the Dorm Division with 6.9 and 11.2 times. Boyd was top man in the Fraternity Division with 6.7 and 10.8 times. In the Grad Division the Peacock's Bob Hart finished first in the 60-yard dash and second in the 100.

Dick More of the Peacocks paced both the Grad Discus and Shot Put with throws of 118'5" and 40'0" respectively. Right behind him in both events was Henry Pharr of the Law School with 101'11" and 36'9½" throws.

Final results in each division:

Dormitory — 60-yard dash, Sam Hunt; half-mile run, Jerry Mittenporf; Discus, Bill Cobb; Shot Put, Bill Saunders; Broad Jump, Bill Belangia; High Jump, Bill Shoemaker; 440-yard relay, Navy; 880-yard relay, Navy.

Fraternity — 60-yard dash, John Boyd; half-mile run, Paul Jolis; Discus, Bee Chapman; Shot Put, Bill Allgood; Broad Jump, Larry McDevitt; High Jump, Ned Martin; 440-yard relay, Phi Delt; 880-yard relay, Phi Delt.

Graduate — 60-yard dash, Bob Hart; 100-yard dash, Maurice McDonald; half-mile run, Maurice McDonald; Discus, Dick More; Shot Put, Dick More; Broad Jump, Wade Smith; High Jump, Bob Wicker; 440-yard relay, Peacocks; 880-yard relay, Peacocks.

Pfeiffer Bows 4-1 To UNC Booters

By JOEL BULKLEY

North Carolina's varsity soccer team extended its winning streak to four games yesterday by downing Pfeiffer College, 4-1. It was the fourth straight victory for the booters at Fetzer Field this season and gave them a 4-1 overall record.

Left inside Herman Prakke scored the first Tar Heel goal of the afternoon on an assist by Jim Reston with six minutes gone in the second quarter. Prakke and outside right, Pete Blake added goals later in the same period to give UNC a 3-0 halftime lead. Blake's goal was unassisted, while Charlie Battle was credited with an assist on Prakke's second score. Prakke now has a total of three goals for the season.

Jim Reston added his 10th goal of the season in the final quarter on a pass from Blake. Reston needs only six more goals to tie the Carolina season individual scoring record.

This loss ended Pfeiffer's three-game winning streak and gave them a 3-4 season record.

Jackson Gets Two TD's Against WF

By HARRY W. LLOYD

North Carolina chopped through Wake Forest with a razor sharp Edge here yesterday, felling the Deacons for the fifth time this season, 23-14.

Sure-fingered Bob Lacey grabbed eight passes from quarterback Junior Edge. Five of them came in the second half when the Tar Heels surged from seven points behind to score a pair of touchdowns.

Yards Rushing	116	94

UNC	0	7	8	8	—23
Wake Forest	7	7	0	0	—14

Lacey was the only Carolina man to receive a pass from scrimmage, and Edge was the only man to throw to him. Their aerial tricks piled up 137 yards for UNC, or more than half of the team's total offense.

After Ronnie Jackson, the bunny rabbit in Jim Hickey's backfield, scored twice to put the Tar Heels ahead by 15-14, the Edge-Lacey combo accounted for the third score and a two-point conversion.

Wake Forest, which came into the game winless this season, scored first in the opening period after taking a short UNC quick kick. The sophomore passing combination of quarterback Brandewiede to halfback Sam Green got this 67 yard drive started with a 19-yard gain and also gained the score with a 14-yard play. Mickey Walker, who beat the Tar Heels with a field goal last year, kicked the point and the Deacons led with 2:58 to go in the quarter, 7-0.

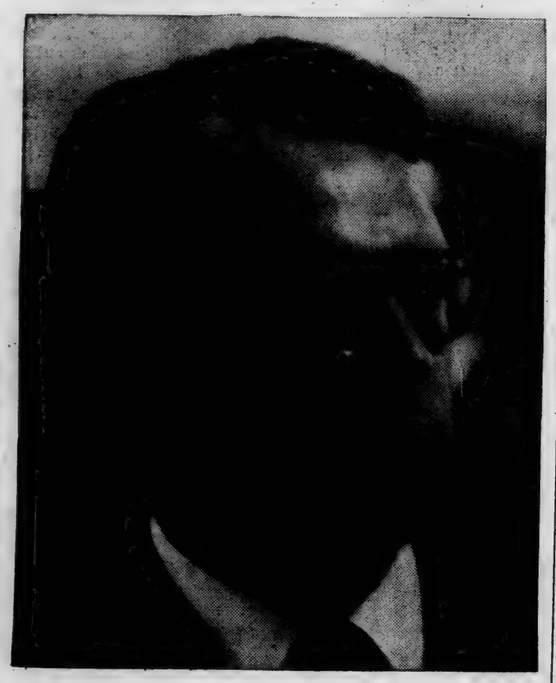
After receiving the kick, North Carolina was still plagued with the penalty-fever that hurt them the first time they had the ball. On the first UNC series, Ken Willard had broken off right tackle twice for two 10-yard-plus gains, only to have both of them called back for petty five yard penalties.

On the first play of the second series, after the Wake TD, Willard again blasted for a first down, only to have the gain nullified because of an infraction. But on third down, the Edge-to-Lacey weapon struck for the first time, and the Tar Heels were off and running with a 17 yard gain.

Two plays later, Edge threw deep and Lacey nabbed it near the left sideline for a 36-yard gain, carrying to the WF 13. Willard carried eight yards on the following play, but was injured and forced out of the game until the second half.

After a pair of penalties pushed the Heels away from the goal line, a running play by Edge when he couldn't find a receiver gained the first down on the three. Eddie Kesler carried to the two, from which Jackson slipped into the end zone. Dave Braine's kick tied the score at 7-7 with 14:03 left in the second quarter.

A goal line stand, spearheaded by three consecutive great defensive performances by linebacker Joe Craver, stopped one potential Wake Forest score. The Deacons moved from the 50 to the five, mainly on the passing of Brandeweide, before the Carolina defense buckled down.



On second down, Craver met Donnie Frederick head-on at the one and drove him out of bounds after a 3-yard gain. He then racked up Wayne Welbern at the line of scrimmage and stopped a sneak attempt by quarterback Wally Bridwell, and Carolina took over at the one.

Frederick returned Wally Dunham's 29-yard punt to the UNC 24, and six plays later the Deacons pushed over their second score. A 13-yard pass from Brandeweide to Henry Newton, and a pass interference call against UNC accounted for most of the distance. Fullback Brian Piccolo went over left guard for the score from two yards out. Mickey Walker's kick made it 14-7 with 1:23 to be played in the half.

Both teams were stymied early in the third quarter. On its first series, Carolina had a third and 21 situation when Edge hit Lacey

Disarming, Communication Top Goals, Speakers Agree

By PETER WALES

Representatives of both the Soviet Union and the United States agreed on the need for disarmament and better communications between governments and people in a panel discussion Friday night.

"The future of the nations depends largely on disarmament," said Nikifor Levchenko, second secretary of the Soviet embassy. "It is the supreme duty of states to reach agreement."

Both sides are "engaged in an arms race," said Robert Madison, senior adviser of the Arms Control and Disarmament Agency. "This can only lead to mankind's final war."

Levchenko explained the Soviet draft treaty for disarmament presented to the United Nations in December, 1961. tI was "a treaty for complete disarmament" over "a term of four years." Since then a new Soviet proposal has lengthened this period to five years.

Madison cited three points of disagreement between the U. S. and the present Soviet plan. He said that there are "differences over verification," disagreement on peace agreements disarmaments, and disagreement on the "transition stages of the disarament program."

Questions from the audience expressed concern over the differences on verification. Mr. Levchenko said the Soviets favored inspection of the destruction of nuclear arms. Madison pointed out that this did not allow for inspection of further arms not destroyed.

Madison drew laughter when he said, "When Levchenko puts his money out on the table, we want to know what he has in his pockets."

On understanding between the two nations Madison added, "Soviet attitudes will slowly change" through "further liberalizing trends within the Soviet Union." He felt that time would help "a world seriously divided in ideology."

He added that increased communication between governments and more visitor exchange would decrease tension.

Levenchenko said after the meeting that he too favored "more exchanges" and had come to Chapel Hill "to meet people."

He added that the UN is the "only hope" for world peace and is a strong advocate of peaceful competition and coexistence.

A reception was held in Graham Memorial after the discussion.

Student Draws Gun After Cuba Debate

A law student pulled a .38 caliber pistol on another student after an argument about Cuba Thursday night, according to campus police chief Arthur Beaumont.

The students involved were identified by Beaumont as Al Warren, law student who lives in Victory Village, and Evans Hemsath, a senior from New Jersey.

Chapel Hill police were called after Warren reportedly pulled the gun during an argument which followed the panel discussion on Cuba in Carroll Hall. Acording to reports, the incident occurred near Parker Dorm where Hemsath lives.

"From what I could gather," said Beaumont, "a lot of beer was being drunk at the time."

Chapel Hill police filed no charges against Warren. Beaumont said he turned the case over to Dean of Men William Long, who will presumably pass it on to the law school honor court.

Chapel Hill policeman Lt. G. R. Creel told Beaumont he was shown the gun and a box of .38 bullets in the car being driven by Warren. Beaumont said there was no further incident when Lt. Creel arrived.

When contacted by the DTH, Hemsath said he had no comment, and preferred that the matter be dropped.

Warren is a 1953 graduate of UNC, according to Beaumont, and a veteran of military service. He was not available for comment Saturday night.

JFK Refuses Missile Deal

WASHINGTON (UPI)—President Kennedy Saturday quickly rejected a proposal by Soviet President Nikita Khrushchev to trade Soviet missile bases in Cuba for NATO bases in Turkey. He fired back a counter demand that Cuban missile sites be dismantled at once under United Nations inspection.

At the same time the President left the door open to "properly inspected arms limitation" if construction halts on new Russian missile sites in Cuba, if those already there are rendered inoperable, and if Soviet bloc arms shipments to Communist puppet Fidel Casto are halted.

Without waiting for formal receipt of Khrushchev's Cuba-Turkey deal, the President turned it down on grounds "no sensible negotiations" could proceed as long as the Western Hemisphere was threatened by Russian offensive rocket bases in Cuba.

Both the White House and Defense Department declared that work was proceeding at a fast pace on Cuban launching pads for 2,200-mile intermediate range missiles to bolster already existing sites for 1,200-mile missiles.

No Choice

Administration officials said the President had no choice but to reject Khrushchev's proposal which was set forth in a letter to the President and broadcast by Moscow Radio before the message was received at the White House.

These officials asserted that acceptance of the deal would have struct the heart of the North Atlantic Treaty NATO defensive alliance and shaken Allied confidence in the United States around the world. Turkey warned in the wake of Khrushchev's proposal that it would be foolhardy for the United States to abandon the 30-odd bases it set up in that country under the NATO pact.

For the moment at least, the President's rejection left the explosive U.S.-Russian crisis over Cuba just where it was—with the next move up to Khrushchev.

Kennedy was standing firmly by his position—laid down in his Monday night nationwide radio-television speech announcing the naval blockade of Cuba—that the Soviet bases must go before there can be negotiations of any kind.

A White House statement announcing presidential rebuff of the Khrushchev deal pointedly emphasized that the Cuban crisis arose from Soviet penetration of the Western Hemisphere and could not be solved by tearing down purely defensive alliances like NATO.

* * *

"People here think the Cuban crisis will get worse before it gets better," UNC student Bill Criswell said from the United Nations in New York yesterday.

Criswell told the DTH in a telephone interview, that most reporters and observers at the UN think there will be a major new break in the crisis within the next two days.

This attitude is wholly different from the comparative easy feeling Friday, said Criswell, UNC student body treasurer.

He said all U. S. press conferences held in the past two days have emphasized that missile base construction is continuing in Cuba and that the United States will not allow it to continue for long.

* * *

Heart Of Psition

Heart of the U. S. position was contained in the final paragraph of the White House statement issued after the President and his top advisers had discussed Khrushchev's plan as broadcast by Moscow Radio — and before the Khrushchev letter reached the White House.

"As an urgent preliminary to consideration of any proposals," the statement said, "work on the Cuban bases must be stopped, offensive weapons rendered inoperable, and further shipment of offensive weapons to Cuba must cease—all under effective international verification."

Khrushchev had proposed that U.N. inspection teams visit both Cuba and Turkey to verify simultaneous missile withdrawals. He also called for negotiations on the base trade under U.N. auspices, with a settlement to be reached swiftly, perhaps within a few weeks.

He also pledged that Russia would not attack Turkey, a long-time target of Russian expansion toward the mid-East's vastly rich oil fields, if the United States did not invade Cuba. He said this could be a step toward a nuclear test ban, on which "your stand and our stand are very near."

Involve Security

The President replied sharply that Khrushchev's proposal involved the security of nations outside the Western Hemisphere, but that it was Western Hemisphere nations that were confronted by the present threat—Russia's action "in secretly introducing offensive weapons into Cuba."

On this point, U. S. officials said there was nothing secret about establishment of the NATO bases in Turkey. They contrasted this with Russia's undercover base construction in Cuba which finally was revealed in full detail by U. S. reconnaissance planes.

The White House statement then hammered home the point that "work on these offensive weapons is still proceeding at a rapid pace."

"The first imperative must be to deal with this immediate threat, under which no sensible negotiation can proceed," it added.

The President then opened the door a crack to disarmament talks. He said:

"As to proposals concerning the security of nations outside this hemisphere, the United States and its Allies have long taken the lead in seeking properly inspected arms limitations on both sides. These efforts can continue as soon as the present Soviet-created threat is ended." Kennedy laid down his terms. He said the Cuban missile bases must be "rendered inoperable."

Reviewer Clark Reports 'Guys And Dolls' Lacked Pep

By NEIL CLARK

REVIEW: GUYS AND DOLLS, Book by Jo Swerling and Abe Burrows Words and music by Frank Loesser, based on a story by Damon Runyon. Directed by Kai Jurgenson, choreography by Foster Fitz-Simons, Musical Director Charles Horton Setting by Tommy Rezzuto, Costumes by Irene Smart Raines, Lighting by Russell B. Graves. Playmaker Theatre, Sunday 8:30 P.M.

Returning to the tradition of "Oklahoma", "Carrousel", and "South Pacific", (broken unsuccessfully last year with "The Beggar's Opera") the Carolina Playmakers opened the season with a mediocre production of a "Big Musical." The failure was imminent from the overture, when two pianists and a drummer walked in, composing the "orchestra". One had uneasy feelings that he was in for an evening of "Ferrante and Teicher Play Guys and Dolls", which, considering the outcome, wouldn't have been a bad idea. Exploiting the meaning of the word "Guys and Dolls" needed "Brass."

Except for a few bright spots the evening was a pretty dreary affair. Brightest of all was Contance Moses. Her portrayal of Adelaide, Broadway "chanteusy" who was still losing a 14 year battle to get crapshooter Nathan Detroit to the altar, was completely credible, professionally deft, and at times uproariously funny. Her mastery of dialect, her subtlety of expression, and her excellent sense of timing reveal the talents of a fine comedienne.

For those who have not seen the play or the movie the story is based upon Damon Runyon's "The Idyll of Miss Sarah Brown," in which Miss Brown, (Sister Sarah of the Salvation Army) becomes involved in a scheme to provide the use of Joey Biltmore's garage to one Nathan Detroit, proprietor of "the oldest established permanent floating crapgame in New York."

In order to obtain the one thousand clams with which it is necessary to procure the use of Mr. Biltmore's establishment Mr. Detroit enters into a friendly wager with the notorious and well-known "Sky" Masterson, who, being a cultured and cultivated (not to mention handsome and debonair) denizen of the city, is confident in his ability to persuade any doll whom Mr. Detroit should choose to care to name to accompany him to the city of Havana, which is in Cuba. The Sky, out of the kindness of his heart and the fact that the Save-a-Soul Mission is about to be closed, offers to Sister Sarah his marker (which, of course, is known and accepted all over New York) for twelve genuine sinners in exchange for the pleasure of her lovely company at dinner with him, which arrangement she reluctantly agrees to. One small fact which the Sky has neglected to inform her of which is that the dinner is to be consumed in the city of Havana. In Havana, Sister Sarah is taken under the influence of alcholic beverages and also becomes drunk at which time she realizes that she has feelings for The Sky that Sisters in the Salvation Army are not usually eager to admit that they have for someone such as The Sky, who is, himself, somewhat of a similar persuasion.

In losing the wager to Sky, Mr. Detroit, (known as good ol' reliable Nathan) is forced to resort to the tactics of having the game in an underground system of pipes which runs underneath the city and which is also known as the sewer. Meanwhile Sister Sarah has discovered that in her absence a crapgame has been held in the Mission for which act she blames Sky, who had not at all been responsible for the act at all. In order to make good his marker, The Sky joins the game in the sewer and wins the souls of all the participants who are participating in the game, including the famous Big Jule of Chicago, who has just succeeded in winning the dough with which Nathan was going to wed the well-know as Miss Adelaide, which occasion was brought on by the sudden appearance of one Lieutenant Brannigan of the local gendarmes.

At the appointed hour which is midnight they all arrive at the Mission, which fact greatly impresses General Cartwright, who is the dame who was for the closing of the mission, and persuades same that said mission should not be closed, but on the contrary should remain open. The Sky, after making good his marker, had announced his intention to cut out to the west coast, which fact, in the light of recent developments greatly disturbs Sister Sarah who in a quite moving and touching duet with that well-known singer, Miss Adelaide, Cuban And Turkish Bases: Intentions The Same?

Yesterday, President Kennedy flatly rejected Chairman Khrushchevs' proposal for a Cuba-Turkey base trade and left the windows open for further intensive speculation as to just how the U. S. intends to remove the exisiting-and-increasing threat of Cuban-based missiles.

Kennedy, not one to put both feet down too firmly too long, continued to leave the door open for further disarmament talks, and reiterated his demand for a immediate dismantling of the Cuban missile sites (how he would like this done, and by whom, one may continue to speculate, the point at this time seems only to me that he wants them removed).

Just what the relationship is between Cuban and Turkish bases continues to be an uncertainty, whether Kennedy feels that they merit a "swap" or not. The basic difference does not (as a recent editorial in theGreensboro Daily News pleaded seem to resolve around the manner in which the bases were established. For with present day reconnaissance systems, it is hard to conceive of Khrushchev's believing that the bases could hurridly and craftily be snuck into such a strategic locale. Any degree of "stealth" would be certainly temporary and appear to be incidental.

If a case could be pleaded for a definite difference in the fact of Cuba-Turkey potential, it would seem to rest intangibly in the case of their eventual use. We claim, and justifiably so in the light of most historical instances, not to be an aggressor; claim to build bases for protection, for retaliation, for a balance of threat, and as deterrents to thermo-nuclear elimination. So, Turkish bases will only be used after Russian bases are used—in effect, after the justification for their being there has been proven.

But then, in light of recent technological advances and improvements in missile warfare, indications are that the bases in Turkey are in fact obsolete and unnecessary for the retaliation and "over-kill" of Russia. Thus, continuing maintenance of the bases draws belated attention to the reason for their being placed their initially. Which might necessarily have been as a means to a vague form of friendly "occupation"—at least an "occupation in the sense that a man who pulls a drowning swimmer into his boat "occupies" the same boat.

For extensive aid was extended to Turkey as a direct result of Soviet expansionist threats in her direction—when, after the war, Russia demanded bases in the Turkish Straits and surrender of several provinces, we took countering steps with the Truman Doctrine in 1947. The bases came later and provided a more effective tie than mere millions of dollars seem ever to provide.

Therefore, if we remove the bases from Turkish soil, how do we sort of "stick around" to prevent that absorption into the, when necessary, pliable Iron Curtain complex?

Indeed, the case may be quite similar in Cuba. No doubt, it is much easier to justify to Cuban people the having thousands of Russian Communists in Cuba for the maintenance of missile bases, than for the insurance of continued steps toward Communist domination.

And so, the reasons for the bases being in both countries—Cuba and Turkey—seem quite a bit similar. And the hesitation on the part of both world powers to remove those bases might be primarily because of parallel intentions in each instance, regardless of the primitive nature of all bases concerned. (CW)

Campus News

A letter on the Saturday edit page criticizes the Tar Heel for supposed unfair news coverage. The letter-writers say a big news play was given to 400 UNC students sending a telegram supporting James Meredith, while only a small story was printed on 4,000 telegrams supporting the Cuban blockade.

The Tar Heel is primarily concerned with news of students, and most concerned with news of UNC students. Other newspapers adequately cover world and national events, but no other newspaper fully covers campus happenings. Our prime interest is always — What is happening here and now? The 400 UNC students were here, they were the guys down the hall and the girl in Y-Court — —therefore a student newpaper must give much greater coverage to their activities. (JC)

Letters To The Editors

On YAF Conservatives, Economic Department

YAF Contribution Can Be Valuable

To the Editors:

The other day fortune decreed that I should attend a meeting of one of the campus's newest organizations, the Young Americans for Freedom club. This was the first meeting of the club under the officially recognized status it received recently.

During the process of the meeting, at which twenty-five young Conservatives were present, Sam Jones, their president, spoke of some rather lofty ideals to be achieved by this organization. "The YAF holds what should be the accepted pattern of thought in America." He spoke of complete dedication to the infallable, or at least unsurpassable, principles of the Constitution of the United States; of a complete free market economy being the only economic system compatible with personal freedom and the constitution; of complete victory over Communism at all costs; of an American foreign policy in which the United States looks out for the United States alone.

Now he forgets that the Constitution was made by men and consequently is liable to human error or misjudgement, and was made to serve an agrarian nation of four million, he forgets that absolute freedom can be as bad as no freedom at all; he forgets that Communism is not going to calmly acquiesce as long as they have a single nuclear bomb left; he forgets that there is a world, small though it may be, in which there are other countries and other men and other ideas, and that these other men love their ideas just as much as we love ours.

After what I have just said, my next statement may come as somewhat of a surprise: I think that this organization is a very real asset to this campus.

Now why would I make such a crazy contradiction is that? Because I think that this organization, with all its reactionary ideas and new solutions to new problems, is doing and will do a lot towards making the people on this campus start thinking. This club calls on persons to examine their old beliefs and search for an understanding of why they believe what they do. The fact of this club being right here on campus awakens persons to the realization that there is a serious and concerted Conservative movement rising in this country which does not have the stigma of "John Birch" and "witch hunting" and "fanatic," and which has the backing of a number of distinguished political leaders and private citizens. The members have it in their power, and I believe that they will use their power, to stir up some rather strong feelings among many persons and groups.

It is necessary to have a forum, especially among students, for the expression of the ideas of any movement which is a result of a rising tide of sentiment in this country toward any philosophy. And this is precisely what is happening with regard to the Conservative movement. There are over 40,000 members of the national YAF, and many more who have the same ideas. This college must hear them out. What could be taken now as a basic American freedom was expressed long ago by Voltaire: "I may not agree with what you say, but I'll fight to the death for your right to say it."

Now that we have been noble, let's get down to practicalities. As I said before, the YAF will start people thinking, and examining what they believe in. I have heard much discussion of liberalism and conservatism taking place since the YAF set up their membership table in Lenoir Hall. Even I have been affected by this. The rub of the whole thing is, that people seem to reaffirm their old beliefs with renewed determination to stand up for what they believe is right, instead of dropping them and immediately taking up the banner of the Conservative cause. Having this group here has caused many persons to become alarmed lest the cause of liberalism should be endangered. And this alarm, if sounded wherever the Conservative cause becomes active, can create an effective countermovment, the results of which could be the softening of the more radical tendacies of both sides, and an invigorated liberalism. For no matter how high the ideas, lack of opposition creates stagnation. This is a lesson which history has taught.

So let us watch this group with these above-mentioned ideas in mind, and not much with a snickering, bantering, "wild-eyed reactionary" attitude toward them.

And I say to you, members of the YAF this is your bounden duty: to let the people of this campus know that their is a Conservative movement.

New Dorms: Both Assets & Failures

To the Editors:

The old, and over worked adage "All that glitters is not gold" finds its place once again here on the UNC campus.

I'm referring to the two most unique features attributed to the campus. Namely, Graige and Ehringhaus dormitories. These two magnificent show places have been deemed the "hiltos" of the campus. But let's take a little closer look at them.

Granted, the students housed in the two dorms are blessed with many fine features. For instance, they have privacy, a snack bar in one and a cafeteria in the other, a recreation room, a television room, study lounges, most attractive reception rooms, and elevators — to name but a few of the many conveniences. The beauty and construction of these six-floor edifices is really remarkable.

Like all good things however there are some drawbacks thrown in with the fruit of the harvest. For instance, the privacy that I spoke of earlier necessitates ones being withdrawn from the rest of the campus. Even with paths cut through the woods, many will agree that it's still a long way to walk. While many have cars, and still more have bicycles and motor scooters, there still remains a large number of students that have to walk. It is for these that I feel sorry.

The beauty of the construction also has it's drawbacks. For instance, the suite-type arrangement of both buildings increases the probability that someone will have a record player going in one of the surrounding rooms. In my particular suite, composed of four rooms, there are players in three of the rooms.

To add to the confusion, when there isn't enough, one finds that the bathroom door invariably squeeks. This, while seeming trivial, can become annoying late at night.

The elevators are truly a good idea too. Many can still remember the beginning days of school when mal-functions were constantly occurring. Either they weren't running because they were being worked on, or they were working too well. More than once have I seen students knocked of balance by the all to rapid closing doors. This is particularly annoying when you have both hands filled with "goodies" just purchased from the snack bar. Then, you don't even have a chance to defend yourself. Many people expended more energy trying to beat the closing doors than they otherwise would have had they used the stairs.

One nice feature of both dorms is their height. For anyone desiring to commit suicide, or liking an ideal view of nothing the heights is most advantageous. It also makes for tremendous water fights. The lower floors are particularly vunerable.

The mail system leaves much to be desired also. The "Pony Express" delivers it at a fairly reasonable hour, but the transferring at the way station, and I'm referring to the placing of it in the individual boxes is usually not completed before 2:00. Nevertheless, we do receive our mail.

All kidding aside, the new dorms really are an asset. There are some things that one is forced to put up with, but for the most part there are compensating factors. The buildings are truly assets to the campus. It enables the University to accommodate a greater number of students under less crowded conditions, it enables those who like exercise to get it, and the beds and rooms are great improvements over many of the older rooms.

As far as the noise goes, the study rooms provide a most adequate release. If one still isn't happy and has the innitive, he can always venture over to the campus to study. Many of the freshmen taking Modern Civ. have to make periodic trips anyhow. There is even talk of libararies being established to eliminate this.

In the final analysis then we who live in the wilderness dorms must admit that we love them. At times they tax our ingenuity and intestinal fortitude, but isn't this all a part of the conditioning that goes into making us fit subjects for the student body of UNC?

Econ. Department Is Too Keynesian

To the Editors:

Anyone who has been here at the University of North Carolina for a year or more could not help but be somewhat amused at a question posed in a letter to the DAILY TAR HEEL on October 19. The question was: "Isn't one of the purposes of college to learn to assess all the factors of a situation before coming to a conclusion?" In respect to the gentleman who wrote the letter, I must point out that my amusement is not aimed at him. But it is aimed rather at myself because when I first entered this University several years ago, I had the same notions about college and its purposes. I soon discovered differently and I suspect that not many more months will pass before the young man who asked that question will be sharply aware that all is not as he had envisioned it to be.

He will find as he progresses through the University that he will seldom, if ever, have to assess the facts in order to reach a conclusion. Because in many of the departments here at the University, the conclusions have already been reached for him. It will be necessary only for him to sit quietly back, take notes, memorize these "preconceived truths" 'and dare not question what or how the professor is teaching lest he be met with the hysterical hoisting of the banners of Academic Freedom. In all probability the average student at the University will never question what he is told simply because he is unaware that there is anything to question. The University of North Carolina instructor has become proficient at using emotional sleight-of-hand in lieu of direct and intelligent discussion in the teaching methods employed.

Let's examine for a moment the Department of Economics at the Pniversity. ohn Maynard Keynes is, of course, the patriarch of the department. Students of economics are very familiar with Keynes and his book, The General Theory of Employment, Interest, and Money, which was published in the mid 1930's. But just ask a student of economics to name some of the classical economists. With luck he will know the name of Adam Smith or John Stuart Mill but that's about all he'll know. What the philosophy of these men was in a question that is almost sure to stump him. This phenomenon has come about because the views of the classical school have been eliminated or ridiculed in the teaching of economics today. Let's look at an example in our University. The text currently being used in this course is Money, Banking, and Monetary Policy by Clifton H. Kreps, Jr. On page 7 the author takes a brief passage out of context to "prove" that Say's Law of Markets, a principle of the classical school, has been deleted "from the articles of faith of economists." You will notice that the word "economists" in the quote is unclassified by the author. Say's Law of Markets has not been deleted from "the articles of faith" of economists such as Ludwig von Mises, F. A. Hayek, Benjamin Anderson, Frank H. Knight, and Wilhelm Ropke. These men are not recognized then as economists because they represent another point of view. The student of economics can go through the University never realizing that what the text says is not necessarily gospel. This is but one small example. But many small inaccuracies lead inevitably to such distortion that separating truth from fiction becomes impossible.

These comments are in no way intended to critically analyze the University's Department of Economics although such an analysis might not be such a bad idea. Such an undertaking would be voluminous and I would never pretend to be capable of it. It wouldn't hurt several other departments of the University either. I have tried however to point out that the new student will find it necessary to dig through heaps of half-truths, loaded phrases, ridicule, and biased information in order to assess all the facts before coming to a conclusion. I want to reach these conclusions on my own; I don't want them reached for me. I solicit and appreciate the aid of my instructors in helping guide me towards a conclusion, but a conclusion made with all the facts duly considered.

Blockade Opposed

Pride Not Worth Mass Destruction

To the Editors:

The President's speech, announcing the blockade of Cuba, has stirred some of our citizens to nobly declare Better dead than Red." Undoubtedly, the American Legion would agree that this is patriotism at its best—people willing to sacrifice their lives for our great country. But where are these heroes when the times comes to LIVE for one's country? What trivial inconveniences will they accept, for instance, to become active in the struggle against racial inequality, a situation responsible for hatred and fear of America in many parts of the world?

The aura of grandeur surrounding the act of dying for one's country, or even talking about doing so, is archaic and ludicrous. However, any individual who would really prefer being "dead than Red" is at liberty to commit suicide if America becomes a Russian satellite. Tragically, the heroes are not speaking in personal terms. They really mean that it would be better that America and the rest of the world be destroyed, than that the Communists take over.

It is inconceivable that we have the right to obliterate life on earth under the pretense of upholding American principles. If these all-important national principles do, in fact, exist, and if they justify mass destruction, then the United States of America is ultimately a failure, and deserves our contempt.

'Great Debate'

To the Editor:

Great truths rarely the discoveries of brief and idle fancy, nor are great mysteries solved in a moment. Thus it has taken me some weeks to solve the mystery currently plaguing the Carolina campus. The clues providing the solution have appeared unnoticed in theDaily Tar Heel, but the major clue was really too obvious to miss. It was innocently contained in a letter from one of the curious, proposing a debate between the two principals of the mystery, O. C. and W.W.

The proposed debate was slyly avoided by the principals, for reasons that now begin to be obvious. The simple fact is that a debate is impossible: O. C. and W.W. do not exist. But that is not all. Further have proven to this writer that these examination of the materials at hand fictional personages are both projected from a single imagination, representing a savage inner conflict in the mind of one man. In one brain are yoked a predilection for mediaeval scholasticism and an Addisonian proccupation with manners and morals.

If there are extreme differences in the subject matter of the journalistic sallies of this heedless horseman, there are several similarities in the epistolary techniques of his masks. O. C. and W. W. One is an indefinably subtle, elusive, quasi-illogical approach, the other a modified stream-of-consciousness device. both of which corroborate my original contention. One half the mystery is solved, perhaps someone else will uncover the identity of H.H.

REFLECTIONS

"The 300 Spartans" left the Varsity Theater last night. This is probably the best thing that's happened in Chapel Hill since Jungle Jim last fell off his bike in front of Lenoir Hall. The story of the 300 Spartans (amazingly enough) who fought off the Persians at Thermopylae, it is an inspiration to enslaved men everywhere. If the movie is to be believed, the Persians should have won, because the Spartans were the biggest finks that we've ever seen.

--Playmaker Production Found Lacking In Pep--

reveals that she is in love with The Sky after all, at the same time revealing that Nathan, contrary to popular belief, was not at all lying to Miss Adelaide, his intended of fourteen years, but was in fact telling the truth in saying that he was going to the mission to get his soul saved. This revelation convinces the two ladies that the solution to the problem is to "Marry the Man Today," and change his ways tomorrow, since it is that they do not approve of the ways of Sky and Nathan.

Lacking in the Playmaker production was the bigness, the bustle, the noise of the big city. As it was the people seemed dwarfed not by the towering skyscrapers but by the size of the stage in Memorial Hall. There were not enough people in the prologue, there was not enough volume in the ensembles, there was not enough brashness about the Hot-Box Cuties, in short there was not enough life in the rollicking, raucous, hilarious way that make Guys and Dolls a fine musical. Too many non-singers were self-conscious about being "non-singers" and instead of trying to "belt" a song timidly tried to sing it. An exception to this was John Crockett, who, Considering the fact that no one will ever be Nicely-Nicely Johnson but Stubby Kaye, did nicely nicely, thank you.

Larry Warner as Nathan was not consistent in the quality of his characterization but his marvellous expression with the tilted head and rolling eyes deserves mention in itself. Sky played by Randolph Umberger, and Sarah, played by Juanese Hatten, were disappointing. Sky was played as a fatuous, posturing Richard II who seemed to have stepped out of an Esquire ad and found himself on thirty third street. Sarah was neither sweet nor innocent enough, tho she obviously worked at it in 19th century style reminding one of a high school production of Wagner. This is a bit of miscasting, however, for she came alive in the comedy scenes such as the drunk scene in Havanna, and made one feel sorry that she had been assigned the straight part which so obviously restricted her talents.

The direction was a collection of musical comedy cliches, such as actors backing on stage, looking intently into the wings at something infinitely exciting, then turning and delivering a line which inevtably leaves one wondering what happened in the wings, it seems so much more interesting than what is happening on stage. Maybe the electrician got electrocuted while fumbling around with the (quote) effects, such as a slash of green across the backdrop.

The settings suffered from the same fate. They were not imposing as the constructivistic design of widening angles attempted to suggest. They were still just nicely painted set-pieces flown onto a desert of a stage. The use of a painted drop would have perhaps done something to improve this for few set piece, no matter how well painted looks very effective if we see black curtains next to it, especially if it is to give the atmosphere of the skyscrapers of New York City.

Hickey Lauds UNC Progress, Lacey's Skills

By CURRY KIRKPATRICK

Jim Hickey is getting happier every week. His team's defense is steadily improving and the offense is having a similar revival. As a result, the young Carolina football team is finally rounding into the organized unit Hickey has wished for.

The slender Tar Heel coach was very pleased with the 23-14 win over Wake Forest yesterday.

"We came back real good in that second half," Hickey related. "A young team has a much harder time adjusting to different situations and Wake surprised us with the two-man flank system. They've been a wingback team all year but Billy (Hildebrand, Wake Forest coach) always comes up with something different against us."

Hickey continued the discussion. "We tried all kinds of adjustments during the first half but we couldn't straighten the boys out until halftime. We used fewer defenses after that and doubled our pass coverage on both sides."

Further questioned on his linebackers' pass coverage, Hickey reversed an early-season statement.

"I said a few weeks ago that our pass coverage aws not satisfactory but it has come a long way since then and today I thought we did very well, especially in the second half."

Bob Lacey was another subject under discussion. The 6-3, 209-pounder from Pelham, N. Y., caught eight passes for 137 yards yesterday and is quickly earning recognition as one of the best ends in the league, perhaps in the Asked how he compared Lacey with former UNC All-American flanker, Al Goldstein, Hickey was a bit wary.

"Ordinarily, I don't like to compare individuals but I would have to say that Lacey is every bit as good as Goldstein. The year Goldstein made it, he was a great defensive end as well as a good pass catcher. But Lacey is a bit bigger and a bit faster."

Beatty: A Symbol Of Determination

By CURRY KIRKPATRICK

Jim Beatty may very probably be the smallest distance runner in the world. He may also be the very best.

The 5-5, 128-pound bundle of muscle, who graduated from North Carolina in 1957, returned home this weekend to the glowing praise and heartfelt tributes of an adoring public and the state he loves best.

At a special banquet program Friday night, numerous speakers heaped compliments on the little guy and at no time has anybody ever been more deserving.

"The most widely known of an illustrious group of UNC graduates," said sports publicity director Bob Quincy.

Fred Weaver, secretary of the Consolidated University, and Athletic Director Chuck Erickson both pointed to the tremendous pride Carolina and the state take in having Beatty as its own.

An important guest, Governor Terry Sanford, also felt very proud.

"We welcome home our distinguished native son who has brought tremendous recognition to this state and this University," said Sanford.

"However," the Governor continued, pointing his words at Beatty, "we are not satisfield with your living in California. We want you to come back home."

Only a few hours before, Beatty had labored on that very same subject.

At an interview session before his short workout, the little runner confided that he wanted eventually to move back to North Carolina but that his plans were very much up in the air. In California, Beatty is in an insurance business that has a large branch in Charlotte. He hopes to be transferred in the near future.

"It's a little to soon to make any positive statement. Barbara (Jim's pretty wife) and I will have to decide on that. We may move back to Charlotte between now and then. I just don't know."

Pressed on what he thought his chances might be if he should enter the Olympics, Beatty did not hesitate.

"I feel sure that I would have no trouble winning the 5,000-meter race because I frankly don't know of anybody that can beat me. The 1,500 meters (equivalent to the mile run) is a different story. More and better milers are developing all over the world because of increased interest. I think I would have as good a chance as anybody, though."

Beatty ran his best mile this past summer in Helsinki, Finland while on tour in Europe. The time was 3 minutes 56.3 seconds. It set a new United States record.

"That's the one time I've run a race solely for a record," confided the personable track star. "My only regret is that I wasn't pushed. There was just no competition in the race. It wasn't like the one before." (Two days before in London, Beatty had won a 3:56.5 mile. In that one, three other men broke the four-minute milestone.)

Jim Beatty owns two world records (an outdoor 8:29.8 two-mile and an indoor 3:58.9 mile) and seven other assorted U. S. records, but his training methods are somewhat unorthodox.

In his extensive training (which he will start again around the first of November) Beatty runs twice a day, for an hour in the morning and two hours in the afternoon. But here, the standard procedure turns to the unusual.

"Once in a blue moon, I will use a stop watch. I know this is unusual but this is the way Mihaly wants it (Mihaly Igloi is Jim's Hungarian coach. He is considered by many to be the greatest distance coach in the world.) I can't remember the last time I used a watch," says Beatty.

He also has a few qualms about what he eats. This, in contrast to the rigid root and herb diets of many long-distance runners.

Jim Beatty is a quality person, a class person. Yet, with all his perseverence, determination, and dedication to his work, you get the feeling you are missing an inherent value that is very important.

"Jimmy Beatty's main contibution to his fellow man is the great influence his hard work and service has had on the millions of young men in this country. He is the greatest distance runner the United States has ever known and the equal of any track athlete in the history of the sport."

Wake's Don Frederick (24) blocks UNC pass

Duke, Maryland In Squeakers

DURHAM (UPI) — Quarterback Walt Rappold flipped a fourth down pass to Stan Crisson with 90 seconds to play Saturday to give heavily favored Duke a 21-14 victory over North Carolina State.

The Atlantic Coast Conference win was the fifth in a row for the Blue Devils, who were given several anxious moments by their traditional foe. State has not beaten Duke for 16 years.

The game-winning TD pass was the second for Rappold, who threw to end Pete Widener for Duke's first touchdown. Fullback Mike Curtis ran four yards for the second Blue Devil tally.

Maryland 13, USC 11

COLLEGE PARK, Md. (UPI)—John Hannigan's 22-yard field goal with 23 seconds to play brought Maryland from the brink of defeat to a 13-11 victory Saturday over defensively tough South Carolina.

Hannigan's three - pointer, his second of the day, and his ninth in two seasons, was set up by the brilliant clutch passing of Dick Shiner, the nation's leading collegiate passer.

The rifle - armed quarterback, hampered by rib and back bruises, steered the Terps from their 18 to the Gamecocks' 7 in a last ditch drive featuring three key first down passes—the last one an interference call on South Carolina star Billy Gambrell.

Auburn 17, Clem. 14

CLEMSON, S. C. (UPI)—Tenth-ranked Auburn scored two touchdowns within 95 seconds and added a decisive field goal by Woody Woodall to edge stubborn Clemson 17-14 Saturday and remain unbeaten and untied.

The loss was the third in a row at home for Clemson—an unprecedented event in the football history of the strong Atlantic Coast Conference team.

Billy Edge, a sophomore halfback, set up both Auburn touchdowns in the second period with fumble recoveries. Fullback Larry Rawson came up with both of the scores on a short run and a pass from Mailon Kent.

UVA 34, Davidson 7

CHARLOTTESVILLE, Va. — (UPI)—Quarterback Gary Cuozzo passed for three touchdowns and ran for another Saturday to lead Virginia's Cavaliers to a 34-7 rout of mismatched Davidson.

Carl Kuhn, Virginia's other quarterback threat who was not to be discounted in the easy win over the Southern Conference team, clicked off 38 yards for Virginia's final touchdown.

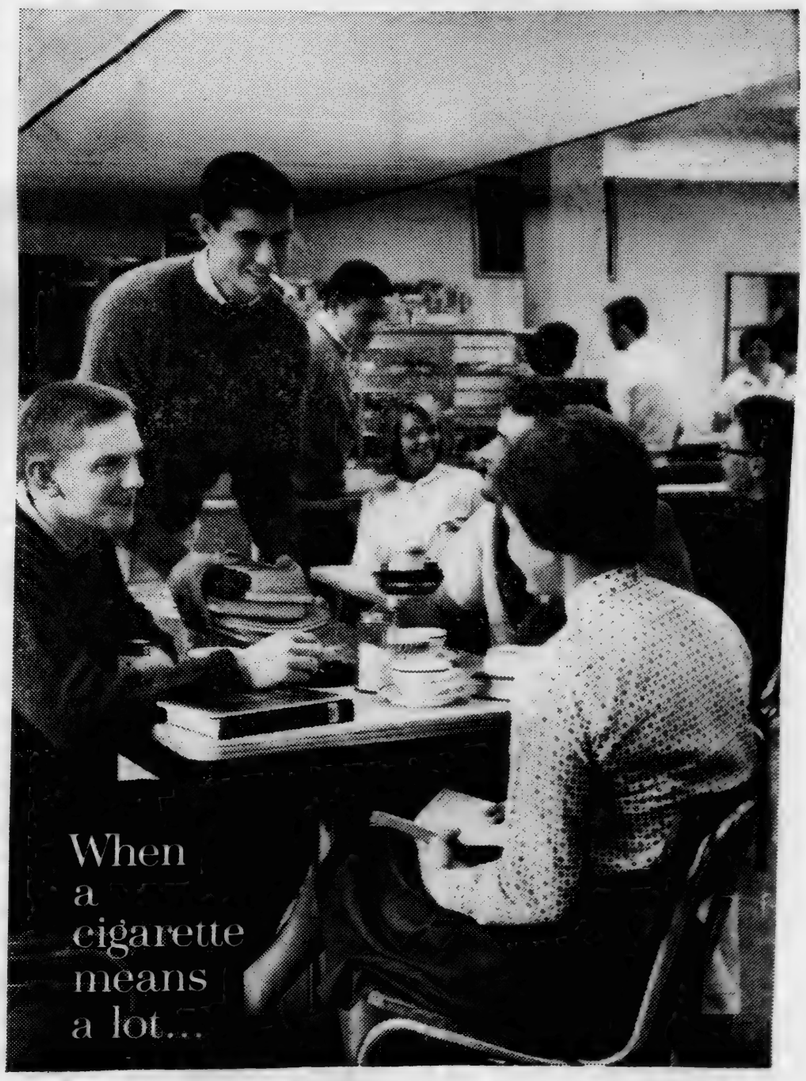
Wake Forest threatened, after taking a later punt on the Carolina 45, when Piccolo carried for 17 yards. But tough center Bob Zaback intercepted at the Carolina 18 to end the threat and start the second Carolina touchdown drive.

Roger Smith started the march by circling left end for 15. Edge passed to Lacey for 12 and a first down, but the Tar Heels were penalized 15 yards. The play counted, and UNC had a first and 25 on the NC 37.

On third down, after two incomplete passes, Edge rambled for the longest run of the day, a 35-yarder. He then hit Lacey for 24 yards, carrying to the Wake 4-yard line. On third down from the four, Jackson burst off the left side for the score.



Edge flipped a pass to Roger Smith for the extra points, putting Carolina ahead for the first time, 15-14, with 1:36 to go in the third quarter.

Wake Forest halfback Welborn fumbled the kickoff and John Hammett recovered, setting up the third Carolina score. The running of Willard and Jackson carried to the five, from which Edge threw the pass to Lacey in the end zone. Faking a flare pass to Jackson, he lobbed the ball toward Lacey and the big end took it easily. A variation of the same play with the same actors added another two pointer to make the score 23-14.

Further excitement was added later in the game as Joe Craver intercepted a Wake pass on the Carolina 38 and returned it 50 yards, almost going for a fourth score. But time ran out before the Tar Heels could capitalize.

U. S. Promises Aid To India Against Reds

NEW DELHI (UPI) — Prime Minister Jawaharlal Nehru Monday asked for and was promised immediate U. S. military aid to fight Chinese Communists in the undeclared border war in which more than 5,000 Indians and Chinese have been reported killed or missing in action. The U. S. embassy said Nehru in a conference with Ambassador John Kenneth Galbraith asked for infantry weapons which could be brought in by American airlift by the end of the week from such U. S. supply points as Japan, Okinawa or Thailand.

The wanted weapons are mortars, machineguns, rifles and portable artillery for the fighting taking place 15,000 feet up in the Himalayas. The undisclosed aid terms left the way open for bigger weapons later if needed.

Reliable sources said Nehru also made similar requests for urgent military aid to the British, French and Canadian governments. It was believed they also would aid India in the fight against troops who have poured across the frontier along a 1,000-mile section of the border.

Indian Troops Killed

An Indian Defense Department spokesman announced Monday that India had lost up to 2,500 troops killed or missing in action during the past 10 days. He said the Chinese losses were "much heavier." The figures did not include the thousands of wounded.

The spokesman said the heaviest fighting was in the Ladakh area, north of Kashmir and at the extreme western end of the border, where the Indians appeared to have lost all of the southern tip of Ladakh on both sides of the Indus River.

The Chinese exerted "considerable pressure" with fresh troops, according to the spokesman and the Indians were forced to withdraw from Damchok and Jara La. Jara La is a pass leading into India through the snow-covered Himalayas from China and is eight miles northeast of Damchok in the upper Indus River valley.

Kennedy Sends Letter

The Indian militia there fought with such commandable courage and determination the units have been accorded regular army status. They will be known as "Ladakh scouts" with the same pay as the regular army, the spokesman said.

A spokesman for the foreign affairs ministry said Galbraith had called on Nehru and delivered a letter from President Kennedy extending U. S. "sympathy and support in the crisis facing India."

The Kennedy message was in response to one Nehru sent Saturday explaining "the serious situation created by the Chinese aggression on India which took the form of a massive attack on our defense forces and which could only have been made after careful preparations."

Legislative Interviews Set Today

Interviews are being conducted for State Student Legislation today and tomorrow between the hours of 2:30 and 4:30 in room 2 of Roland Parker in Graham Memorial.

A selections board composed of Beth Walker, Dave Williams, John Ulfelder and Scott Summers is interviewing students for a delegation to meet in Raleigh Nov. 29, Dec. 1.

Delegates from throughout the state will meet to discuss matters of student importance. Summers said, "The legislature affords an excellent opportunity for the student to participate in open discussion with other students. In addition, the student will come in contact with parliamentary forms and procedure." The legislature will be conducted the same as the N. C. State Legislature.

Guest speakers are to include Gov. Terry Sanford, and David Sincendivers, proposed director of the Voice of America Station to be opened soon in Greenville, N. C. Also, prominent state and National political figures will attend the banquet to be held Friday night.

Housing and transportation will be provided for official delegates and alternates.

Summers said, "We would like to urge all interested students to come by and be interviewed for selection as a delegate to SSL."

Thant To Observe Base Dismantling

UNITED NATIONS, N. Y. (UPI) —Acting Secretary General Thant held a final round of negotiations Monday preparatory to a quick trip to Havana to arrange for U.N. observation of the dismantling of Soviet missile bases in Cuba.

Although Soviet Premier Nikita S. Khrushchev informed President Kennedy Sunday that he had ordered the bases dismantled and shipped back to Russia, U. S. spokesmen here and in Washington had no word that work on their removal had begun.

Until "effective inspection" of the dismantling of the Soviet war bases is arranged, U. S. warships blockading Cuba will remain "on station," the Defense Department said. Aerial surveillance of the island was reported at a temporary standstill.

President Kennedy ordered Gen. Lauris Norstad, due for retirement on Wednesday, to remain in his post as supreme allied commander of NATO forces in Europe for another 90 days because of the crisis.

Kennedy, Council Meet

The President met with members of the National Security Council, which has been a daily occurrence since the crisis developed last Monday, and conferred with Adm. George M. Anderson, chief of naval operations, and Gen. David Shoup, Marine corps commandant whose forces would most likely have been called into action if the United States had decided on military measures to end the threat from the Cuban bases.

It was stated authoritatively in Washington that U. S. military action was perilously close when Khrushchev announced his decision to remove the bases.

The White House and the State Department studiously ignored Castro's demand that the United States get out of its great naval base at Guantanamo Bay. There was no indication that the demand had been filed formally here.

Committee Named

Kennedy appointed a three-man coordinating committee to handle developments involved in "the conclusion of the Cuban crisis" and to negotiate for "effective" U.N. inspection of the removal of the bases.

The committee members are John J. McCloy, who has been acting as a special aide on the crisis negotiations here, Undersecretary of State George W. Ball and Deputy Defense Secretay Roswell L. Gilpatric.

Thant planned to leave Tuesday for two or three days of talks with Castro, who, dispite Khrushchev's announced willingness to accept U.N. inspection, had not yet agreed to admit U.N. observers to Cuba.

Thant Plans For Visit

It was understood that Thant and a party of some 18 persons would travel to Havana on a Panair do Brasil Caravelle chartered by the Cuban government. Travelling with him will be undersecretaries Omar Loutfi of the United Arab Republic, in charge of U.N. disarmament developments, and Hernane Tavares de Sa of Brasil, top-ranking Latin American secretariat member who is in charge of public information.

Others to travel with Thant are three top military men: Brig. Indar Jit Rikye of India, his personal military adviser; Lt. Col. Dag Inge Stiernspetz of Sweden and Maj. Yilma Aloumu of Ethiopia. There were reports that Gen. Albina da Silva of Brazil would join them in Havana.

Declines To Comment

Thant was sident about his plans, but informed sources said he hoped to get Castro's quick acceptance of U.N. observers and to leave a nucleus of an inspection group there.

Thant saw Soviet Deputy Foreign Minister Vasily V. Kuznetsov for two hours and 10 minutes Monday morning. This was the longest single session of the private negotiations be started last Friday.

Kuznetsov, sent by Khrushchev to take over from Soviet Deputy Foreign Minister Valerian A. Zorin—who has doggedly denied the existence of Russian war bases in Cuba—emerged smiling from the conference. He described the session as "an interesting and useful talk."

Sabotage Threat Reported In Cuba

MEXICO CITY (UPI) — The threat of wide-spread Communist sabotage and the increasingly apparent control of the Soviet Union over Cuba may lead to a total diplomatic quarantine of Cuba by the Organization of American States OAS, diplomatic sources said Monday.

U. S. ambassadors throughout the hemisphere have been warning chanceries to prepare for possible Havana - ordered terrorism since President Kennedy's Oct. 22 speech establishing the Cuban blockade.

Venezuela Sunday blamed the Marcaibo oilfield sabotages on code radio messages sent from Cuba to Communists agents. Cuba's loss of control over her foreign and defense policies and any Cuban-inspired sabotage, would constitute violation of the principle of non-intervention. It is this principle that has caused several nations to resist collective action against Cuba, diplomats here said.

Mexico Supports U. S.

The Mexican government, which in the past had been opposed to any action against Castro, has vowed its firm support to President Kennedy's position that the Soviet missile bases have to be removed from Cuba at all costs. Diplomats here expect the Organization of American States OAS to call another meeting on Cuba and possibly demand a total diplomatic quarantine of the Communist-controlled island. Five nations of the OAS still maintain relations with Cuba: Mexico, Brazil, Bolivia, Uruguay and Chile. The feeling in diplomatic quarters here is that Soviet domination over the Cuban regime—as manifested by Khrushchev's unilateral decision to remove the bases—is now clear, qualifying a re-examination of the Cuban case by the OAS.

Poses Question

The main question posed in official quarters was whether the Soviet decision to remove the missiles under international inspection, after Castro rejected the step, had created a split between Moscow and Havana. This could be expected to geneate new tensions between the old-line Communists and the "melons" of the Castro regime.

The old-liners can be expected to follow the Moscow-line faithfully. Their veteran leader, Blas Orca, applauded the Soviet move to remove the bases in comments to reporters in Copenhagen last night. "Melons"—green with the uniform of the rebal army on the outside, and red inside—is a word coined by Castro's labor minister Maj. Agustin Martinez Sanchez. It is used to describe Fidel and his potentially non - doctrinated Communists.

Gen. Norstad Will Remain In Europe

PARIS (UPI)—The North Atlantic Treaty Organization NATO announced Monday that U. S. Gen. Lauris Norstad would stay on as supereme Allied commander in Europe until Jan. 1. NATO sources said he delayed his retirement by two months because of the critical world situation.

Norstad, supreme Allied commander in Europe for the last six years, had been scheduled to turn over his job to U. S. Gen. Lyman L. Lemnitzer on Wednesday. But a communique issued from the NATO Permanent Council headquarters here said:

"The North Atlantic Council has decided to delay until Jan. 1, 1963, the replacement of Gen. Norstad, supreme commander of Allied forces in Europe, by Gen. Lemnitzer."

The last-minute decision to hold Norstad on the job was made with President Kennedy's approval, NATO sources said, because of the critical world situation—particularly NATO concern for its far-flung bases.

New Left To Form Seminar On Disarming

Pat Cusick, a member of the Executive Committee of the New Left Club, announced the formation of a weekly seminar on disarmament to be held every Tuesday at 7:30 p.m.

The committee, according to Cusick, has a two-fold purpose: to discuss the thinking of a man in the atomic age in relation to thermonuclear warfare, and to examine the means which individuals may use to bring about disarmament.

In explaining the goals of the seminar, Cusick quoted the late Albert Einstein, who said, "With the advent of atomic energy a new dimension has entered warfare — everything has changed execpt our thinking. If mankind is to survive, our thinking must also change."

"Our primary aim," said Cusick, "is to examine our thinking in relation to this new dimension." Cusick said that the meeting will be open, but that he would like to extend a special invitation to all those who are opposed to "brinkmanship" and nuclear warfare, or to anyone who has not committed himself to one side or the other.

"Actually," said Cusick, "the person who does not commit himself is directly supporting the actions of those who are leading us to inevitable destruction."

The first meeting of the disarmament seminar will be sponsored by the New Left Club tonight in Roland Parker 3, Graham Memorial, at 7:30.

Adenauer Said Cautious On Cuban Deal

BONN (UPI)—Chancellor Konrad Adenauer, meeting with his cabinet in extraordinary sessions, was reported to have adopted an attitude of extreme caution Monday toward the Soviet announcement it will withdraw missile bases from Cuba.

A spokesman said Adenauer also may comply with President Kennedy's request that West Germany increase its planned defense expenditure. Possible repercussions in Berlin from the Cuban crisis was stated as the reason for Adenauer's reconsideration.

The spokesman said Adenauer is willing to discuss the subject in detail when he goes to Washington Nov. 7 to see Kennedy. The sources said Kennedy has told Adenauer he sees no reason for postponing the trip to Washington. Adenauer and his government also were reported to have taken the stand that Premier Nikita S. Khrushchev cannot expect western concessions at any negotiations because of his Cuban decision.

Government spokesman Karl Guenther von Hase said, "The Cuban affair certainly is not concluded and there is still cause for concern."

"There has been a change in the situation which could lead to possible improvement," Hase said. He refused to be more optimistic.

Hase said the cabinet empowered defense minister Franz-Josef Strauss to take a series of measures to increase defense readiness. He declined to elaborate. Hase then delivered what amounted to a clear warning to Khrushchev not to expect any Western concessions.

"If one party withdraws from an illegally developed position, that party cannot expect to see that honored as a prior concession in the next round of talks," Hase said.

Mayes Speaks Tonight On Church, Negroes

Dr. Benjamine Mayes, president of Morehead College in Atlanta, Ga., will speak on "The Southern Church and the Changing Status of Negroes," tonight at 8:00 in Gerrard Hall.

He is recognized as a spokesman and leader in applying Christian principles to problems of human relations, and has written a book entitled "The Christian Way and Race Relations."

Last night D. Mayes spoke on the changing status of Southern Negroes. The lectures are being sponsored by the Binkley Baptist Church, for the interest of the community.

Student Legislature Votes Tonight On Open Trials In Special Session

By HARRY DeLUNG

"Open" trials legislation will be considered by Student Legislature in a special session tonight.

Dave Williams (SP) has said that he will oppose allowing anyone to speak on the bill who is not a member of the body. He sighted the large amount of time spent last Thursday by the chairmen of the men's and women's councils, Walt Dellinger and Bev Haynes, and others who "should have expressed themselves at the committee meetings." Williams said that the legislators could present the issues adequately themselves at tonight's session.

The bill, which provides for campus approval of a constitutional amendment, is an amended version of one introduced over two weeks ago by Charles Cooper for Bill Hobbs and Walt Dellinger. If passed, the campus will decide in fall elections if they want all honor council trials "open", except when the defendant objects.

The bill originally provided for all trials to be "open" except when an appeals board approved a defendant's objection. In the present version, there is no appeals board, and the defendant would have the final decision.

"Open" trials means that two reporters from the DTH would be present, and would report the trial without using the names of any defendants or witnesses.

A proposed amendment to the bill giving the campus four alternatives concerning open trials was defeated by legislature's judicial committee yesterday. Rufus Edmisten (SP) explained that by such a change, all students could determine to what extent they wanted the trials to be open.

The committee reported the bill out favorably, and in substantially the same form in which it was referred back to the committee at last Thursday's session. Minor stylistic changes were made by Arthus Hays (SP).

Salaries Of UNC Grads Show Rise

The job placement picture for graduates of the University has been "quite favorable" over the past year — and "salaries have continued to climb," according to Joe M. Galloway, director of the University's Placement Service.

"Salaries for beginning jobs, both in and out of the state, show a considerable increase over those of 1961," he said. His report covers the period October 19611 through September 1962.

He pointed out, however, that last year was one of "uncertainty and indecision on part of the student." This, he believes, is because the senior class last year was smaller and also because more men were subject to earlier military duty than in recent years.

Nevertheless, more company representatives than ever before come to the UNC campus to conduct student interviews. A total of 420 company visits were scheduled for the period.

"The Placement Service has a wide range of employers visiting the campus in search of men and women with potential," Mr. Galloway said.

"These recruiters represent the gamut from large industrial organizations (like G. E.) to governmental representatives (from national, state, and local governments) to non-profit, social organizations, such as the Boy Scouts of America."

Companies sending representatives included: Proctor and Gamble, General Electric, Westinghouse, IBM, Eastman Corporation, Burlington Industries, Chemstrand, Carolina Power and Light, J. B. Ivey and Co., and Wachovia Bank and Trust—to name a few.

But students were "more selective in their interviews" and an increasing number weighed carefully "the possibilities of taking graduate work instead of a job."

According to Mr. Galloway's report, the median monthly salary for men landing jobs in North Carolina was $415—while those employed outside the state received $455. The median salary for men (irrespective of job location) was 436.

The above figures are for 1962 BA and BS men graduates and returning veterans who took beginning jobs in business, industry and government.

Graduates with master degrees in business administration received monthly salaries ranging from $450 to $700, while the median was $585.

For 1962 women graduates, the lowest salary reported was $236 per month, the highest, $530. The median salary was $320.

The median salary for men and women graduates and graduate students who became high school or prep school teachers was $414; college instructors, $547; and assistant professors, $666.

In the teaching field, 21 North Carolina residents took jobs in the state, while 18 chose jobs out of state. In non-teaching fields, 102 state residents took jobs within North Carolina, while 58 found jobs outside the state.

Y Forms Committee For Artist Study

Gil Stallings, YMCA President, and Mike Lawler, Vice-president of the Student Body, announced yesterday the formation of a "Y" committee to investigate the feasibility of obtaining an artist in residence for the University.

The formation of the committee, according to Lawler, is the result of interest shown by students he met in his campaign last spring and a resolution passed by the Student Legislature on September 27.

The committee is attempting to determine whether the English Department of the University and the administration will give its support to the program, and how people in those departments feel about the idea of having an artist-in-residence.

Stallings said that the committee has drawn up a preliminary list of writers who might be available to teach at least one course a semester for undergraduates. Three writers mentioned were Flannery O'Conner, James Baldwin, and William Styron.

"The program," said Stallings, "will probably start as a one year experiment and may be paid for by the students and Student Government." At present, according to Stallings, there is no established way to finance the artist-in-residence experiment.

Lawler also said that he had spoken to Dr. Cotton in the English Department about the program. Cotten said that several members of the department have been interested in such a program, but finances and student initiative have been lacking before now.

Stallings said that he also wished to stress the importance of student participation in the program. "Anyone interested in working on the committee should contact me through the YMCA," he said.

Coenen Gets Honors From German Dept.

Thirty-two years a teacher, ten years an editor.

That describes a University faculty member whose work is believed to have advanced the cause of Germanic languages not only at the University here but everywhere.

Dr. Frederic E. Coenen was this week lauded for his achievements as editor of the "University of North Carolina Studies in the Germanic Languages and Literature." For ten years Dr. Coenen has had editorship of the series regarded as one of national and international significance in its field.

At a testimonial dinner held last Friday at the University, Kenan Professor John G. Kunstmann, chairman of the UNC Department of Germanic Languages, cited Dr. Coenen for his success as editor of the series.

As editor, Dr. Kunstmann said, Dr. Coenen "has developed a system of advertising and selling the Series which is the envy of commercial publishers and University Presses. Through his work he has made known the name and extended the usefulness and the prestige of the Department of Germanic Languages and of the University of North Carolina here and abroad."

The series of publications, 32 of which have been published during the editorship of Dr. Coenen was established in 1949. It publishes critical monographs on problems of literary history and translations of German texts not otherwise available.

The University professor spends an average of 20 to 25 hours each week in reading manuscripts to be considered for publication. In addition he teaches a full load of courses.

Members of the editorial board of the department series who particularly cited the editor-teacher were Prof. Kunstmann, Kenan Professor Werner P. Frederich, Kenan Professor George S. Lane, and Professor Herbert W. Reichert.

Statement Made On Late Permission

Should any campus organization wish to request late permission for University coeds who may be in attendance at a function sponsored by that organization the president or head of such organization is asked to contact personally either Diane Blanton, Chairman of Women's Residence Council (Chi Omega House, Tel. 968-9005), or Mrs. J. M. Alexander, Assistant to the Dean of Women (202 South Building, Tel. 942-3562). Such requests for coed late permission should be made AT LEAST FIVE DAYS IN ADVANCE, so as to provide an adequate amount of time for clearance and for the issuing of the information to the women's dormitories and sorority houses. Sufficient reason for request of such permission must be presented

The Women's Residence Council emphasizes that such requests from campus orgnizations will normally be granted only if this procedure is followed. Late permission given will not exceed one hour, according to the Women's Residence Council.

Honor System: Is It Yours?

Most student Legislators apparently have agreed that honor council trials open to two Daily Tar Heel reporters, will be an improvement over the present situation. At tonight's special session they will decide the more controversial question of which trials should be opened and which ones left closed, and how this is to be done.

A legislative committee last week amended the "open" trials bill to allow any defendant (for any reason at all, or no reason) the power to have his trial closed. The original bill had provided that a three-man board, including the honor council chairman, should decide if the student had just cause for wanting a closed trial.

To justify this modification, the magical words "rights of the individual" have been used again and again. Supporters of "open" trials have been accused of "trying to take away the rights of the individual." This view proceeds from an apparent conviction that the honor system was instituted to protect the rights of individual defendants. But, obviously, if the rights of the defendant were the primary aim of the system, there would be no system at all.

The primary goal of the system is to afford protection for the student body against cheating by individual students (and the resultant unfair academic advantage). At the same time, the system's purpose is to instill a sense of honor into the students as a whole, not just into the few students who have cheated. The honor system is the property and potential protector of the student body, not of a small minority.

* * *

Supporters of "open" trials (which are open only to two reporters bound on their honor not to report names of defendants or any identifying facts) think it is the best way to insure the widest possible understanding of and respect for the honor system by the largest possible number of the student body.

* * *

One of the most popular arguments against acceptance of "open" trials in the original form was the line that the Tar Heel is "trying to take over the honor system" — which brings into focus that old image of the Tar Heel working in league with the devil to ruin the patient work of God's children (the honor councils.)

Many student "leaders" have rallied around this viewpoint and have glibly predicted the manner in which the newspaper will distort all open honor council trials, will cover only the trials it wants to, will use names, will sensationalize, will do this or do that. . . .

Rubbish.

Anyone who is interested may inspect the back files of the Tar Heel to see how past "open" trials have been handled. Reporters will abide by any constitutionally-valid restrictions put on them.

No one ever bothered to contact the Tar Heel about these facts because they are immaterial. Immaterial for those "leaders" who have already made up their minds against "open" trials, and are attempting to paint a dark, conspiratorial image of all supporters of public information through "open" trials.

* * *

Supporters of the premise that the student body has a right to know how its honor councils are acting, are not politicians. The defenders of the closed trial status quo — and those who support the halfway measure of "open" trials unless defendants want them closed — are politicians.

So they will probably win. And things will stay just like they are now.

You, the student, have an honor system about which you are allowed to know very little and generally hear about only by rumor. You have an honor system which is built upon public acceptance and performance, and yet, the public has no idea of what are the standards and what is expected of them.

You, the student, elect members of the honor councils every year, and have no idea of how they perform their duties.

This is supposed to be your honor system, but is it?

An honor system must be built upon trust in the public, and those who oppose "open" trials have no trust in the public. (JC)

Attention, Candidates

In order to insure equitable representation for all candidates on the pages of the Daily Tar Heel, the editors have set up the following policies for handling all future fall-campaign statements:

Candidates for office of president of the freshman, sophomore, and junior classes will be given space for statements of not more than 300 words, for publication on Thursday and Saturday. Therefore, because of deadlines, the statements must be in the DTH office no later than 3 p.m. on Wednesday and Friday.

Candidates for other class offices may make one statement — 200 words in length—to be printed on Friday, which must be in to the DTH by Wednesday at 6 p.m. This space may be used by the Student or University parties, if the candidates so desire.

Independent candidate for offices will be given equal space, and are subject to the same deadlines.

The SP and UP will be allowed space for two statements each, each of which may not be over 300 words in length, for the Thursday and Saturday issues. They must be in the DTH office by 3 p.m. on Wednesday and Friday.

Candidates are asked to contain their statements to these lengths and dates. Candidates' statements will run on page one and other news pages, leaving the editorial page free for debates by other interested students.—The Editors.

UNC Author Of Race Report Long-Standing Segregationist

(Eds' Note: The following article on UNC Professor W. C. George's report on race to the state of Alabama is taken from the ATLANTA JOURNAL. The author, Fred Powledge, is a UNC graduate and former editor of the DAILY TAR HEEL.)

By FRED POWLEDGE

Dr. W. C. George, the retired anatomy professor who recently presented a $3,000 report on race to the state of Alabama, has been presenting the same line of reasoning to the public for more than a decade.

Dr. George, a 74-year-old retired member of the University of North Carolina medical school faculty, last week delivered the report to the governor-elect of Alabama, George Wallace. The essence of the report was that Negroes are inferior to white people.

The state, through Gov. John Patterson paid $3,000 from its emergency fund for the report, which has taken Dr. George about two years to complete. Exactly how the report will be used has not been announced.

FOR MANY YEARS Dr. George has been an active segregationist. In the mid-1950s, when he was conducting research in the UNC medical school, he organized the Patriots of North Carolina, Inc., an anti-integration group which counted among its aims:

". . . To promote the value of maintaining the existing social structure in North Carolina in which two distinct races heretofore have lived as separate groups. . . ."

It was about that time that Dr. George's theories about racial inferiority reached headline proportions. He was quoted in several nationally circulated publications as saying that Negroes were unquestionably biologically inferior to whites.

Many of the points he raised then are made again in his report to the State of Alabama, according to wire service accounts of the recent report.

One wire services gave these as Dr. George's basic points in the Alabama report:

—Individuals are not born with equal biological endowments.

—Negroes are about 200,000 years behind whites in developing brain structures associated with higher mentality.

—Tests show only 10 to 20 per cent of Negroes examined exceed the white intelligence median.

—In the same tests, six times as many Negroes as whites fell below an intelligent quotient of 70.

—Six times as many whites as Negroes fell in the gifted child category.

—When social and economic factors are equalized, significent differences in favor of whites do not disappear.

—Intermarriage leads to deterioration of races.

IN AN UNDATED report by Dr. George several years ago, entitled "The Race Problem from the Standpoint of One Who is Concerned about the Evils of Miscegenation," the doctor makes many similar points. He said:

—The "so-called Christian policy of equality is based on falsehood.

—The "conception that all men are born equal biologically" is a "fallacy."

—Experiments with animals showed that some basic characteristics were not influenced by environment, but by heredity.

THE EARLIER REPORT, according to one UNC professor who has followed Dr. George's career with interest, was issued in the late 1940s.

Dr. George's conclusion was that, while the Negro should be treated with courtesy, consideration and generosity," he should never be allowed to enter the white social sphere.

Several other academic people have issued statements since then, rejecting Dr. George's theories.

In 1955, a University of North Carolina anthropologist, Dr. John Gillin, said "science has proved no such thing" as racial inferiority.

Last week, an Emory University professor, Dr. Charles C. Perkins Jr., said about the same thing.

Two national anthropological organizations have condemned the theory that Negroes are biologically inferior. The American Anthropological Association last year passed a resolution saying, "All races possess the abilities needed to participate fully in the democratic way of life and in modern technological civilization."

The American Association of Physical Anthropologists, in a resolution adopted this year, said it deplored "the misuse of science to advocate racism."

Road, Americans

Road To Dorms Like Le Mans

To the Editors:

At the risk of being mowed down gangster-style in retaliation, I would like to relate a little incident to you. I am a resident of Avery. Having learned in plane geometry that a straight line is the shortest distance between two points, I find it convenient to walk to and from campus on the nameless road that leads from South Raleigh Road to Avery. On Thursday afternoon I was walking blissfully to campus along this road facing traffic (as I was taught all good pedestrians should) when I was approached by a white Corvette with Virginia license plates winding out on the hairpin curves. The driver suddenly realized that the road did not belong to him, because another car was approaching from the opposite direction. In order to miss this car, "Mr. Daytona" swerved so close to me that he almost ruined the shine on my right shoe. I am sure that the driver of the bomb was considering everyone's good when he decided that if necessary it would be better to hit me than to cause a head-on collision, but I am 100% altruistic. It would be a shame, after spending three years in the Army and getting out alive, to be wiped off the map while peacefully pursuing an education. I'll be glad to tell this demon my sentiments in person, but I'm not going to go out of my way to find him. In the meantime, I would like to appeal to all guilty drivers on that little road to slow down to at least 20 MPH. If their cars are too powerful to go that slow, here's an alternate suggestion. Let's fence off the road, name it the Tar-heel Speedway, and build a four-lane sidewalk for the poor people of Ehringhaus, Craig, Avery, Parker, and Teague who have to risk their life to get to class.

—Tom Glymph, Jr.

Americans Must Be Brave Always

During this time of crisis we Americans must decide what road we want to choose for our future. Most of us have chosen the path that if worse must come to worse, let it come now. Yet few of us really know what is or how bad is the worse. We know there will be great damage, destruction, and suffering if there is a war. Nevertheless, isn't it better to be red than dead? A dead man can do nothing, a live man can.

How foolish we would be if we stuck to that apology There are Americans who do believe it is better to be red than dead. Ben Franklin sums up the essence of being an American in his quote, "They that can give up essential liberty to obtain a little temporary safety, deserve neither liberty nor safety." This is the fundamental idea of an American. Other countries have other ideals and concepts, but this saying of Franklin is what we Americans should stand for in good times and in crises. For "the humblest citizen of all the land when clad in the armor of a righteous cause, is stronger than all the hosts of error." Either we Americans must be like this citizen, or we should not ever concern ourselves with Cuba, Berlin, Laos, or the world by surrendering ourselves to Russia.

It is better to be brave than slave, for freedom is what makes tomorrow worth waiting for.

—Raymond Burwell

THE ONE AND ONLY REAL TRUTH

By BENEDICT BURR

HAVANA (DTH)—Immediately after Kennedy's first speech on Cuba, nine DTH reporters, including myself, left for Havana. After departing by boat from Hogan's Lake, we got to Fort Lauderdale yesterday morning. There we rented a Hertz Volkswagen and drove to Havana.

Like all ships (?) entering the harbor, we were stopped and searched. But since nothing was found except four cases of Bud, an extra pair of Weejuns, and some molotov cocktails left over from Ole Miss, we were allowed to pass.

Not wanting to waste any time, we promptly began looking for Fidel. We found him playing a pinball machine in the employees' lounge of a nationalized fertilizer factory.

Castro was at first enraged at the sight of we capitalists, but when he found out that we were from the Daily Tar Heel, he embraced us fondly. So fondly, in fact, that one of the co-editors suffered beard-abrasions and several vermin bites.

Expressing surprising disconcern about the events taking place around his island, Fidel chatted with us as he deftly picked off escaping workers with an M-1 rifle left over from Batista's days.

"JFK isn't really serious about this," he observed. "As I explained in my last 87 hour television message to The People, it's only a political move for the fall elections . . . one of the weakenesses of the capitalist-democratic system."

Fidel seemed to be getting reckless with his shooting, so we decided to see some more of the island. Two reporters were killed by stray bullets as we bade him adue and headed for the hills.

High in the mountains east of Havana, we observed that magnificent scenery and marveled at the clever cardboard models of nuclear missile bases. Below us in the valley, soldiers at Guantanamo were busily looking through telescopes; also marveling.

Returning to town, we passed a cheerful group of communal laborers who were painting "Miami" on a vessel they had constructed. Pausing for a moment to talk with them, we found that they were building the boat for Castro, who had told them that "Miami" was his mother's maiden name.

Not wishing to disillusion them, we moved on without mentioning a city in southern Florida. But, we did recognize our chance for a big story.

Investigation in the Havana slums revealed, among other things, that a Cuban invasion is planned for Florida next week. It will be termed a "preventative" move, since Castro is alarmed about the arms build-up in the States, and wants to crush it before it endangers the entire hemisphere.

Since Miami will obviously be the next scene of battle, we plan to disburse to the Fountainbleau, where we will remain at DTH expenses until Castro invades.

JFK & Ole Miss: Moral Disaster Into Moral Triumph

By STEPHANIE GERIUS
In The Village Voice

UNITED NATIONS: The international repercussions of Mississippi's madness may turn out to be a classic in the annals of political paradox.

An entire state ran amok, the formadable military and judicial machinery of one of the most powerful nations in history had to be marshalled to restore law and order, two men were killed, one of them a foreign national—all over the university admission of one American citizen of African descent—and what is the result? The United States is made the subject of more praise and plaudits by the nations of black Africa than it has been over almost any other issue in recent years. In the general debate in the United Nations General Assembly and in the U. N.'s Special Political Committee, African and Asian delegates rose to commend this country.

"The African by nature is a very reasonable man," explained the head of one African delegation, considered by his colleagues, including those from his own continent, as one of the most unreasonable of men. But even this diplomatic storm center was a model of calm and sweet reason on the subject of Mississippi

Conservative Society

"We know racism exists in the United States. We know it is based in history, human psychology, and social norms. We know that man in society is conservative and prejudiced and that, like a child, he wants things his own way," he patiently pointed out to this somewhat less patient American liberal. "As long as the Administration is doing something to solve this difficult problem, it is not in our nature to embarrass them," said the man who just three days before had embarrassed the entire United Nations by precipitating an unexpected political showdown.

Whole Machinery

The key, of course, to his attitude and that of the other Africans was contained in his observation — one that was to be heard again and again from the representatives of the black nations—that "the whole machinery of state was set in motion for the rights of one African, and that requires courage, and conviction. A less courageous man than Kennedy might have found another way. If he had fallen short of his responsibilities, the reaction would have been different."

It is terribly important to the Africans, who share their continent with the officially racist Union of South Africa, that while segregation exists in this country, it is not the official policy of the United States government, and that, indeed, it is a practice that the government has moved against with the full force of arms.

South Africa

From the rostrum of the U. N. General Assembly, the Ambassador from Upper Volta, Frederic Guirma, declared:

"I would like to tell (the representative of South Africa) the difference between the United States, for instance, and South Africa. Indeed, in the United States segregation exists, and in some parts of the country it is even terrible. But what is important is that the Government of the United States did not make an institution of this. It does not praise this policy. On the contrary, it energetically fights it. For one small Negro to go to school, it threatens governors and judges with prison. It sends policemen to arrest a former General who does not understand anything about the worth of the human being. It sends troops to occupy the University of Mississippi in order to protect a Negro and to disperse a mob of hysterical demonstrators.

"President Kennedy is a great President, conscious and respectful of human dignity and worthy of being among the leaders of the free world."

An in the Special Political Committee debate on apartheid in the Union of South Africa:

Francois Ngyese, Director of The Congo's (Leopoldville) Ministry of Foreign Affairs, registered his delegation's appreciation for the "energetic intervention" in Mississippi of the President of the United States.

An Example

Dr. Abdul Hakim Tabibi of the Afghanistan delegation cited "the courageous stand of the United States in Mississippi" as an example for South Africa.

Mohammad Ali Massoud Ansari, Iran's Ambassador to Yugoslavia, also admonished South Africa to follow the example of the United States.

In private conversation, n African delegate of the younger, prouder, more impatient generation, despite his bitter admission that "until I came to this country I never realized that I was different from anybody else," joined in the chorus of praise for Kennedy.

And a high-ranking North African delegate who complained of the embarassment caused him by discrimination right here in New York — "When I invite (black) African delegates out I can take them only to Greenwich Village or Harlem" — rather than deploring the riots in Mississippi, applauded the action of the Administration.

In short, President Kennedy turned a moral disaster into a moral triumph for himself and the country. The first effects of the good will built up by his action in Mississippi may be felt in the response of the United Nations to his action on Cuba.

Coeds Invited Into Cotton Contest

The tour manager for the Maid of Cotton contest, Miss Betty Tucker, met with campus sorority presidents last week to encourage UNC coeds to enter the annual contest.

The dean of women, Katherine Carmichael, has issued the following statement concerning the contest: "I could not encourage a woman student of the University of North Carolina to enter the Maid of Cotton Contest, because successful entry means that woman student must withdraw from the University for a term.

"At the same time. I am happy to help girls gain information regarding the Maid of Cotton Contest."

The Maid of Cotton will travel in the United States, Canada, and overseas as fashion and goodwill ambassador of the American cotton industry.

To be eligible, a candidate must be: (1) born in one of the 19 cotton-producing states; (2) between the ages of 19 and 25; (3) at least 5 feet 5½ inches tall, and (4) single.

Application forms may be obtained from any of the sororities or dorms on campus. To be eligible for judging, this form must be completed and mailed by Dec. 1, 1962.

Twenty girls will be chosen for the national selection in Memphis, Tenn., and the 1963 Maid of Cotton will be chosen December 28.

The contest is sponsored annually by the National Cotton Council to advertise and encourage the use of cotton. Contestants will be judged on beauty, poise, personality, and background.

ACC Has Fared Poorly Against Outside Opponents

By CURRY KIRKPATRICK

Atlantic Coast Conference teams have not fared too well this season against non-conference foes.

ACC teams have played out of their league 19 times this year but have only a 6-12-1 record for the effort.

A look at the ACC opponents gives some clue to the cause of the sub-par record. Northwestern, Michigan State and Ohio State have been the Big Ten's representatives on the non-conference ledger while such powers as Southern California, Miami, Nebraska, Army and two Southeastern giants — Georgia Tech and Auburn — have also made their presence felt.

These nine teams have won every game against thir ACC counterparts. Only Duke has managed to beat a non-league team of any prominence. The Blue Devils have defeated both California and Florida and even these teams were underdogs at gametime. Duke's other out-of-conference game ended up in a 14-7 loss to Southern Cal.

A look at the individual ACC teams' records shows Virginia and Maryland with the only other non-league victories. The Cavaliers are 3-1 with wins over VMI, William & Mary and Davidson. Their loss was to Southern Conference leader, VPI.

Maryland is 1-1 outside the league. They beat SMU to open the season but later 'ost a 24-28 thriller to Miami in what was termed the best game ever played in the Orange Bowl.

UNC, Clemson, NC State and Wake Forest have lost every one of their non-league contests, while South Carolina can only boast of a tie.

Carolina had two traumatic experiences in a row when the Tar Heels were shell-shocked at Ohio State and Michigan State on successive Saturdays.

Clemson, Carolina's next opponent, has also had it rough in its ventures outside the league. The Tigers have lost to Georgia Tech, Georgia and Auburn and for the past three weeks, have failed to win in their own lair, "Death Valley."

State College dropped a heartbreaker to undefeated Nebraska and then played dead for Southern Mississippi. The Wolfpack is 2-0 in non-conference action.

Wake Forest was bombed by Army in its only trip outside the ACC. The next two weeks find the Demon Deacons against non-league foes Tennessee and VPI — not much chance for improvement.

South Carolina has the distinction of having played the nation's number one team, Northwestern, in its opener. The Gamecocks were passed by Tom Meyers, 37-20. Their other non-conference game resulted in a 7-7 tie with Georgia.

A-A Nominees Are Named

CHICAGO—Seventeen new players have been cited for early season performances by the American Football Coaches Association, it was announced by Billy Murray, AFCA president and Duke University coach.

Seven linemen and ten backs have been added to the roster of candidates for the 1962 All-America team—to be selected by the AFCA at the season's conclusion.

A total of 64 players—including 47 grid stars selected in a preseason poll of coaches—now comprise the nominating list for the 73rd consecutive squad of the nation's oldest and original All-America team.

Started by Walter Camp, in 1889, this coaches' All America team is sponsored by Eastman Kodak Company for the third consecutive year. More than 500 head college coaches, using evaluations furnished by analyzing many game movies, will select the honor team. Final balloting will be reviewed by the All-America Board of Coaches led by Murray. The first, second, and third All - America teams will be announced in the December 1 issue of TV Guide.

Moving into contention at end is unheralded junior college transfer Verne Burke of Oregon State. After three games, he grabbed the lead among the nation's pass catchers with 25 receptions. Burke caught eight passes in Oregon State's upset over Stanford.

Among emerging tackle stars are Scott Appleton, 6-3, 227-pounder from the University of Texas, Daryl Sanders (6-5 and 237) of Ohio State, and Fred Miller (6-5 and 227) of Louisiana State's defensively-tough Bengals. Sanders teams with Bob Vogel, a previously-announced candidate, to give Ohio State a two-man tackle entry in the AFCA All-America ratings.

At guard, Jack Cvercko, a 236-pound, 6-0 junior, has been a key lineman in the upsurge of the Northwestern Wildcats. Tom Hertz (212 and 5-10) of Missouri also has been cited by coaches for outstanding play.

Center Wayne Lee, a 6-2, 200-pounder from Oklahoma, has moved up to challenge for All-America recognition.

Two sophomore quarterbacks—Tom Myers of Northwestern and Joe Namath of Alabama — have been impressive with their early-season passing accuracy. Bill Lothridge of George Tech, an old-fashioned triple-threat, has had a hand or foot in virtually every point scored by the Georgians. Directing the powerful Arkansas attack is quarterback Billy Moore.

Five halfbacks have been recognized for their early-season performances. Eldon Fortie of Brigham Young, recovered from '61 injuries, moved ahead of all rushers for the first four games with 621 yards in 75 carries. UCLA's Kermit Alexander, an all-purpose back, dipped 45 yards for a touchdown in the Bruins' big upset over Ohio State.

Speedster Mel Renfro of Oregon and Byron Weaver of Houston—who set an alltime NCAA one-game record with five interceptions against Baylor — have also been nominated at halfback by the coaches.

Halfback Ron Budick of Michigan State moved up when he gained 207 yards against North Carolina. He broke a 12-yard record held by Sonny Grandelius of MSU.

TAR HEEL Sportscope

By Ed Dupree

The boys from Reynoldsville gave UNC a few anxious moments Saturday, but the Tar Heels finally ended their drought against the Demon Deacons.

With the score 14-7 in Wake Forest's favor at halftime, it seemed as though the Baptists might upset the Chapel Hillians for the third straight year. But two quick touchdowns decided the game in a hurry.

Rewatching the contest on WUNC-TV made the contest even more enjoyable. Bob Lacey's feats were fantastic—beautiful fakes preceding his pass catches, a one-handed stab at midfield.

But probably the most enjoyable part of the TV-viewing was watching the defendants try to keep up with Carolina's pass-catching ace.

When Bob caught the third TD pass he had to cut sharply to the left side of the end zone. He had no trouble doing this. But Wake's defensive man—speedy Donnie Frederick—did have trouble. He picked himself up and prepared to defend the extra point attempt.

This time Bob cut to the middle of the end zone and added two more points to his credit. Again Frederick had to pick himself up off the field.

The Tar Heel seniors probably wanted this win more than anyone else. They hadn't beaten the Deacs in a varsity contest.

Senior co-captain Joe Craver looked like a fullback when he intercepted a pass on the UNC 28 late in the game. Nine seconds later, after knocking a few Deacs out of his path, Joe had advanced the ball 50 yards into Wake Forest territory. It was evident that big Joe wanted a touchdown, and he almost made it.

Discouraging words: A Wake Forest student said after the game, "I never realized how good our school spirit was until I heard the Carolina student body."

His words were quite true. Carolina students have a habit of clamming up when their team is behind. And when the ones with any spirit in them clammed up, the Coach-Haters took over. Cries of "We want a new coach" and "Go to hell, Hickey" smelled up the entire student section.

Maybe we should send these foul-mouths to a place over in the next county. They might be happy there, for they can watch a winning football team. Me, I'll take Carolina and the Tar Heels and Coach Hickey—win or lose.

I suggest that Hickey-haters apply for seats in the Duke section for our next and last home football game. There they can yell insults at Carolina to their hearts content, and they'll be able to feel right at home.

Or maybe they would like to attend a special session with the football players who think so much of Jim. The players themselves should know what they want and they are more than satisfied with their coach. Ask the players if they want a new coach, foul-mouths. You'll get your answer.

Over 100 Students Working To Pass Court Reform Plan; Wheless Heading Committee

By BILL DOWELL

Over 100 UNC students have been working with the Student Committees for Court Improvement to raise support for constitutional amendments providing for a unified district court system in North Carolina. The amendments go before the public for approval in the Nov. 6 elections.

The court improvement committee, headed by Lee Rainey and Dwight Wheless, is publicising the exact nature of the amendments by having students write home to parents, neighbors, town newspapers and people of influence. Lee Rainey estimated, yesterday, that at least 2000 people not connected with the University will be contacted by publicity sponsored by the committee.

Before the elections are held an estimated 300 or more students should be writing letters in support of the amendments, according to Dwight Wheless.

The amendments provide for the amalgamation of all North Carolina courts into a single General Court of Justice.

A District Court division would combine an estimated 400 "recorder" courts and 900 justices of the peace into a unified district system.

The Supreme Court would change its name to the Appelate Court, but would otherwise be unchanged except that the General Assembly would be given permission to increase its membership to 9 members.

The amalgamation of justices of the peace and "recorder" courts into district court division is the most significant change. According to a survey conducted by the

Anne Carter Case Postponed, Will Be Heard Nov. 18

The appearance of former UNC student Anne Carter before a Wake County Superior Court has been postponed to November 18 of this year, according to Miss Carter's attorney, John Manning of Durham.

The case was originally scheduled for November 5, but has been postponed twice. The case originated before the UNC Women's Honor Council when a Latin instructor accused Miss Carter of handing in a set of answers in a make-up exam that corresponded to questions on the original test she had missed. The instructor took this as evidence that Miss Carter had obtained a copy of the original quiz and on the make-up exam was merely writing down answers without looking at the questions.

Miss Carter's father and lawyer took the case to Wake County Superior Court, contesting the authority of the student Honor Council to dismiss a student from the University.

In a recent pretrial hearing, a Wake County Superior Court judge postponed the case on the grounds that Honor Council testimony was confused and unclear.

Legislature Told Open Trials Incompatible With Courts

By HARRY DeLUNG

The compatibility of "Open" trials with federal and state courts was being debated in Student Legislature last night at 10:45. No vote had been taken.

At DTH deadline time, an amendment to the constitutional amendment for "open' 'trials was before the body. It provided that all honor council trials would be open to two DTH reporters unless an appeals board granted a defendents request for a closed trial.

Bob Jones Ind.), Ford Rowan (SP), Bill Hobbs, and Walt Dellinger had spoken in favor of the idea of open trials before Bev Haynes, chairman of the women's council, opened the issue of state and federal legal tradition.

It was apparent that some referendum for "open" trials would probably be passed. Miss Haynes opposed the appeals board, and mantained that the defendent should have the final decision on whether his trial was "open."

Speaker Mike Lawler (SP) cited a decision of the UNC Board of Trustees and the Chancellor that the honor system was not bound to the procedures of any other court system.

The debate, however, centered around the question of whether "open" trials violated the traditional rights of the defendent provided for in federal and state courts.

'Poverty In America' Topic Of Socialist's Speech Here

"Poverty in America" will be discussed by socialist Michael Harrington, former associate editor of The Catholic Worker and noted free lance writer, at 8 p.m. Thursday in Carroll Hall.

Harrington is expected to discuss the entire culture of poverty, and its psychological, as well as economic deprivations. He will also illustrate the method by which he believes the problems can be solved.

The speaker's latest book, The Other America, is an analysis of the culture of poverty. Harrington is co-author of Labor in a Free Society and has worked on a number of studies for the Fund for The Republic. These include the Fund's study of blacklisting in the broadcasting industries.

Harrington's lecture is being sponsored by the Carolina Forum. His last appearance before the Forum, a debate with Fulton Lewis III on the film "Operation Abolition," drew a capacity audience.

Partciularly active in the area of civil rights, Harrington has met Lewis several times in debate on the film.

A controversial figure, the outspoken Socialist editor and writer has often come under fire from several patriotic and right-wing organizations, and is considered one of the leading young Liberal spokesmen.

An exponent of Socialist evolution through the Democratic process, Harrington has repeatedly stressed that his political affiliations are not linked, nor is he in sympathy with the Communist Party.

He is expected to address himself to the question of how Socialist reform can aid the poverty-stricken, not only economically, but culturally.

Journalism Society Taps 7 Newcomers

The hall lent a solemn note to ceremonies performed in candlelight, which included an explanation of what Sigma Delta Chi stands for and how important it is for dedicated journalists to stand together for those things essential to keeping professional journalism on a high plane of integrity and leadership.

Highlighted with symbolism, the ceremonies told the initiates the code of Delta Sigma Chi, based on talent, energy and truth.

Chris Farran, president of Sigma Delta Chi, emphasized to the new members that "Selfishness has no part in our ambitions. We strive first to bring to journalism a definition of service worthy of a great and honorable profession; then we endeavor to translate that definition into fact by each of us devoting his best to his daily task."

Sigma Delta Chi was founded at DePauw University, Greencastle, Ind., in 1909 and since has grown steadily in prestige, until today it is the acknowledged leader in the fight for freedom of information and high professional ethics in the gathering and dissemination of that information. Well over a hundred undergraduate and professional chapters and thousands of members-at-large attents to its strength and national character.

Others participating in the ceremonies besides President Farran were: Vice President Bill Waumett, Secretary Owen Bishop, Bill Hobbs and Paul Houston. In attendance were Dr. John B. Adams, chapter faculty adviser; Dr. Norval Neil Luxon, dean of the School of Journalism; and Prof. Walter Spearman, former faculty adviser.

Sigma Delta Chi each year tries to sponsor several projects in conjunction with the Journalism school and the UNC Press Club. SDX and the Press Club hold joint meetings to hear speakers such as Chapel Hill novelist Richard McKenna, Raleigh News and Observer publisher Sam Reagan, and journalists from across the state.

Last year, for the first time, SDX spearheaded the publication of a journalism school annual, the Howl. The liberally-illustrated book was a "roaring success" according to its editors, and SDX hopes to repeat the surprise this year.

Sigma Delta Chi will hold its annual convention in Tulsa, Okla., Nov. 14-17, and Farran, Waumett, and Bishop will attend as delegates of the UNC chapter.

'Mark Twain' Will Appear Here Nov. 7

By MICKEY BLACKWELL

Mark Twain is coming to Chapel Hill.

Well, almost.

Hal Holbrook and his uncanny recreation of Mark Twain will be on the stage of Memorial Hall Wednesday, Nov. 7, at 8 p.m. The program is sponsored by the Graham Memorial Series and is free to all students.

Television appearances in this role began with a featured appearance on the Ed Sullivan Show in 1956. Further appearances followed on the Steve Allen, Jack Lescoulie, and Jack Parr editions of the "Tonight" show.

In May, 1958, Holbrook was featured as Mark Twain on an all-star "Wide Wide World" telecast entitled "The Sound of Laughter" with Bob Hope, Steve Allen, and Dave Garroway.

On April 6, 1959, "Mark Twain Tonight!" opened at the 41st Street Theatre in New York and was accorded a critical ovation such as few attractions have received in recent years. Richard Watts in the New York Post described it as "one of the most brilliant and delightful shows imaginable—the most fun I've had in the theatre for ages". Life called it "the greatest theatrical surprise of the year".

UP EXECS NAMED

Chanin requests that all members attend the first meeting Thursday night at 9 at Woodhouse Room of Graham Memorial.

THEFTS REPORTED

Dean Norval Neil Luxon of the Journalism School reported yesterday that equipment valued at more than $280 has been taken recently from Howell Hall.

Luxon noted that both the campus and Chapel Hill police are now investigating the thefts.

Luxon added, "For two years we were very fortunate in that no thefts of furniture or equipment took place. Apparently this fall some thief has picked Howell Hall in which to operate. Students and staff are cooperating in tighter security regulations and if any or all of these items were taken as a prank, I hope that the person who has them will return them quietly and promptly."

Lord Bertrand Russell: An Abdication Of Responsibility

The noted British philosopher Bertrand Russell has injected his controversial person and ideas into the current Cuban crisis several times. Lord Russell, a Nobel Prize winner, is widely respected as an eloquent spokesman for pacifists and others concerned with the growth of nuclear weapons and the dangers of world-wide war with these weapons.

This respect for his views has been justly earned by the great volume of passionate, meaningful words he has spoken and written with genuine concern for man's future. The respect has been earned, too, by the detached, non-political view which he has taken. He has not been a spokesman for either the Communists or the West. Thus he has been able to command attentive hearings on both sides of the Iron Curtain — a most valuable ability in a time when the risks of world destruction are intense and the need for constructive communication at a premium.

However, in this latest tense situation, the Cuban crisis, Lord Russell has done himself and the many people who respect him a grave disservice. He has abdicated his position as an intellectual statesman above the brutal arena of national interests.

This was not the case at the start. When the Cuban situation first arose, Lord Russell addressed himself to both Premier Khrushchev and President Kennedy in a plea that they both work to avert war. Khrushchev replied to Russell that he would avoid "rash action."

Certainly Russell's contribution at this time was worthwhile. While some petty Americans, as usual, raised the carping cry of "Pinko," others could see in this first action a legitimate plea for peace, at a time when such a plea was sorely needed. And the plea was answered.

This first plea was quite in keeping with the role Russell has carved for himself in the past. His second statement was not.

He said, after Khrushchev agreed to dismantle the missile bases in Cuba, "Mankind owes Premier Khrushchev a profound debt for his courage and his determination to prevent war due to American imperialism." That the world does owe the Russian leader gratitude for avoiding war is quite true; that this threat arose because of "American imperialism" is patently false.

Lord Russell himself has, on several occasions, said that one of the most important reasons for and responsibilities of a government is to protect its citizens. President Kennedy's action to prevent the missile buildup in Cuba was a legitimate and necessary expression of that very responsibility. Kennedy's action did unfortunately involve the risk of war, but this was a necessary risk which he was forced to take.

"Imperialism" it was not. America did not attempt to take any territory, control any government, run any economy.

In a 1959 interview Russell stated, "It is not proper to commit aggression. If nobody committed aggression the occasion for resisting aggression would not arise. But I do think resisting aggression is quite a proper thing to do." The presence of Russian missle bases in Cuba is obviously aggressive. The United States, in Russell's own words, was "quite proper" in resisting this aggression. Furthermore, the United States did so in the most peaceful way available to her: by merely stopping the instruments of of aggression. We did not invade the island or bomb the bases as we might have.

Many Americans, ourselves included, have in the past looked to Lord Russell for wisdom on grave matters. We have seen in him a politically detached and very fine man deeply concerned with man's future. This vision has been damaged.

When a man attains the eminence Lord Russell has, and when he deals, as Lord Russell has, with matters which affect all of humanity, he must take to himself a great responsibility — a responsibility to be true to himself and to his cause, to remain above the pettiness which can so impair his position of respect and worth.

We look to the time when Lord Russell will reassume this responsibility. Until then we are disheartened.

Alligator

With a degree of unprecedented cooperation and school spirit, the President of the Student Body and a co-Editor of the student newspaper have pooled resources for the purchase and training of one baby alligator.

The alligator will represent the student body of the University as a participant in the First National Collegiate Baby Alligator Races, to be held December 5, on the campus of Bakersfield College.

Desiring to see UNC represented in all NCAA sporting events the two backers of said alligator mailed in the required fee after lengthy high-level deliberations.

Contributions for the care and training of UNC's first baby alligator (not to run less than five dollars each) are being readily accepted by the DTH and Student Government, in the person of the President and co-Editor.

Mail in your contributions. Support the University's endeavor to train the fastest baby alligator in the United States. (CW)

Tick—Tock—Tick—

How You Become A Non-Conformist

There are several sure ways to gain recognition as a non-conformist in your community. Only a few of them endanger your life.

The sure way to non-conformity is to limit all your dinner guests and serve dinner promptly at 8:00 p.m. Your guests won't be as disappointed as you think: anyone who insists he can't get drunk before serving him Duck Bearnaise or Chacrot Garnee is bound to exercise a powerful hold on the imagination. They will know themselves in the presence of a powerful, aggressive and perhaps hostile personality, but eat on time they will. Of course, it is possible they may show up at a party fortified at home with a few, but the true non-conformist is a man who enforces whole new rituals.

A second way to gain stature as a non-conformist is by taking walks. The less sidewalks in the suburbs, the better. A pedestrian outside of a city is a shock to any motorist and there are motorists untold who do not yet know how to pass a pedestrian on a country road. Admittedly, this is a dangerous way to non-conformity but heroism after all is distinctly related to risk.

Not going to church isn't what it used to be in some communities, but not sending your kids to a Sunday or Sabbath school is. A fellow who won't send his kids to Sunday school positively depresses realty values in some areas. Keeping kids at home on Sundays is as sure a way to non-conformity as not buying them a World or Britannica Encyclopedia, or limiting their telephone calls to three minutes.

One of the absolute ways to non-conformity is eating in a restaurant on Thanksgiving or Christmas instead of with your wife's family.

But to "touch the superlative" of non-conformity, as Chief Justice Oliver Wendell Holmes used to say, is to write letters to the editor and —sign them.

GOP Supports Court Reform Amendments

(Eds' Note: Following is a copy from former gubernatorial candidate Robert L. Gavin, currently state GOP Executive Committee Chairman, to Judge J. Will Pless of North Carolina's 29th Judicial District expressing Republican support for the proposed Court Improvement amendments. It was submitted to the TAR HEEL by the student committee for Court Improvement.)

Dear Judge Pless

Thank you for your letter . . . concerning the constitutional amendment for Court Reform.

The Republican Party State Executive Committee in June of this year endorsed this constitutional amendment, and I have stated to the News and Observer that I likewise favor the amendment. I know that there is not, and never should be, any partisan approach to this question, and when the opportunity presents itself I will have no hesitancy in acting for and in behalf of the amendment.

With highest regards, I am

Very truly yours,

Robert L. Gavin

On Capital Punishment, N. C. Court Reform

Death Sentence— Evil Of The State

To the Editors.

Michael McGee asserted on the editorial page of the Daily Tar Heel of October 16, 1962 that the ". . . injustices committed in another day do not equate capital punishment with injustice" and believes that "We should not punish every criminal, no matter how petty, with death; but on the other hand we should not let the most scurrilous go free." However, it should seem patent to even the most casual observer that the "fine art of capital punishment" as practiced in this country at this very time all too often is mercilessly and deliberately inflicted upon the (racially) blackest, upon persons of least influence (owing to a lack either of education or sufficient financial means), or almost exclusively upon members of the virile sex while only comparatively rarely upon women convicted of identical crimes. These people have been and continue to be "the most scurrilous" singled out for the executioner. It's common knowledge that Negroes always receive severer penalties than whites, if not the most severe prescribable by law, when convicted of identical offenses. Perhaps the most blatant injustice in this connection is the crime of miscegenated rape in states below the Mason-Dixon line where, to my knowledge, only one white man has ever been officially executed for raping a Negress while the number of Negroes who have paid the supreme penalty for raping white women is legion. But this is just one of many crimes for which Negroes generally pay the highest or a higher penalty than whites.

"It's hard to put a million dollars in jail." This is often heard upon the lips of convicts and exconvicts in and out of prison and, alarmingly enough, there is much more truth in this statement than we citizens of America would like to admit, where, supposedly, the right of trial with counsel is vouchsafed all citizens, rich or poor. Yet statistics have proven that wealthy, influential people, when convicted of capital crimes, rarely receive the death sentence thanks to assiduous and highly competent criminal lawyers, whose fees for defending accused murderers are insanely high and who, needless to say, are completely out of reach of paupers or persons of average income very often being able to afford no lawyer of their own but having to make do with court-appointed counsel. When accused of contempt of court, whom did Governor Ross Barnett have in federal court pleading his case? Only a former president of the American Bar Association as a member of a team of illustrious and successful defense lawyers. To illustrate my point further that rich, influential people tend to be less susceptible and more immune to judicial processes by virtue of their wealth and influence, we need only to assume for a moment that Barnett had been (or perhaps will be) convicted of contempt of court he could easily pay the fine out of his own salary or, if that were too honorable a course for the governor, take up a collection among his loyal segregationists in Mississippi in order to avoid a jail sentence.

While more men are criminals than women, of those women who commit crimes like first-degree murder, ridiculously few are ever executed as a result of strong matriarchal tendencies in this country and of a sentimentalist tradition that women are somehow special and ipso facto should not be executed despite the nature of their crimes. I once read of a man in Texas who killed his wife in a fit of passion, admitted his crime n sobs of genuine remorse but was ruthlessly electrocuted while a woman calmly admitted coldbloodedly poisoning eight men (either husbands or paramours) but was spared the death chair because there is a fine, time-honored tradition in Texas that no woman has ever received capital punishment (as far as I know still preserved to this day). One can see that women have been emancipated to the extent that they enjoy more freedom than men, even varying degrees of legal immunity which is not freedom but a reprehensible abuse of freedom.

So, Mr. McGee, while it is most definitely true that "injustices committed in another day do not equate capital punishment with injustice", the above-mentioned injustices committed in our day do most certainly equate capital punishment (as practiced in modern-day America) with injustice.

But the above-mentioned reasons in themselves do not justify the abolition of the death penalty as death penalty but only until that time when Negroes receive full civil rights and are no longer second-class citizens, (at which time America will become the first universal democracy, i. e. one in which all persons born in this country are first-class citizens to the last man unlike the democracy of Athens which did not recognize slaves as citizens), only until that time when rich and poor alike receive truly equal treatment in court irregardless of their financial position, only until that time when women are considered capable of bearing as much moral responsibility for crime as men.

However, I now intend to adduce several reasons for universally abolishing the death penalty as death penalty. The most cogent reason for doing so, in my opinion, is an epistemological one, i. e., we humans generally and the judge specifically just cannot know in every case who is guilty and who innocent with a sufficiently high degree of certainty requisite for the employment of a penalty of the nature of death. If we stop to think about the nature of the perfect judge who would deal out perfect justice, we would immediately realize that the very attribute that would make him a perfect judge would be omniscience. Our omniscient judge would not only know without a shadow of doubt who was actually guilty and who not, but also whether the criminal would repent of his crime and respond favorably to rehabilitation, if given a chance, and would therefore be able to deal out the most suitable penalty. But, unfortunately no human is omniscient. Therefore we must be content with a situation that is a far cry from the ideal. I am no idealist and must therefore, however regretfully, agree with Mr. McGee and admit that "Justice can never be perfect. Wrong judgments will be given out no matter what the method of sentencing is". However, I take most vehement exception to his statement that "This is not a part of reasoned debate on capital punishment" and dogmatically assert that the possibility of mistaken and erroneous judgments arising from human fallibility is the most relevant and the most crucial point in any reasoned debate on capital punishment. For the death penalty is of its nature irrevocable; when once the head has rolled, nothing more can be done. When once the state has executed (I might just as well say murdered) an innocent man, nothing in the world can be done to make up such a loss to his family and to society, whereas, if the same man were instead sent to prison, if new evidence should be found proving his innocence, the loss, great as it is, could still be partially recouped. Personally, I would rather have a prison full of unbeheaded murderers (perhaps even deserving death) and there with the assurance that no innocent man was ever ruthlessly and premeditatedly murdered by the state just because she was stubborn enough to insist that a certain number of men die than to have to face the bleak and ever-present possibility that an innocent man may die tonight.

There are still other reasons against capital punishment that could be adduced, if there were time and space, for example, the professed rehabilitative nature of our penal system, inherent shortcomings in the jury system, the validity of much testimony and questionable value of witnesses, and also, if I may say so, very laudable humanitarian reasons adducing the latter I shall especially eschew lest I be stigmatized as a sentimentalist.

As a final note, I suggest that Mr. McGee read Aristotle's Nicomachean Ethics, Book II, chapter 6, sections 18 and 19 (on page 97 in H. Rackham's edition)where he says, "Not every action or emotion, however, admits of the observance of a due mean. Indeed the very names of some directly imply evil . . . of actions, adultery, theft, murder." If one inclines to the view, as I tend to, that capital punishment is an evil being nothing other than retaliatory murder by the state of human beings, criminals though they be, the above quotation would be most relevant.

Ct. Improvement Efforts Praised

To the Editors:

I am delighted to learn that an active campaign has been started by the students of the University of North Carolina to encourage passage of the Constitutional Amendment to improve our court system in this state. This indicates what I have always contended—that our college and university students deserve the plaudits of a grateful public.

North Carolina badly needs a modern, uniform and efficient court system. The amendment on the ballot November 6th gives the General Assembly a mandate to accomplish this task. I hope all North Carolinians will support the amendment, to the end that we may reach that point when justice will apply equally and fairly to all our citizens, regardless of where they live or their station in life.

Again, may I express my thanks to all those at the University who have shown their concern over this vital matter.

Cutlar Moore, Chairman
North Carolina Citizens Committee for Improved Courts

Fencers Should Have Varsity OK

To The Editors:

Thursday's Tar Heel carried an article on the UNC Fencing Club's bid for recognition as a varsity sport. The article touched quickly and frequently on the rather negative attitude of athletic director Erickson, but failed to mention several points leading us to believe that the fencing team here needs and deserves recognition as a varsity sport.

Perhaps most important, varsity recognition for the fencing team would not cost Mr. Erickson gobs of money, as he seems to think. The Athletic Association is now (and has been) paying for all the activities of the team. All the equipment — weapons, uniforms, masks, mats, electronic equipment — is paid for by the CAA. Ditto for gas, food, and lodging on the teams' trips. And the trips are made in University station wagons. There would be no change in these expenses if the team were given varsity recognition.

Varsity recognition for the fencing team would mean that coach Pebley Barrow could attract and keep more interested team members, because he could promise them several added attractions: more exciting matches with bigger and better teams, greater prestige for the teams' efforts and a letter for their own hours of practice.

The team now is working hard. There are matches scheduled this year with many different schools, many of whom recognize fencing as a varsity sport. This year's schedule includes matches with VMI, the Citadel, Clemson, Pfeiffer College, University of Detroit, Ohio State, Duke, Winston-Salem, and Johns Hopkins. If Mr. Erickson feels that there isn't enough interest in fencing in the south, he has little idea of the effort that team members put into long hours of practice, and the organizational effort involved from coach Barrow.

Two years ago, for a four way meet here with VMI, Clemson, and Pfeiffer College, a large crowd showed up at Woollen Gym although the event had not been publicized. Many UNC students could learn to enjoy good fencing competition just as they have learned to enjoy lacrosse, swimming, soccer, wrestling, and other "smaller" but still popular sports.

Varsity recognition for the fencing team here would cost the Athletic Association nothing but a nod of the head, and it would mean a great deal to team members, to increased competition in the South, and toward another goal Erickson professes interest in: the spreading of Carolina's name over wider areas of the nation through a well-balanced variety of sports.

– COURTS –

North Carolina Bar Association there was absolutely no uniformity in North Carolina "recorder" courts, and fines range from $7 to $25 for the same offense depending on where the offense is committed. The Bar Associates said there was practically no way of finding out how many justices of the peace there were. According to the survey they ranged from none in one county to 44 in another. About 100 justices of the peace were working full time, 300 part time, and 540 were handling transactions "now and then."

Some justices of the peace, according to the report, were doing excellent jobs, but others had not fixed time or place for handling judicial business and were operating in such places as "the back yard, front porch, rear end of grocery stores, over chicken crates, in automobiles, over plow handles, in an ice house, in a fair ground ticket booth and in a funeral parlor."

Under the amendments the General Assembly would divide the state into court districts and provide for at least one district court in each county. District judges would serve on a full time basis and would be elected. The present justices of the peace would be called magistrates. They would be appointed by the senior Superior Court judge from nominations submitted by the clerk of the Superior Court in his county.

There would be one or more magistrates in each county. The number would be determined by the General Assembly. The expense of running the courts would be paid from state funds.

By STUART BALL

Records were made to be broken, but no one thought Manly's record of 71 points in one game would fall this season. No one except the SAE's that is. With marked determinism they went out to break the record, broke it, and in so doing walloped a previously unbeaten St. Anthony Hall team.

The final score in the one sided contest was 88-0 and at times it appeared that an invisible pair of hands was guiding the ball into the SAE's hands. Fumbles, and pass interceptions both aided the SAE's as they scored over two points a minute and averaged a touchdown every three minutes.

Bob Segrest scored three times and Vinny Giles, Scott Trotter, and Keith Stoneman each scored twice. Three others scored TD's to add to two safeties and six extra points after touchdowns. In three contests the SAE's have scored 189 points while holding the opposition scoreless.

Frosh To Play In Benefit

A 1963 compact car will be donated by the Durham Automobile Dealers Association to a lucky ticketholder on Thanksgiving Day when Carolina's Tar Babies and Duke's Blue Imps clash in their annual contest.

The Durham Cerebral Palsy Foundation and the Durham Junior League will co-sponsor for the second time the freshman game on November 22. The attendance broke all records last year and the game netted thousands of dollars for the Cerebral Palsy Hospital in Durham and for community Service Projects of the League.

Kick-off time is 2:00 p.m. November 22, Thanksgiving Day, in Duke Stadium. Tickets are only $1 pre-game and $1.50 at game time. Junior League members in their red and white hats will sell tickets at down-town booths for two weeks preceding the game. This game is always a thriller. And for added suspense, at half time, someone will win one of the lovely new cars in the "Cerebral Palsy 1963 Compact Caravan."

The Midget Tobacco Bowl will precede the Cerebral Palsy Classic on Thanksgiving Day. The Boy's Club "Commandos" of Durham and the "Kiwanis Redskins" of Levittown, Pa., will kick-off at 11:45 a.m. These boys are 10 to 13 years old and cannot weigh more than 115 lbs.

A Queen, to be chosen locally, will be attended by a Court of six young ladies. And to top it off, the spectators will be entertained at the half by 13-year-old baton twirler, Wilma Hull.

Carolina, Clemson Are Close In ACC Football Statistics

North Carolina's opponent this weekend, Clemson has been a rough customer for Tar Heel teams in past seasons. This year the teams are quite even in all aspects of the game after six contests.

The Tigers, after losing three straight contests in their den, Death Valley, are 2-4. Consecutive victories against South Carolina and Wake Forest also gave the Tar Heels a 2-4 mark.

Last week the Tigers, coached by Frank Howard, gave unbeaten Auburn a scare before bowing, 17-14.

Carolina is ahead of Clemson in only one aspect of the pigskin game — pass offense. Behind the throwing of Junior Edge and the receiving of Bob Lacey, Jim Hickey's men have racked up 797 yards through the air, an average of 132.8 per game.

But the Tar Heels have done little on the ground. In six games they have gained only 534 yards for an 89-yard average.

Clemson has picked up 630 yards for a 105 average in the air. This places the mfifth in the conference, compared to the Tar Heels' third spot.

But the hard-nosed Tigers have done a little better rushing. They've averaged 153.2 per game for a total of 919 yards on the ground. This puts them fourth in the ACC. UNC is eighth.

Total offense figures find the weekend opponents separated by only 37 yards. UNC has a 221.8 per game mark, Clemson a 258.2 figure.

Maryland still leads the ACC in total offense (336.2 average) and pass offense (186.2 average). South Carolina holds the rushing offense lead with a 187.8 mark.

On defense, the Tigers are almost a hundred yards better than Jim Hickey's men. They've yielded 244.7 total yards a game, while Carolina has given up 340.3.

Carolina's weakness has been in its ground defense. On the ground they've yielded 213.9 per game. Likewise Clemson is tough on rushing foes — yielding 119.2 per contest.

Clemson has given up 753 airyards for a 125.5 mark, and the Tar Heels have yielded 759 for a 126.5 mark.

CWC Meet

The CWC will meet at 6:30 p.m. today in the Grail Room at Graham Memorial. Project suggestions will be due.

One That Didn't Count

'Scooter Dodges Question'

By BOB QUINCY

Statistics from the Wake Forest game last weekend show End Bob Lacey, a guy with bear-trap hands, receiving eight passes . . . True, in one sense of the word, but his performance was even better . . . He caught nine—but one came as a two-point conversion . . . Such nabs do not count in the statistics.

* * *

Ronnie Jackson, Carolina's smallest in size at 168 but one of the largest in talent, was asked by Coach Jim Hickey what was his toughest assignment? . . . "Blocking those 200-pound ends," said Ronnie . . . This prompted Hickey to ask Jackson how he thought he would have done had he tangled with Matt Snorton, Michigan State's 245-pound flanker . . . "Well," said Ronnie, "I guess I would have done as good as the rest of them who tried."

* * *

The Tar Heels, thanks to the fine passing of Quarterback Junior Edge, seem to have their offense moving . . . They have scored three touchdowns in their past two outings against USC and Wake, both of which were wins . . . Dad's Day was a specialty on last Saturday's program and practically everyone noticed two proud popswearing two numbers . . . They were Mr. Greene and Mr. Gallagher, who have twin sons on the squad.

* * *

Notre Dame, who Carolina faces on Nov. 17, has been having problems stoking an offense . . . The Fighting Irish have been able to score only one touchdown in each of their past four games, all losses . . . The Irish take on Navy and Pittsburgh before facing the Tar Heels . . . UNC has bouts with Clemson and Virginia.

* * *

Speaking of Clemson, it is rather unusual that both North Carolina and the Tigers have identical records: 4-2, that is, two wins, four setbacks . . . "Celmson has lost to some good football teams," warns chief scout Emmett Cheek. "It has a record that is unspectacular, but Frank Howard's team plays solid football."

* * *

A stubby youngster named Ron Rubick scored three touchdowns as Michigan State defeated the Tar Heels earlier in the season . . . Three scores seem to come natural for the Spartans . . . In every game since then, one Michigan State back has crossed the enemy goal for three touchdowns, latest being Fullback George Saimes' trio against Indiana on Saturday.

* * *

Co-Captain Joe Craver of Shelby played one of his finest games against Wake Forest, thus hitting the form of last season which earned him many plaudits . . . Joe made four unassisted tackles, participated in seven others . . . He also swiped a Deacon aerial in the fourth quarter and ran it back 50 yards.

* * *

Every Sunday afternoon, the Tar Heels watch films of the previous day's game . . . When the Craver run came on screen, his teammates cheered and gave Joe the needle about being a great back . . . Craver's brightest showing against Wake was spearheading a successful goal-line stand in which he made three of the four tackles.

* * *

Veteran reporters who covered the Wake-NC contest couldn't recall ever witnessing an oddity such as the Edge-Lacey passing combo . . . Lacey was the only Tar Heel to make a catch, grabbing all eight of Junior's completions. Edge has now completed 59 of 98 throws for a highly respectable percentage of .602. Lacey has caught 26 of them.

* * *

Guard Jerry Gabe turned in an excellent defensive performance against Wake, as did end Chris Hanburger . . . Lacey is Carolina's leading scorer with 26 points, four touchdowns and one two-pointer catch . . . The Tar Heels will stop at the Jack Tar Poinsette Hotel at Greenville, S. C., on Friday for the Clemson game.

Modified Open Trial Plan OKed After Lengthy Debate

Defendant Still Able To Require Closed Hearing

"Open" trials in honor council cases will be voted on by the student body in the fall elections.

The constitutional amendment provides for two DTH reporters to be present at all trials, except when the defendent requests a closed trial. It was approved by Student Legislature with only three negative votes.

Virtually all of the debate on the issue before the legislature Tuesday night concerned a proposed amendment which would have set up an appeals board to consider all requests for a closed trial. It was defeated 19-15.

The three-man appeals board would have been composed of the president of the student government, the chairman of the Men's or Women's Council, and the men's or women's attorney general. It would have been the final authority for any student not desiring an "open" trial.

Bob Jones, (Ind.) who introduced the bill with Charles Cooper (SP), called the proposed amendment the only way of assuring that "open" trials would serve any educational function to the campus.

The feeling that without the amendment, there would continue to be very few "open" trials was expressed by Ford Rowan (SP). Rowan said, "We are getting too big to be satisfied with the status quo; we must adjust and improve our judicial system. We must remove the 'secrecy' from our honor system."

Walt Dellinger, chairman of the Men's Council, told the body that a "tradition of open trials can be established" even if the defendant can demand a closed trial.

When asked if he favored letting the chairman of the council report the trial rather than DTH reporters, Dellinger expressed fear that a chairman might not be objective all the time. "It's very difficult to write something yourself if you feel you might have made a mistake."

Frank Adkinson (SP) asked Dellinger if he thought it would be "constructive" for the DTH to "splash a mistake of the council all over the front page." Dellinger replied "yes."

Bev Haynes, chairman of the women's council, questioned the compatibility of the appeals board amendment with the tradition of due process in state and federal courts. "The issue of this proposal (appeals board) is the right of the public as opposed to the right of the individual."

Mike Lawler, speaker, read a report from the now-extinct student council done in conjunction with the administration which stated that the honor system was based on "honor" and not on "law," and was therefore not bound to follow any procedures used in other courts.

Ford Rowan denied that the appeals board would deny any right given to defendants in other judicial systems in the U. S. He noted that for a defendant in court to have a closed trial, he must get permission from the judge. He said the judge in this case would be the appeals board.

After the appeals board amendment was defeated, Miss Haynes told the body that the bill had her full support.

Scott Summers (SP) told the DTH that even if the student body accepts the constitutional amendment without the appeals board, he felt the change was of "little substance."

Voting on the amendment providing for an appeals board was as follows:

Artist-in-residence has been cited year after year as a project that Student Government should undertake. Until now no effective action has been taken. The Student Party is communicating with several writers in an effort to procure the best possible artist for next year. (Thornton Wilder has been mentioned as a possibility.) We definitely plan to obtain an outstanding artist for the campus next year.

In short the Student Party is undertaking an effective program to fulfull the promises contained in our platform from last spring: the University Party is not. (It is also interesting to note that the Student Party has met five times prior to our nominating convention while the University had met only once prior to theirs.)

The record then paints in black and white the relative contributions of the two parties to the campus this fall. The Student Party candidates for class office have been instrumental in our work this fall and will continue this record throughout the year. The Student Party is indeed the Symbol of Progress in Student Government and your Student Party vote is a vote for the continuation of that progress.

run-offs. The University Party is seeking to make itself active in all areas of campus life, and I think our candidates show this effort.

I would urge all my fellow students to learn the candidates' platforms and their qualifications before voting next Tuesday. Then, they should cast their vote as they choose on the basis of these platforms and qualifications.

LATE BULLETIN

In his veto message to the body last night, he cited the telegram received from UNC.

The student Senator who introduced the bill to withdraw Vandy from NSA has reportedly threatened to seek impeachment of Abernathy.

A two-thirds vote is needed to override the veto. Late reports indicate that this will not be reached.

DeLung said, "I hope to explain to student government officers at Vandy the ways which N.S.A. material and services have been used here in the areas of student co-ops, dorm social improvements, foreign student programing, symposiums and lectures sponsored by the Carolina Forum and the YMCA-YWCA, legislative resolutions, and academic affairs."

Dr. Virginia Stone, professor of nursing, and chairman of continuation education, UNC School of Nursing, and Mary Walker Randolph, professor of nursing, UNC, will assist in teaching the course.

Get Reprimands et Hour Violation

Two of the freshmen and the junior pleaded not guilty to the first charge, guilty to the second and "nolo contendere" to the third. The third freshman involved pleaded not guilty to all three charges.

The court gave the three students wh opleaded guilty an official reprimand. It dropped the third charge, to which they had pleaded "nolo contendere." The third freshman was acquitted altogether.

In cases where a student pleads guilty, sntence is mandatory under the student government constitution. The chairman of the court explained that while it is not a criminal offense to take a steam-bath, the court does have the right to control steam baths when they reach the point where they are damaging the dormitories.

The official reprimand does not go on the student's permanent record, but it is filed with the Dean of Men's office for four and a half months. The chairman of the court explained that while the reprimand had no immediate affect it could reflect on the student in a future IDC case involving the same kind of disturbance.

Candidates Submit Goals For Classes

STUDENT PARTY

Jack Harrell
Freshman President

I would appreciate your printing he following as an open letter to he students of my class.

Have any of you ever asked ourselves what running for a lass office really involves? A onscientious candidate must put much time and hard work into his ampaign. He must make it his rimary concern. And yet, even with these trying demands, people eek posts in student government. Why? What makes a person willng to sacrifice his time, his efforts and his resources for an office?

The answer to this question is "interest." A person must have an interest in the type of work he will be doing and in the effect of this work toward helping his school and fellow students.

We, the Freshman Student Party candidates, have a good platform, a platform of benefit to each person in our class. It covers all phases of campus life, from academic (through an increased Freshman participation in the honors program and "A" courses) to social (in a more effective dorm entertainment program). But this program, no matter how good in concept, will never be realized unless those who must carry it out have the essential devotion for the responsibilities of their office and to fellow students. The Student Party has a slate of candidates who will enthusiastically approach their tasks of serving our class.

I promise you that if elected president, I will always serve the Freshman Class and the Student Body with their best interests in mind. I will make the office more than a figurehead position by constantly striving for improvement and increased Freshman benefits and recognition.

LET'S MAKE THIS FRESHMAN YEAR AT CAROLINA!!

* * *

Bill Aycock
Sophomore President

To the Editor,

Many of you have heard it said, I am sure, that class officers are useless, that they do very little or nothing because they have very little or nothing to do. This, I believe, is far from the truth. There have been examples in the past few years of individuals serving in class positions who have done a great deal toward increasing and exercising the responsibilities of these offices. I believe that class officers can and should play a vital role in the life of student government on this campus.

To promote an dencourage the efficiency of class officers, I favor,

1) an inter-class council composed of the presidents of the four classes to coordinate and consolidate the activities of the classes, and yet

(2) still retain class autonomy through individual projects such as the bringing of outstanding speakers to this campus, and the recognition of outstanding students

UNIVERSITY PARTY

Earl Johnson
Freshman President

Earl Johnson is the University Party's candidate for the President of the Freshman Class. Johnson is asking for election on the basis of his qualifications and his platform. He graduated from Broughton High School in Raleigh where he was Vice-President of the Student Council, President of the Senior Class and member of the Hi-Y, Key and Service Clubs. He was All-State, All-Southern, and All-American in football and All-State, All-East in basketball, and lettered in track. In addition, he was Governor of Boy's State and a delegate to Boy's Nation in Washington, D. C. Earl is a pre-dental student and a member of the freshman basketball squad.

When asked about his platform, Earl stated, "I feel that the best student government is the one which involves the most studnts. Therefore I would set up a Cabinet System of class leadership. Within this cabinet will be positions to take care of the major problems that we face as Freshmen. I see these problem areas as academic, social, and communication between class offiers and class members. My platform will go into detail on these various programs—such as Freshman Weekend and a Freshman Queen—that I would institute as class president."

Earl added, "I urge all Freshmen to read the platforms offered, to check the qualifications of the candidates, and then to vote for the candidate of their choice Tuesday, Nov. 6.

* * *

Harrison Merrill
Sophomore President

I am running for president of Sophomore class as a University Party candidate. I feel that I am well qualified for this office both on my past record and my present interest and enthusiasm. Last year I had the opportunity to serve as treasurer of the class. On the cabinet I was also ex-officio chairman of the Finance Committee. The experience which I gained by serving in these positions was invaluable in guiding me as I chose my platform, and will be invaluable to me in carrying it out if elected.

The major points of our platform are the following: (1) Expansion of the Dorm Problems Committee. This is a committee composed of members who will go out to the sophomores on campus and find out their individual complaints. These complaints will be forwarded either by the cabinet or by petition to the administration for action. (2) Better balance between the dormitories and fraternities on the class cabinet. This will be done by unbiased selection of the cabinet based on interest and qualifications. There will be positions on committee available to all people who are sincerely interested in working for the class. (3) Continuation of a Scholarship

By STUART BALL

Records were made to be broken, but no one thought Manly's record of 71 points in one game would fall this season. No one except the SAE's that is. With marked determinism they went out to break the record, broke it, and in so doing walloped a previously unbeaten St. Anthony Hall team.

The final score in the one sided contest was 88-0 and at times it appeared that an invisible pair of hands was guiding the ball into the SAE's hands. Fumbles, and pass interceptions both aided the SAE's as they scored over two points a minute and averaged a touchdown every three minutes.

Bob Segrest scored three times and Vinny Giles, Scott Trotter, and Keith Stoneman each scored twice. Three others scored TD's to add to two safeties and six extra points after touchdowns. In three contests the SAE's have scored 189 points while holding the opposition scoreless.

Carolina, Clemson Are Close In ACC Football Statistics

North Carolina's opponent this weekend, Clemson has been a rough customer for Tar Heel teams in past seasons. This year the teams are quite even in all aspects of the game after six contests.

The Tigers, after losing three straight contests in their den, Death Valley, are 2-4. Consecutive victories against South Carolina and Wake Forest also gave the Tar Heels a 2-4 mark.

Last week the Tigers, coached by Frank Howard, gave unbeaten Auburn a scare before bowing, 17-14.

Carolina is ahead of Clemson in only one aspect of the pigskin game — pass offense. Behind the throwing of Junior Edge and the receiving of Bob Lacey, Heels' third spot.

But the hard-nosed Tigers have done a little better rushing. They've averaged 153.2 per game for a total of 919 yards on the ground. This puts them fourth in the ACC. UNC is eighth.

Total offense figures find the weekend opponents separated by only 37 yards. UNC has a 221.8 per game mark, Clemson a 258.2 figure.

Maryland still leads the ACC in total offense (336.2 average) and pass offense (186.2 average). South Carolina holds the rushing offense lead with a 187.8 mark.

On defense, the Tigers are almost a hundred yards better than Jim Hickey's men. They've yielded 244.7 total yards a game, ground they've yielded 213.9 per game. Likewise Clemson is tough on rushing foes — yielding 119.2 per contest.

Clemson has given up 753 air-yards for a 125.5 mark, and the Tar Heels have yielded 759 for a 126.5 mark.

Failure Of Churches To Act Is Blamed For Racial Crisis

By BILL DOWELL

"Segregation could not exist if it had not been condoned by the churches," Dr. Benjamin Mayes, president of Morehouse College, said in the last of a two-part lecture series in Gerrard Hall Tuesday night.

Dr. Mayes went on to say that slavery itself would probably never have existed if the churches had spoken against it.

For the most part, he said, ministers in the South have been the last ones to make any moves tracizes a man for practicing the Christian brotherhood its ministers preach.

Mayes said he sometimes felt that the most conservative organizations in society were the churches and the universities. That is paradoxical, he said, because it is the churches duty to regenerate mankind, and yet the institution which is supposed to regenerate men is conservative. It is paradoxical for colleges and universities too, he said, because they are supposed to search for truth

"The church cannot be the Church of Christ, God's House," he went on, "if it denies worship and membership to any man because of race, creed or national origin. You may call it a church if it does, but please don't dignify it by calling it the House of God. Call it something else."

Mayes said he didn't know what would happen if 50 or 75 white people suddenly went into a Negro church on a Sunday. He said

by louis bourne

It wasn't that George was an Epicurean or anything like that. It was just that he liked to eat. Don't get me wrong. I don't mean he liked the taste of food or the way his salivary glands worked on it; he actually enjoyed the process of shoveling it in. Eating was an act with George and he loved an audience. He was always putting finesse on his eating techniques. The fork was not a fork, but a foil.

One afternoon I was rolling through the lunch line in the tiny room of Lenoir, tiny compared to that army of eaters in the big room, and I reached the cashier: "Forty-five. Thank You." I coasted off the conveyer belt with my mass-produced lunch and hesitated some five yards away. The place was crammed with people, all of who I didn't know. I started pivoting my head around to see if one of the clean-up boys was clearing a table so I could pounce on him, but they were all gabbing over at the tray-rack and there wasn't a clear table in sight. About this time I became faintly embarrassed just standing there, and I could feel the color coming to my face when out of the corner of my eye I saw George motioning me over. Now as far as I was concerned, George was the ultimate ass, but then there wasn't any place else to sit so I went over and sat down and gave George an audience.

We parried the usual chit-chat back and forth across the table, "How are your courses running?" and the like, and then we both fell silent amid the din of the voices of other eaters around us. George was of course going into his routine all the while, flashing his fork about and knapkining his mouth every three or four bites. I was waiting. He was sure to bring something up. I knew he would. He had plenty to play with: spring garden peas and shelled corn. Here we go:

"Do you ever notice how hard it is to entice peas and corn onto one's fork in order that one may intake a reasonable mouthful with facility?"

God, what was I supposed to say? "Mmmm," I mumbled, munching on some pseudo-French bread. That was invitation enough for him to continue.

"You have to sort of slip the fork beneath them, hard and fast, as it were. The real trouble comes when you have all the pieces lying out in a flat plane across the area of the plate. I'm working on a new method of building the pieces up into a hillock, piling them one atop the other until the contours of the plate are broken by a mountain of green and yellow and then, don't you know, slipping under them—hard and fast, of course."

"Of course." Damn, what a punctilious bastard. He was really becoming more oppressive than usual. I was just about through. Some days I simply wished I hadn't eaten.

"I really must be off," I said matching his style.

"Got to get some work done," I said over my shoulder, wending my way through the full tables and around chattering chairs.

The next day was very much like yesterday. In fact they could have been carbon copies—or so I thought. I rolled through the conveyor belt, paid the cashier, and coasted off with my mass-produced lunch, just as I did yesterday. My head started pivoting around, just as it had done yesterday—but this time there was no faint embarrassment. I saw Joe and a couple of the other guys over on the right, two tables in, so I steered over there and sat down. We were carrying on a pretty fair conversation, the food was not worse than usual, and then it struck me. My mouth fell open when I saw it; not literally you know, but it really shocked me. About three tables northeast of where we were sitting, I saw Janice. A tall lean fellow—I could only see the back of his head—was talking animatedly across the table to her. George. There could be no doubt of it. Nor was there any doubt of their topic of conversation. Succotash was on the menu that day. George was really going now and Janice—Janice smiled. Smiled at that supercilious clod! She actually seemed to enjoy what he was saying. It was too bad really. She and I could have been such good friends.

BOY and the WOMAN
by roy rabon

The Woman stooped over to avoid the low-hanging oak branch, crossed the ditch, walked across the highway, and turned south. The Boy followed a few steps behind. After they had walked about 100 yards the Boy stepped off the road—blistering-hot in the noon sun—and walked along the side. The dust was cool to his bare feet.

The highway twisted sharply to the left, following the valley. In the bend of the curve, a young, cold mountain stream rushed by, in a hurry to leave the quiet solitude of the mountains and reach the flat lazy land of the piedmont.

As they walked by the stream the Boy sniffed the fresh, cool air. The Woman turned to look at the Boy; not with a look of concern, amusement or curiosity, but with a look of detachment. Then she turned back to the highway, never slowing her long, powerful and demanding stride. They would be late getting back from the store if they did not hurry.

After thirty minutes of fast walking they rounded a sharp curve, the valley widened, the road straightened, and a store and three houses came into view. They walked past a sign proclaiming Valley of the Cross, unincorporated, and past one of the houses. The store was in the middle of the mile-long valley, and one house at either end.

Valley of the Cross was quiet as the Woman and the Boy walked down the road, crossed the small, graveled parking area in front of the store, and walked beneath the steady droning of a one-bladed fan which hung from the porch roof. A bell tinkled as they entered the store.

"Howdy, Miz Thomas," greeted a small, white-haired man. He came from behind the counter to meet them. "How're you all today?"

While the Woman and the storekeeper exchanged information about the weather, the Boy walked to the back of the store. Here were the guns. And one was a special gun: a 30-30 calibre, lever action, a seven-shot capacity, and to top it off, a 4X scope. It was the only gun in the store with a scope. The Boy stood in front of the gun several minutes; then reached out and gingerly lifted it out of the gun rack. He held it for moments, caressing it; then slowly he brought it to his sh and aimed at a small bottle o gent on the other side of th The scope magnified the de bottle so that all the Boy saw blur.

While the Boy studied the bottle, the bell tinkled, the door banged shut, and two feet came running down the

In short the Student Party is undertaking an effective program to fulfull the promises contained in our platform from last spring: the University Party is not. (It is also interesting to note that the Student Party has met five times prior to our nominating convention while the University had met only once prior to theirs.)

The record then paints in black and white the relative contributions of the two parties to the campus this fall. The Student Party candidates for class office have been instrumental in our work this fall and will continue this record throughout the year. The Student Party is indeed the Symbol of Progress in Student Government and your Student Party vote is a vote for the continuation of that progress.

In his veto message to the body last night, he cited the telegram received from UNC.

The student Senator who introduced the bill to withdraw Vandy from NSA has reportedly threatened to seek impeachment of Abernathy.

A two-thirds vote is needed to override the veto. Late reports indicate that this will not be reached.

SOC. LECTURE

There will be a sociology lecture this afternoon in room 407 of the Alumni building. Dr. Albert J. Reiss of the University of Michigan will discuss types of educational creeds in their relationship

I am sure, that class officers are useless, that they do very little or nothing because they have very little or nothing to do. This, I believe, is far from the truth. There have been examples in the past few years of individuals serving in class positions who have done a great deal toward increasing and exercising the responsibilities of these offices. I believe that class officers can and should play a vital role in the life of student government on this campus.

To promote an dencourage the efficiency of class officers, I favor,

1) an inter-class council composed of the presidents of the four classes to coordinate and consolidate the activities of the classes, and yet

(2) still retain class autonomy through individual projects such as the bringing of outstanding speakers to this campus, and the recognition of outstanding students

The experience which I gained by serving in these positions was invaluable in guiding me as I chose my platform, and will be invaluable to me in carrying it out if elected.

The major points of our platform are the following: (1) Expansion of the Dorm Problems Committee. This is a committee composed of members who will go out to the sophomores on campus and find out their individual complaints. These complaints will be forwarded either by the cabinet or by petition to the administration for action. (2) Better balance between the dormitories and fraternities on the class cabinet. This will be done by unbiased selection of the cabinet based on interest and qualifications. There will be positions on committee available to all people who are sincerely interested in working for the class. (3) Continuation of a Scholarship

By BILL DOWELL

"Segregation could not exist if it had not been condoned by the churches," Dr. Benjamin Mayes, president of Morehouse College, said in the last of a two-part lecture series in Gerrard Hall Tuesday night.

Dr. Mayes went on to say that slavery itself would probably never have existed if the churches had spoken against it.

For the most part, he said, ministers in the South have been the last ones to make any moves against segregation. There have been exceptions, he said, but as

Mayes said he sometimes felt that the most conservative organizations in society were the churches and the universities. That is paradoxical, he said, because it is the churches duty to regenerate mankind, and yet the institution which is supposed to regenerate men is conservative. It is paradoxical for colleges and universities too, he said, because they are supposed to search for truth and are also supposed to be some-males or females but all one in Jesus Christ.

"The church cannot be the Church of Christ, God's House," he went on, "if it denies worship and membership to any man because of race, creed or national origin. You may call it a church if it does, but please don't dignify it by calling it the House of God. Call it something else."

Mayes said he didn't know what would happen if 50 or 75 white people suddenly went into a Negro church on a Sunday. He said they would probably panic. The looked towards the front of the store, and then back to the Boy. "Don't you wanta play?" she asked. He shook his head yes, and started to explain once more why he could not, when Tom yelled, "LuAnn, you comin' or ain't you?" She watched the Boy a moment longer, muttered "See you," and ran after Tom.

WASHINGTON (UPI) — President Kennedy conferred with his top advisers on Cuba Tuesday as strong indications reached Washington that Russia was speeding efforts to dismantle Soviet missile bases on the island.

At the same time, the State Department granted permission for Soviet First Deputy Premier Anastas Mikoyan to make a one-day stop in New York Thursday on a Moscow-to-Cuba trip. Mikoyan's Cuban goal may be to force Premier Fidel Castro into line on a Cuban settlement.

The Boy returned the gun to the rack, and walked to the counter where the Woman and the storekeeper stood. A large brown bag full of groceries was standing on the counter between them.

"Well, Miz Thomas, you all walk slow goin' home," the storekeeper warned. "It's mighty hot out there."

"We will," the Woman said. "Goodbye."

"Goodbye," the storekeeper said, and tousled the Boy's hair.

As soon as they were outside of the store the Boy unwrapped his sucker and put it in his mouth. He looked for LuAnn and Tom as they walked through the valley. They were nowhere to be seen.

When they reached the ditch, crossed it and started up the mountain path, both were sweating profusely. On their way to the store it had been hot, but the sky had been clear. Now the sky was splotched with fast-growing cumuli clouds, some near thunderhead size. The air was hot and oppressive.

Neither had spoken since they had left the store. The Boy had been thinking about Tom and LuAnn, and had formulated a plan. Soon after they left the road and entered the deep woods of the mountain, he caught up with the Woman, reached out and lifted her dress. The Woman neither spoke nor slowed her pace as the Boy held her dress up and watched the sway of her buttocks. Then she stopped suddenly. The Boy hastily dropped her dress.

"I'm tired. Let's rest," the Woman said.

She left the path and walked through the undergrowth to a large maple. She set the bag of groceries down and leaned it against the trunk of the tree. With a sigh she sat down on the leaf-covered ground, stretched her legs, smoothed her dress, closed her eyes and leaned back.

The Boy followed her, watched her momentarily, and then sat beside her.

When the breathing of both had slowed down from the hard climb, the Woman opened her eyes and looked at the Boy. "Why did you do what you just did?" she asked.

The Boy turned to her, but no words came. He was unable to explain. He shrugged his shoulders, and returned his attention to the birds flying freely about the tree tops.

The Boy broke the peaceful silence when he turned to her and said hurriedly, "I only wanted to see what you looked like. LuAnn and Tom were telling me . . ."

After a short pause the Woman asked, "What did LuAnn and Tom tell you?"

The Boy studied the Woman's face, then said, "They were talking about playing doctor . . . and the guys at school have been talking, too." He abruptly turned his attention back to the birds.

"I think I know how you feel—awfully dumb."

She began unbuttoning her dress. The Boy turned back to her and stared as she slid the dress from her shoulders, first one sleeve, then the other.

"I felt the same way at your age. Only I had to find out the hard way. So if you're bound to find out, I guess now is as good a time as any. I don't want you to find out from some giggly girl."

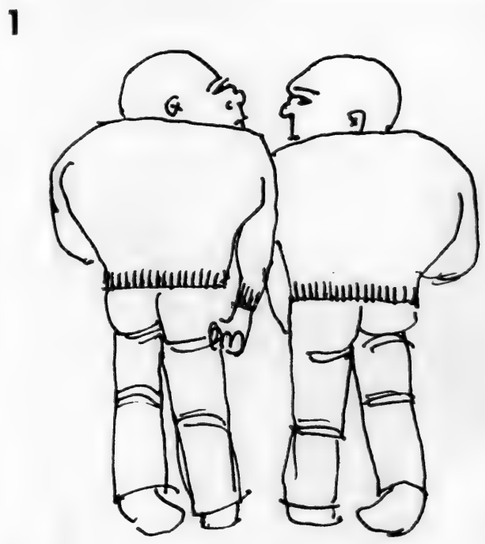
As her breasts came into the Boy's sight, a pounding began in his head; slowly at first, then faster and faster. A loud and persistent No No No No kept running through his thoughts. But another instinct, more demanding, was screaming Yes Yes Yes Yes. When the Boy reached for the Woman the No's faded away, and he was aware only of Yes, Yes and the Woman's warm heavy breasts.



In the distance a large anvil shaped thunderhead had developed. The lightning inside the cloud caused a deep rumble of thunder to roll down over the Boy and the Woman beneath the tree.

By STUART BALL

Records were made to be broken, but no one thought Manly's record of 71 points in one game would fall this season. No one except the SAE's that is. With marked determinism they went out to break the record, broke it, and in so doing walloped a previously unbeaten St. Anthony Hall team.

The final score in the one sided contest was 88-0 and at times it appeared that an invisible pair of hands was guiding the ball into the SAE's hands. Fumbles, and pass interceptions both aided the SAE's as they scored over two points a minute and averaged a touchdown every three minutes.

Bob Segrest scored three times and Vinny Giles, Scott Trotter, and Keith Stoneman each scored twice. Three others scored TD's to add to two safeties and six extra points after touchdowns. In three contests the SAE's have scored 189 points while holding the opposition scoreless.

Carolina, Clemson Are Close In ACC Football Statistics

North Carolina's opponent this weekend, Clemson has been a rough customer for Tar Heel teams in past seasons. This year the teams are quite even in all aspects of the game after six contests.

The Tigers, after losing three straight contests in their den, Death Valley, are 2-4. Consecutive victories against South Carolina and Wake Forest also gave the Tar Heels a 2-4 mark.

Last week the Tigers, coached by Frank Howard, gave unbeaten Auburn a scare before bowing, 17-14.

But the hard-nosed Tigers have done a little better rushing. They've averaged 153.2 per game for a total of 919 yards on the ground. This puts them fourth in the ACC. UNC is eighth.

Total offense figures find the weekend opponents separated by only 37 yards. UNC has a 221.8 per game mark, Clemson a 258.2 figure.

Maryland still leads the ACC in total offense (336.2 average) and pass offense (186.2 average). South Carolina holds the rushing offense lead with a 187.8 mark.

On defense, the Tigers are almost a hundred yards better than ground they've yielded 213.9 per game. Likewise Clemson is tough on rushing foes — yielding 119.2 per contest.

Clemson has given up 753 air-yards for a 125.5 mark, and the Tar Heels have yielded 759 for a 126.5 mark.

Failure Of Churches To Act Is Blamed For Racial Crisis

By BILL DOWELL

"Segregation could not exist if it had not been condoned by the churches," Dr. Benjamin Mayes, president of Morehouse College, said in the last of a two-part lecture series in Gerrard Hall Tuesday night.

Dr. Mayes went on to say that slavery itself would probably never have existed if the churches had spoken against it.

For the most part, he said, ministers in the South have been the last ones to make any moves against segregation. There have been exceptions, he said, but as a rule the churches have been more concerned with holding the right Biblical views than with affecting social change.

The church even reaches a point, he said, where it sometimes ostracizes a man for practicing the Christian brotherhood its ministers preach.

Mayes said he sometimes felt that the most conservative organizations in society were the churches and the universities. That is paradoxical, he said, because it is the churches duty to regenerate mankind, and yet the institution which is supposed to regenerate men is conservative. It is paradoxical for colleges and universities too, he said, because they are supposed to search for truth and are also supposed to be somewhat liberal.

Mayes said he criticized the church because it claims to be God's creation and not the work of man and yet it separates men along human likes and dislikes.

All churches, he said, claim that God created all mankind and that all human life has an intrinsic value, that there aren't Jews, males or females but all one in Jesus Christ.

"The church cannot be the Church of Christ, God's House," he went on, "if it denies worship and membership to any man because of race, creed or national origin. You may call it a church if it does, but please don't dignify it by calling it the House of God. Call it something else."

Mayes said he didn't know what would happen if 50 or 75 white people suddenly went into a Negro church on a Sunday. He said they would probably panic. The leaders would be afraid of losing their individual positions and influence, he said. In a reverse situation, he said, the whites would be afraid of social intermingling.

We like people to have faith in God, Mayes said, but we don't trust Him enough ourselves to believe that everything will turn out all right.

Engineers Group Accredits UNC Master's Degree

The Master of Science graduate program in Sanitary Engineering in the School of Public Health has been accredited by the Engineers' Council for Professional Development.

Dr. Daniel Okun, Head of the Sanitary Engineering Department, said this is the first instance in which the Council has acted to extend its system of accreditation to graduate programs in engineering. The Council has been accrediting engineering educational programs for 30 years.

UNC has been engaged in education and research in sanitary engineering since 1920 and is now entirely on a graduate basis with programs leading to the MSSE and the Ph.D. It is among the leading institutions in the field of sanitary engineering in the country.

Vanderbilt Asked To Remain In NSA

President Inman Allen learned Tuesday that the Vanderbilt Student Senate had voted 14-12 to withdraw. He called Student Government President Tom Abernathy and urged him to veto the action.

In a statement last week, Abernathy said that he would not veto the Senate's bill. However, according to Allen, Abernathy indicated that he planned Tuesday to halt the withdrawal action. Last night would have been his last chance to do this.

A telegram was sent Tuesday night by Allen; Mike Lawler, vice-president; Harry DeLung, NSA coordinator; and Chuck Wrye and Jim Clotfelter, DTH editors. The telegram urges Vanderbilt's Abernathy to "re-evaluate your position" concerning NSA.

"It is particularly important that southern schools take a more active part in the national functions of NSA," it said.

SCHOOLS CONTACTED

At the same time, N.S.A. Coordinator Harry DeLung wrote all N.S.A. member schools in the Carolinas-Virginia region, urging them to send telegrams. DeLung and Allen called strategic regional schools Tuesday and yesterday, urging action.

Allen said he based his decision to act in this case on "the responsibility of a great southern university to seek a more just representation of the South in N.S.A." He added, "Whether southern schools agree with all majority opinions of N.S.A. or not, they must acknowledge that it is speaking for American students on an international level. The South deserves a part in this voice."

Vanderbilt's Senate acted last Wednesday to withdraw. According to members, the action was not considered as hostile towards N.S.A. But, it was taken because some members felt that Vanderbilt was not getting enough out of its membership in the association.

For many years, Vanderbilt has sent delegates to the National Student Congress. They have been active spokesmen on various resolutions, generally taking a conservative stand.

ALL AGREE TO TELEGRAM

All of the individuals at regional schools called by Allen and DeLung agreed to send telegrams. These include Duke, N. C. State, Sweet Briar, and Hollins. N.S.A. member schools out of the Carolinas-Virginia region contacted were the Universities of Texas and Florida and Agnes Scott College in Atlanta.

In the telegram sent from here, the signers indicated that they planned to visit Vanderbilt to assist the school in getting "the maximum out of N.S.A. membership."

DeLung said, "I hope to explain to student government officers at Vandy the ways which N.S.A. material and services have been used here in the areas of student co-ops, dorm social improvements, foreign student programing, symposiums and lectures sponsored by the Carolina Forum and the YMCA-YWCA, legislative resolutions, and academic affairs."

SP, UP Chairmen Offer Party Views

Robin Britt, SP

The only criteria by which a campus political party can be judged is its record, that is its contribution to Student Government. An examination of this year's activities demonstrates clearly that your vote in the Fall elections should be a Student Party vote.

Look at the record of the two parties since the beginning of this school year. The Student Party has investigated dormitory libraries and made recommendations to the IDC through our members in that body. Dorm libraries will be a reality by the end of this semester.

The Student Party is taking action to procure a large, forty capacity bus for Student Government. This bus will provide bus service to Ehringhaus-Craige dormitories, make runs to Woman's College on week ends, and be available for use by campus organizations. If Legislature appropriates the money, this bus will be in operation by the end of this semester.

Definite arrangements have been made for open houses and combo parties with dormitories at Woman's College. The Student Party received a letter from the President of the Student Government at Woman's College setting December 1 as the date for the first open house and combo party at WC.

Artist-in-residence has been cited year after year as a project that Student Government should undertake. Until now no effective action has been taken. The Student Party is communicating with several writers in an effort to procure the best possible artist for next year. (Thornton Wilder has been mentioned as a possibility.) We definitely plan to obtain an outstanding artist for the campus next year.

In short the Student Party is undertaking an effective program to fulfull the promises contained in our platform from last spring: the University Party is not. (It is also interesting to note that the Student Party has met five times prior to our nominating convention while the University had met only once prior to theirs.)

The record then paints in black and white the relative contributions of the two parties to the campus this fall. The Student Party candidates for class office have been instrumental in our work this fall and will continue this record throughout the year. The Student Party is indeed the Symbol of Progress in Student Government and your Student Party vote is a vote for the continuation of that progress.

Mike Chanin, UP

As University Party chairman I, Mike Chanin, would like to make the following comments on the upcoming election.

These fall elections will show a change in student voting habits. No longer will students vote for a man because he is supported by a particular group, or because he is a fraternity man or a dorm man. This year the candidates are being judged by their qualifications, their drive, and their ideas.

Because of this, I feel the University Party offers the outstanding candidates this fall. Our candidates come from every area of campus life. Two of them are dorm presidents, two were elected to hold office for their classes last year, and two were elected President of their high school classes. They all have realistic plans for their classes during the coming year and they have the drive to carry them out.

I think that the main reason that we have such outstanding candidates is the competition for University Party endorsement that took place at our convention. The competition was such that five out of fifteen endorsements required run-offs. The University Party is seeking to make itself active in all areas of campus life, and I think our candidates show this effort.

I would urge all my fellow students to learn the candidates' platforms and their qualifications before voting next Tuesday. Then, they should cast their vote as they choose on the basis of these platforms and qualifications.

LATE BULLETIN

In his veto message to the body last night, he cited the telegram received from UNC.

The student Senator who introduced the bill to withdraw Vandy from NSA has reportedly threatened to seek impeachment of Abernathy.

A two-thirds vote is needed to override the veto. Late reports indicate that this will not be reached.

Russia Speeding Dismantling Of Cuban Missiles

WASHINGTON (UPI) — President Kennedy conferred with his top advisers on Cuba Tuesday as strong indications reached Washington that Russia was speeding efforts to dismantle Soviet missile bases on the island.

At the same time, the State Department granted permission for Soviet First Deputy Premier Anastas Mikoyan to make a one-day stop in New York Thursday on a Moscow-to-Cuba trip. Mikoyan's Cuban goal may be to force Premier Fidel Castro into line on a Cuban settlement.

These developments came as U.N. Secretary General Thant concluded his two-day trip to Havana by announcing that discussions on Cuba would continue in New York. A U.N. announcement said there was general agreement that the world organization should participate in settlement of the problem.

Reports from Havana indicated that Castro was dragging his feet on any agreement for unconditional U.N. verification of the Soviet missile withdrawal. Castro's maneuvering in the talks with Thant was seen as a possible face-saving step.

Western diplomats in Moscow said Mikoyan might try to buoy up both Soviet and Cuban prestige. Mikoyan's Cuban mission was said to involve a new Soviet-Cuban trade agreement. But there was speculation his chief aim was to push Castro into line on admittance of U.N. observers to verify the missile withdrawal.

Modified Open Trial Plan OKed After Lengthy Debate

Students Get Reprimands For Quiet Hour Violation

Guilty pleas from three students were accepted, and one student was acquitted in an open IDC-court trial Tuesday night.

Three freshmen and a junior were accused of breaking dormitory quiet hours, steaming up a section of their dorm floor and flooding the bathroom floor by taking a steam-bath in the shower.

Two of the freshmen and the junior pleaded not guilty to the first charge, guilty to the second and "nolo contendere" to the third. The third freshman involved pleaded not guilty to all three charges.

The court gave the three students wh opleaded guilty an official reprimand. It dropped the third charge, to which they had pleaded "nolo contendere." The third freshman was acquitted altogether.

In cases where a student pleads guilty, sntence is mandatory under the student government constitution. The chairman of the court explained that while it is not a criminal offense to take a steam-bath, the court does have the right to control steam baths when they reach the point where they are damaging the dormitories.

The official reprimand does not go on the student's permanent record, but it is filed with the Dean of Men's office for four and a half months. The chairman of the court explained that while the reprimand had no immediate affect it could reflect on the student in a future IDC case involving the same kind of disturbance.

STUDENT PARTY

Jack Harrell
Freshman President

I would appreciate your printing the following as an open letter to the students of my class.

Have any of you ever asked yourselves what running for a class office really involves? A conscientious candidate must put much time and hard work into his campaign. He must make it his primary concern. And yet, even with these trying demands, people seek posts in student government. Why? What makes a person willing to sacrifice his time, his efforts and his resources for an office?

The answer to this question is "interest." A person must have an interest in the type of work he will be doing and in the effect of this work toward helping his school and fellow students.

We, the Freshman Student Party candidates, have a good platform, a platform of benefit to each person in our class. It covers all phases of campus life, from academic (through an increased Freshman participation in the honors program and "A" courses) to social (in a more effective dorm entertainment program). But this program, no matter how good in concept, will never be realized unless those who must carry it out have the essential devotion for the responsibilities of their office and to fellow students. The Student Party has a slate of candidates who will enthusiastically approach their tasks of serving our class.

I promise you that if elected president, I will always serve the Freshman Class and the Student Body with their best interests in mind. I will make the office more than a figurehead position by constantly striving for improvement and increased Freshman benefits and recognition.

LET'S MAKE THIS FRESHMAN YEAR AT CAROLINA!!

* * *

Sophomore President

To the Editor,

Many of you have heard it said, I am sure, that class officers are useless, that they do very little or nothing because they have very little or nothing to do. This, I believe, is far from the truth. There have been examples in the past few years of individuals serving in class positions who have done a great deal toward increasing and exercising the responsibilities of these offices. I believe that class officers can and should play a vital role in the life of student government on this campus.

To promote an dencourage the efficiency of class officers, I favor,

1) an inter-class council composed of the presidents of the four classes to coordinate and consolidate the activities of the classes, and yet

(2) still retain class autonomy through individual projects such as the bringing of outstanding speakers to this campus, and the recognition of outstanding students

UNIVERSITY PARTY

Earl Johnson
Freshman President

Earl Johnson is the University Party's candidate for the President of the Freshman Class. Johnson is asking for election on the basis of his qualifications and his platform. He graduated from Broughton High School in Raleigh where he was Vice-President of the Student Council, President of the Senior Class and member of the Hi-Y, Key and Service Clubs. He was All-State, All-Southern, and All-American in football and All-State, All-East in basketball, and lettered in track. In addition, he was Governor of Boy's State and a delegate to Boy's Nation in Washington, D. C. Earl is a pre-dental student and a member of the freshman basketball squad.

When asked about his platform, Earl stated, "I feel that the best student government is the one which involves the most studnts. Therefore I would set up a Cabinet System of class leadership. Within this cabinet will be positions to take care of the major problems that we face as Freshmen. I see these problem areas as academic, social, and communication between class offiers and class members. My platform will go into detail on these various programs—such as Freshman Weekend and a Freshman Queen—that I would institute as class president."

Earl added, "I urge all Freshmen to read the platforms offered, to check the qualifications of the candidates, and then to vote for the candidate of their choice Tuesday, Nov. 6.

* * *

Sophomore President

I am running for president of Sophomore class as a University Party candidate. I feel that I am well qualified for this office both on my past record and my present interest and enthusiasm. Last year I had the opportunity to serve as treasurer of the class. On the cabinet I was also ex-officio chairman of the Finance Committee. The experience which I gained by serving in these positions was invaluable in guiding me as I chose my platform, and will be invaluable to me in carrying it out if elected.

The major points of our platform are the following: (1) Expansion of the Dorm Problems Committee. This is a committee composed of members who will go out to the sophomores on campus and find out their individual complaints. These complaints will be forwarded either by the cabinet or by petition to the administration for action. (2) Better balance between the dormitories and fraternities on the class cabinet. This will be done by unbiased selection of the cabinet based on interest and qualifications. There will be positions on committee available to all people who are sincerely interested in working for the class. (3) Continuation of a Scholarship

Defendant Still Able To Require Closed Hearing

"Open" trials in honor council cases will be voted on by the student body in the fall elections.

The constitutional amendment provides for two DTH reporters to be present at all trials, except when the defendent requests a closed trial. It was approved by Student Legislature with only three negative votes.

Virtually all of the debate on the issue before the legislature Tuesday night concerned a proposed amendment which would have set up an appeals board to consider all requests for a closed trial. It was defeated 19-15.

The three-man appeals board would have been composed of the president of the student government, the chairman of the Men's or Women's Council, and the men's or women's attorney general. It would have been the final authority for any student not desiring an "open" trial.

Bob Jones, (Ind.) who introduced the bill with Charles Cooper (SP), called the proposed amendment the only way of assuring that "open" trials would serve any educational function to the campus.

The feeling that without the amendment, there would continue to be very few "open" trials was expressed by Ford Rowan (SP). Rowan said, "We are getting too big to be satisfied with the status quo; we must adjust and improve our judicial system. We must remove the 'secrecy' from our honor system."

Walt Dellinger, chairman of the Men's Council, told the body that a "tradition of open trials can be established" even if the defendant can demand a closed trial.

When asked if he favored letting the chairman of the council report the trial rather than DTH reporters, Dellinger expressed fear that a chairman might not be objective all the time. "It's very difficult to write something yourself if you feel you might have made a mistake."

Frank Adkinson (SP) asked Dellinger if he thought it would be "constructive" for the DTH to "splash a mistake of the council all over the front page." Dellinger replied "yes."

Bev Haynes, chairman of the women's council, questioned the compatibility of the appeals board amendment with the tradition of due process in state and federal courts. "The issue of this proposal (appeals board) is the right of the public as opposed to the right of the individual."

Mike Lawler, speaker, read a report from the now-extinct student council done in conjunction with the administration which stated that the honor system was based on "honor" and not on "law," and was therefore not bound to follow any procedures used in other courts.

Ford Rowan denied that the appeals board would deny any right given to defendants in other judicial systems in the U. S. He noted that for a defendant in court to have a closed trial, he must get permission from the judge. He said the judge in this case would be the appeals board.

After the appeals board amendment was defeated, Miss Haynes told the body that the bill had her full support.

Scott Summers (SP) told the DTH that even if the student body accepts the constitutional amendment without the appeals board, he felt the change was of "little substance."

Voting on the amendment providing for an appeals board was as follows:

Constitutional Rights: Let's Be Consistent

Carolina's honor system and honor council setup is not patterned after Federal or state courts—or, at least, that is what we have always been told.

Rights guaranteed to defendants by the U.S. constitution do not necessarily apply to UNC honor cases with potential jail sentences, whereas honor system penalties involve only a potential loss of a privilege (attending the University).

We had always been told this by the members of the men's and women's honor councils, and in past appeals, by the late constitutional Student Council and the UNC administration.

But Thursday night the chairman of the women's council said there was danger that required "open" trials would be an infringement on the student's constitutional rights, She cited several Federal court decisions.

In apparent shock at this "new" concept, the Legislature recessed and attempted to ascertain its legal position.

As things calmed down, several legislators pointed out that past state, trustee and administration opinions had differentiated the legal rights of the students from those of the citizen. The men's honor council chairman retorted that, in view of the confusion caused by the Ann Carter case, the administration now was less sure of its legal position.

All right. So let's accept the women's council premise in perfect faith—but let's be consistent.

* * *

Legally speaking, the student probably should have the power to waive his right of an open trial. (Remembering, of course, that what UNC calls "open" trials are anything but open—no names are used, no one except reporters can attend, the time and place of the trials are generally kept secret . . . And, additionally, when a citizen waives his right to an open trial, he must do this through the offices of the judge, not by independent action.)

But if we assume that the UNC honor councils must be brought into line with U. S. constitutionality, there are several injustices which are apparent and should occupy the primary attention of honor council members.

—The law says a defendent can choose his own defense counsel. At UNC a defendent doesn't have this right—he can't be defended by a lawyer or even b ya law student or even by a graduate student in another department. And, for that matter, the honor councils barely recognize the principle of defense attorneys.

—The law says that decisions of juries must be unanimous. At UNC it only takes a majority decision by the council to suspend a defendant. Why shouldn't this be reconciled with the basic rights of the United States citizen?

* * *

UNC's court setup has always been based on honor, not law—honor council members have always been proud of this, and have stressed this point.

If they now wish to bring the system into line with Federal and state judicial practices, more power to them, but let them be consistent. Students must be given positive, as well as negative, rights. (JC)

Watered-Down Water

To members of our esteemed Student Legislature the following dialogue from a recent Jules Feiffer cartoon might sound familiar:

First man: "Don't think I don't understand you idealists. I was an idealist myself before I joined the administration but then I learned —politics is the art of the possible."

Second man: "Shrewd, very shrewd." (The remainder of first man's remarks are interspersed by the second man with comments of "Brilliant tactics" and "I get it.")

First man: "You'd like us to take a stand, introduce a bill supporting that stand, offend the special interests and get clobbered. No sir, we in the (heh,heh) establishment are a bit cleverer than that.

"We make our stand, introduce a bill milder than the stand, we have taken, make a deal to water it down with amendments in order to get another watered down bill we want out of committee . . .

". . . And then get both bills on to the floor for a vote where they're defeated."

"This gives us an issue to campaign on while freeing us from having to implement a meaningless bill which would have cost us votes on future measures that we might feel equally strong about."

"It's easy to be principled, but it's another thing to get your program through."

And on this note the nation progresses—and on campus, the student government gets its program through . . . (JC)

Cops

The student newspaper at the University of Toronto ran the following headline after the homecoming football game last week: "Football: Blues 23, Mustangs 14, Cops 4."

In addition to the healthy amount of athletic excellence there was a healthy amount of another brand of excellence:

Education Board Needs Change

of higher education are not now equipped to meet the crisis that now confronts them and soon, barring immediate and drastic action, will engulf them.

But it is also correct to say that our state-supported schools are a good deal better balanced to meet that crisis today than they were in 1955.

On balancing debt and credit, it seems fair to conclude that the board's contributions to higher education over the past seven years are more meaningful than its shortcomings. Certainly the situation which existed in 1955—a situation marked by unrestrained competition for public favor and public support — has improved.

For these reasons, therefore, the original proposals of the two subcommittees of the Carlyle Commission seem hard to justify. In net effect they would have completely erased the Board of High Education as we now know it. They would have stripped the board of all regulatory authority and, by giving it a membership of eight laymen and seven college presidents, probably would have placed the board under the control of the professional educators.

But, except for the implications they raise the recommendations of the subcommittees are now past history. We are confronted, instead, with a series of recommendations adopted by the full Carlyle Commission designed to do two things: (1) Retain the board as a regulatory-advisory body but shift the emphasis from regulation to the advisory-planning-advocate function, and (2) give laymen a seven-to-four control of the board.

The presence of college presidents on the board has certain obvious values. These men possess the professional "know-how." By participating in board decisions they can help bridge the gulf that now exists between the board and the institutions. And by participating in the board's decisions, the institutions are more likely to later support those decisions.

If the board were to be primarily a regulatory body, then the giving of the vote to college presidents would be questionable. It would, as Major McLendon insists, amount to permitting the college presidents to sit in judgment on their own cases.

LOOKING FOR THE POSITIVE

But if, as is actually the case, the board is to be more of an advisory than a regulatory body, then a great part of the sting is removed from this objection. In this case the benefits to be derived from the presence of college presidents may well outweigh the defects. This would be particularly true if—as seems likely—the voice of the lay members on the board is strengthened by further comprise.

There will, of course, be some dispute as to whether it is wise to shift the emphasis in the board's function from regulation to that of an advisor and an advocate. The best answer, it seems, is that over the past seven years the tendency to emphasize regulation over planning and advisory functions has resulted in too many instances in which the board served more of a negative than an affirmative function.

An effort to push the pendulum away from regulation and toward the planning-advisory-advocate function, therefore, certainly is understandable. It is, if you accept the considered words of some members of the board, simply a case of profiting from experience.

Under these circumstances, then, it seems reasonable to conclude (1) that some change in the function of the Board of Higher Education is in order, and (2) that the changes proposed by the Carlyle Commission will provide that change without emasculating the board or erasing its important place in the development of a system of higher education in North Carolina.

The present danger is not so much the proposed changes in the Board of Higher Education as it is the possibility that an all-out fight in the 1963 General Assembly over these changes will cause the people of this state to lose sight of the other recommendations made by the Carlyle Commission. If that occurs, there is a real risk that North Carolina will be further handicapped in meeting the crisis of the colleges squarely and in time to serve the needs of the host of young people who soon will be pouring down on the college gates.

What Authority For Telegrams?

To the Editors:

A number of students at Stacy Dorm have sent a telegram to the student government president of the University of Mississippi repudiating the right of the U.N.C. student government officials to speak for them in supporting the integration of the University .

Furthermore we would like to ask a few pertinent questions about the telegrams supporting integration.

Under what authority did Allen and Lawler take the action in an official capacity?

Why are they required to do the bidding of the NSA without regard to their own student body?

Did they claim to represent the student body in the telegrams or only themselves? Under what authority did they presume to represent the opinion of all or even a majority of students?

Was student government money used for their telegrams? If so, what body authorized the expenditure?

Meredith Minute Not Supported

To the Editors:

From the comments of late on the Minute for Meredith rally I find that one point has been grossly overlooked.

There have been remarks on the great INTEREST and CONCERN expressed by Carolina students. In my opinion, and I was there for the event, this remark is completely and utterly fallacious. The large majority, myself included, seemed to be there out of curiosity and the "few" hecklers seemed to outnumber the inspired contemplators by about ten to one.

Our editors have seemed to interpret this as a success. This rally was as successful as James Meredith's participation on the Mississippi football team would be.

I realize that our erudite co-editors deem their writings poetic, but I suggest they use their "liscense" on the editorial page and try to concern themselves with facts in their articles.

Trade Phelps For Prisoners

To the Editors:

Your editorial on the P.T.T.C. (Phelp's Trip To Cuba) was excellent. But the cost could run very high, since we would probably have to send him over to our "ally" Great Britain and then from there to Cuba.

I have a suggestion to offer. Why not contact our man in Havana, James Donovan but then; maybe Phelps already has his own man in Havana. Perhaps Donovan could get up another Abel-Powers deal, only this time, the Bay of Pigs prisoners for our own Larry Phelps. Ah, but I have yet another suggestion: why not throw in a few others (Salter & Co.) for a few more prisoners. I am sure there are not enough Phelps and Salter (sounds like spring elections again) friend on this campus yet to get all 1100 prisoners, but maybe we can work something out. By the way, how the hell did Dennis King get mixed up in this?

Hard To Imagine Consolidated U.?

To the Editors:

It is rather hard for a student at UNC, NC State or Woman's College to imagine himself as a student of a consolidated university when:

*State secured loans for fraternity houses by declaring the new houses to be dormitories; Carolina has followed no similar policy.

*WC students see a school produced version of "Pajama Game" free, but Carolina students pay to see a Playmaker version of "Guys and Dolls."

*Beginning German is considered crip at State, moderately difficult at WC and extremely hard at Carolina, but all courses transfer to the other schools with the same credit.

*WC and State enjoy large modern well equipped student unions, but Carolina has an ill equipped cracker box size union.

*WC students are prohibited from drinking except when spending the night away from the campus; Carolina coeds have more liberal rules.

½Students in any branch are required to follow the traffic regulations at the other schools, but a Carolina parking sticker is not valid at State or vice-versa.

*WC is prohibited from having campus political parties and sororities; State and Carolina follow different policies.

*Carolina's IFC has the stronger social regulations and scholarship rules, but State has IFC weekends.

*State has an enormous coliseum where all-campus dances are held, but Carolina does not have a building even large enough to seat its entire student body.

* * *

The idea of a Consolidated University is great, wonderful. It means that a student can get a cheap date ticket for a WC girl to the State-Carolina football game.

Southern And National Leaders Praise USNSA

(Following are messages sent to the 15th National Student Congress in Ohio State, by leaders from the nation and North Carolina.)

President John F. Kennedy:

I am very pleased to send greetings to the 15th National Congress of the USNSA.

The USNSA can review its history with pride on this anniversary. During the 15 years of its existence, the NSA has provided the American student community with a forum for expressing student opinion on vital issues of the day. Its national congresses are invaluable experiences in the workings of democratic legislative processes. The NSA has also developed concrete methods for constructive student action in such areas as academic freedom and civil rights.

But of even more importance than these services to the American student community is the interest that the NSA has always shown in the international student world. With each year, the need to establish and maintain good relations with the students of other countries becomes more widely recognized, and the vital influence that these students exert in many countries becomes more apparent. The NSA, through the establishment of such programs as the International Student Relations Seminar and the Foreign Student Leadership Project, has long sought to both understand and to assist students in their problems and programs the world over. I noted with special interest that the NSA hosted delegates to the International Student Conference at the larges international meeting of students ever held in this country. I congratulate the National Student Association and wish it many more years of success in its responsible representation of American students.

William Friday, UNC President:

I am glad to extend greetings to the USNSA on the occasion of its Fifteenth Anniversary National Congress. NSA has steadfastly upheld the highest ideals for education and worked effectively to make them prevail on the campuses of America. An effective expression of the point of view of students is essential to a democratic educational system. NSA has assured such expression. It has kept a window open on the larger world of international community for many colleges and universities and achieved notable success in its goals for betterment of American education.

* * *

Rep. L. H. Fountain, 2nd District Of North Carolina:

In a day when a profound challenge confronts all Americans, there is no better news for any of us than evidence that the newest generation of adults is rising to meet it.

This country today relies on higher education as never before for the production of future leaders in all fields, leaders who will be capable of continuing our fight against communistic or other dictorial tyrannies wherever they may exist, strengthening the fundamental Constitutional principles upon which this nation was founded and building for Americans, through freedom, a peaceful and fruitful life in a complex and challenging world.

Therefore, we will continue to look with high hope to such spokesmen for concerned students committed to the support of academic freedom, opportunity, and excellence; to the acceptance of student responsibility for the values and institutions which we cherish; and to the building, through understanding, of a sound and lasting world peace with freedom. For this reason it is more than a passing pleasure for me to extend my greetings to the Fifteenth Annual Congress of the USNSA and to express my hope that your conference will be both personally meaningful and richly productive.

* * *

Vice-President Lyndon Johnson:

I appreciate very much the opportunity to extend greetings to the 15th National Student Congress. We are living in times where the importance of promoting higher standards of education and a deeper knowledge of freedom increases every day.

You have my best wishes for a successful meeting and for deliberations that will help achieve worthwhile goals of America.

* * *

Sen. J. W. Fulbright:

The USNSA is to be congratulated for its work in assembling a broad cross-section of our country's student leadership to critically examine the problems which confront our nation and our divided and troubled world. On many occasions, both during my time as a teacher and since I have served in Congress, I have found American college students to have the capacity and the enthusiasm necessary to find solutions to problems which seem insoluable to an older generation.

It is particularly significant and encouraging that the efforts of your organization have been directed to the establishment of communication among students in the academic communities of the free world. There is a strong movement for an increasingly intimate association of those nations which are committed to the principles of democracy and individual liberty. It is a tribute to your association that it is helping to further this trend.

The role of the student in American life is founded on an instinct for unfettered inquiry. I know that this tradition is upheld by the USNSA. Its existence speaks well for the leadership which our country will enjoy in years to come.

* * *

Albertis S. Harrison, Governor of Virginia:

I extend heartiest congratulations to the USNSA as it observes its fifteenth anniversary.

Organizations which promote appreciation of the basic concepts of the American system of government and our great heritage as a free people are to be highly commended and I am particularly pleased to see these objectives among those emphasized by the National Student Association.

Fund started last year with an initial fund of $100 to be given to a senior of the class of 1965 based on need and merit. (4) A meeting of the Presidents of the classes with Dean Henderson and Dean Long to discuss student problems from a student's point of view. This would be an effective way to close the gap now existing between student body and administration. (5) A good social schedule with the possibility of a Sophomore Weekend. We will work with other classes to sponsor such entertainment.

These are the central parts of the platform. I believe that this platform is realistic and effective, encompassing the major areas of last years experience in addition to some new ideas. I hope that every sophomore will show his interest in class government by getting out to vote on November 6th.

Charlie Shaffer, Jr.
Candidate for President of Junior Class, Univ. Party

On behalf of the candidacy of the University Party nominees for the offices of the Junior Class, I feel I should let every junior know exactly what we would like to accomplish if elected.

Our overall desire will be to expand individual participation in class activities. We will attempt to make the Junior class the most significant working force on this campus, and we hope that such a working force will be backed up, not just by the class officers and the committee chairmen, but by every single Junior.

The most significant plank in our platform is the Junior Class Day that we would like to have in the early spring. We would like to have a campus-wide address by some nationally prominent cultural or political figure. This address and a social function to follow will be part of the Junior class's contribution to the entire student body.

In regards to scholastics, we would like to organize the Junior Eggheads, an intellectual debating team that will challenge any other class or, hopefully, the faculty to debates on current events. This debating team organization will bring to the forefront an untapped segment of our class's overall potential.

In an effort to prove that each class can be a significant working force, we would like an organization of intra-class competition to raise money for the March of Dimes, the Heart Fund, and especially the Campus Chest.

Socially, we would like to have a combo party every month for our class and for the campus, and efforts will be made to have outstanding combos, other than the local ones, to play at these social functions.

Our platform contains these items, and others, such as expansion of the Teacher of the Month recognition and the campus-wide essay contest. And, we will attempt to organize downtown sales at reduced prices in order to raise money for our class.

Throughout the realization of our platform lies the desire to unite our class through more interested individual participation and to create an energetic atmosphere by demonstrating that we are worthy and capable of major accomplishments.

(3) a clearing house to work something on the principle of an employment agency; that is, each student government committee, each class committee or any group engaged in student activities which needed help or workers in a project, would make these opportunities known to the clearing house which would, through publicity and personal contact find interested students to fill the part or do the job.

This brings me to the real reason I am running for Sophomore Class President. I believe in student government; I am a strong advocate of it. However, I want it to be student government. By this I mean that every student in this university who has a desire to work in student government should and must get the opportunity to do so. I not believe he is getting that opportunity now.

I would appreciate your consideration and your support.

* * *

Gordon Appell
Junior President

It is a privilege to announce my candidacy for Junior Class President with the Student Party endorsement. I consider it a particular privilege to run as this party's candidate because it is this party which has the reputation of following through its platforms.

This year we have carefully worked out a platform which we know can be fullfilled. We have put the emphasis on academics where we feel the interest of an academic class must reside. Of course, the responsibility of the class officers to plan class sponsored social functions will not be neglected.

The platforms to which we have pledged ourselves is divided into two sections: Academics and Social. That platform is, A. Academic: (1) Continue the Essay Contest on The Student's Concept of the Spirit of Carolina. A monetary prize would be offered for the best essay. (2) Set up panel discussions or debates between the opposing political groups on the campus such as the Y.A.F. and the Socialists. This would facilitate a clarification of issues and give these groups a chance to publicly state their views. (3)Set up a series of speeches to the Student Body on the various major fields of study. It is hoped that this would stimulate interest and confidence in the student's major by knowing more concretely the uses to which he could apply his major after graduation. This would deal mainly with Liberal Arts majors. (4) Strive for student representation on the Faculty Committees dealing directly with students. This non-voting ex-officio representative would facilitate the voicing of student suggestions and grievences to these committees.

B. Social: (1) Continue the Junior Classics Basketball Game which has been an unqualified success in the past. (2) Conduct campus-wide sales at Town and Campus as a fund raising program. This also was a success in the past as arranged by past Student Party officers. (3) Having raised the necessary funds in the two above mentioned ways, and others, we would have combo parties as often as the money allowed. We would not sacrifice the quality of these parties to quantity, however. (4) Plan a Coed Day in the Spring with a campus-wide all out blast that night.

The Student Party candidates feel that this is a strong platform and will work enthusiastically to accomplish these projects with the aid of an expanded class cabinet.

Frosh Host Maryland Friday; Harper Ruff Out With Injury

By JOHN MONTAGUE

The Tar Baby footballers go back to work tomorrow afternoon after a three-week lay-off, as Maryland's Toy Terps pay a visit to Kenan Stadium. Kick-off time is 2 o'clock and admission is free to all.

Coach George Barclay's forces are well rested and ready to go in quest of their third win in four outings. The battle with the invaders from College Park tomorrow will be the first outing for the frosh since they trimmed Wake Forest, 35-7, on October 12.

In two other games this season, the Tar Babies held off N. C. State, 16-12, and bowed to Clemson, 21-7. After the game tomorrow the UNC yearlings have only one game left —a Thanksgiving Day clash with Duke's Blue Imps at Durham.

"Our offense has improved a lot, especially our passing," said Barclay, obviously pleased with his team's progress during the three weeks of practice.

In reference to his team's pass defense, which was full of holes in the first two games, but showed signs of improvement in the game with Wake, Barclay said, "The defensive secondary has tightened up. We've been working against the varsity and this has helped us."

One big concern is the loss of Harper Ruff, the team's leading ground gainer. The big fullback from Oxford hurt his knee in a scrimmage last week and will not see action against Maryland.

Ruff has picked up 115 yards in 26 carries, and there is only one other player on the squad who is even close to Ruff in this department. He is Bob Wise, the running back from Grove City, Pa., who has 112 yards in 32 hauls.

Rounding out the top five in the ground gaining category are Jimmy Byrd (61 yards in 18 carries), Jim Harrington (58 yards in 23 hauls) and Charlie Ephland (50 yards in 17 carries).

Second-string quarterback Byrd also holds the edge on his first-team counterpart Harrington in the passing department. Byrd has connected on 8 of his 19 tosses for 130 yards. Harrington has hit on only 13 of his 37 pitches, good for 117 yards.

Among the receivers, end John Atherton leads the pack. He has grabbed five passes for 51 yards and one touchdown. Wingback Gene Link has caught two for 51 yards and wingback Alan McArthur has snared two tosses for 49 yards.

Frank Bowman, 5-10, 185-pounder from Richmond, Va., will get the call at fullback in place of the injured Ruff. He is backed up by Jim Schuetz.

The only other injury on the squad during the three weeks of hard practice was to second-team tackle Joe Churchill, who turned his ankle Tuesday. Two players who missed the Wake Forest game, end Bob Denlinger and running back Max Chapman, are completely healed. So are several other players who were held to part-time duty against the Deacons.

Maryland comes to Chapel Hill with a 2-1 record. They beat the George Washington frosh and Bullis Prep, but lost a 13-11 contest to Virginia. They have good size, and Coach Barclay expects them to throw the ball a lot.

Undefeated Kappa Sig Romps, 66-0

By STUART BALL

For the second straight day high scoring was the key-note of Fraternity Division tag football. Trying hard to top Monday's record breaking 88-0 score by the SAE's, the Kappa Sigs put on a show of their own in a 66-0 romp over the Theta Chis Scoring 33 points in each half, the Kappa Sigs tallied ten touchdowns with Jerry Helms accounting for three. Dave Fletcher and Pete Farrior scored two each, and Clayton Burns was responsible for a TD and three point after touchdowns. The one sided victory ran the Kappa Sigs' total point count to 125 for three games, second only to SAE's 189.

Moving to the other extreme, Zeta Psi and Phi Kappa Sigma played a scoreless tie for 39½ minutes before the Zetes broke through for a score. Sam Thompson scored a six-pointer with only 30 seconds remaining in the game and kept the Zeta Psis unbeaten and unscored on.

Phi Delt righted itself after losing a close one to the Kappa Sigs two weeks ago and rolled to a 34-0 win over TEP. Mac Boxley, Bob Reagan, Tom Cummings, Charlie Jonas, and Charlie Battle all accounted for touchdowns for Phi Delt.

Bob Lacey: UNC's Magician

Makes Pass-Receiving Look Easy

By JOEL BULKLEY

"More tape, more tape, give me some more tape," a Carolina football player yelled across the locker room. In his office next door the trainer stood up and replied, "Lacey, if you don't stop using so much tape, we'll never have enough for the rest of the season."

As any Tar Heel footballer can tell you it was just another afternoon of pre-practice fun for the Laceys. And of course the people involved are none other than wide-end, Bob Lacey, one of UNC's biggest claims to fame this year, and John Lacey, the varsity's veteran trainer.

Bob is a 20-year-old junior from Pelham, New York, and is well known to the students here because of his ability as a versatile athlete. Besides lettering in football last year "Lace" participated in intramural basketball in the winter and also received his varsity track letter in the spring, while competing in the javelin, discus and shot put events.

Bob attended Trinity Pawling, a prep school in upper New York state, where he was a three-letter man — football, basketball and track — for two years prior to his entering UNC. In fact Bob was destined to attend the University of Michigan until some friends at home suggested he apply to Carolina. He did and thanks to a few letters entered here as a freshman. After two months of frosh football he had earned himself a scholarship and has since become an important part of Tar Heel football plans.

Last fall Lace was third in pass receiving on the varsity, catching 10 for 161 yards. So far this season he has hauled in 26 passes for a total of 426 yards and four touchdowns, including 8 of quarterback Junior Edge's tosses last Saturday against Wake Forest.

On the gridiron there is no room for fooling around for this 6-3, 215-pound athlete. He's a true competitor all the time. In football, as well as in track, Bob's versatility is outstanding. He can block, tackle, run, kick and catch just about anything anywhere. A pulled muscle in his leg prevented Bob from handling any of the kick off chores earlier in the season but now he's set to be Carolina's number one man in this department too.

Bob's A Traveler

Off the field Lace can be found skimming through travel folders seeking a new place to visit. In recent years he has traveled to the west coast where he worked on a dude ranch for a summer and has even gotten as far away from home as Helsinki, Finland, for the 1952 Olympics. He also has hopes of hitting Tokyo for the 1964 Olympics.

Being a saxaphone player of a few years back, Bob also whiles away some of his spare time listening to jazz records or is sometimes on the fairways belting that little white ball around.

If the saying "like father, like son" is the slightest bit true, then it seems certain Bob will be a coach or recreation director real soon. Mr. Lacey is now in his 30th year as track coach at Pelham High School and even served as a State Department sports ambassador to Pakistan a few years ago.

Although Lace is still undecided about his major, he feels social work for coaching is his best bet.

Around the Atlantic Coast Conference the best bet seems to be: Watch out for Bob Lacey, he's a threat in any sport.

Twenty-one students have been selected as Carolina's official delegates and alternates to the State Student Legislature. The group, chosen by competitive testing and interviews by the SSL committee of UNC's student government, contains leaders in many fields of student government.

Alternates

Appointed as official alternates were Bob Spearman, minority floorleader of the legislature; John Shelburne; Sue Russell; Hugh Blackwell; Anne Lupton, clerk of the legislature; Phil Baddour; and Charles Cooper, chairman of the judicial committee.

Carolina will have one of the largest delegations to the SSL, which meets at the end of this month. The seven official alternates will be able to vote and speak only if they take the place of an official delegate on the floor. Unofficial alternates act primarily as observers.

Unofficials

The 24 unofficial alternates appointed were: Harry DeLung, Chandler Van Ormond, Robin Britt, Bill Hobbs, Bo Edwards, Pete Wales, Whitney Durand, Haynes McFadden, Neal Jackson, Jim Barnhill, Barry Hyman, Bill Criswell, Jerry Hancock, Jon Commander, George Rosental, Martin Lancaster, Kenny Mann, Johnsie Massenburg, Munford Yates, Dailey Derr, Dick Ellis, Glenda Lackey, Leon Barber and Mike Chanin.

There will be a meeting of the delegation today at 2 p.m. in Roland Parker I; all members are urged to be present.

The S.S.L. serves as an open forum of student opinion and is made up of delegations from schools throughout the state. Current state and national problems and issues will be discussed and debated.

Major W. D. Locke Leaves Position After 20 Years

Major William D. Locke, professor of air science at the University of North Carolina and executive officer of the University Air Force ROTC unit, retired from active military duty Wednesday after 20 years of service.

Major Locke was presented with a retirement certificate, a letter of appreciation from his commanding officer, and a personal recognition from the unit and University officials. He has been with the University ROTC unit for four years.

In the early phase of World War II, Major Locke was commissioned a 2nd Lieutenant in the Army Air Corps and shortly thereafter was assigned to the European Theater of Operations as a P-47 pilot. He flew 83 aerial missions comprising 213 combat hours. For his performance in the war, he was awarded the Distinguished Flying Cross.

In 1947 he accepted a commission in the regular Air Force and was ordered to Japan where he served in a Fighter Intercepter Squadron. He was one of the first Air Force officers to see action in the Korean War. He was shot down in August 1950 and became a Prisoner of War. He flew 41 aerial missions over Korea and received the Purple Heart as well as an oak leaf cluster to his Distinguished Flying Cross.

After Korea, Major Locke served in various capacities in this country and later in Europe before coming to UNC. He is a native of Enfield, N. C. and a 1940 graduate of High Point College. His wife, also a native of North Carolina, is from High Point. They will remain residents of Chapel Hill.

UMiss Students Warned Against Demonstrations

By LEON DANIEL

OXFORD, MISS. (UPI) — University of Mississippi Chancellor John D. Williams warned Thursday that students face possible expulsion if caught demonstrating against Negro James H. Meredith or Army troops stationed here to insure his safety.

"Swift and drastic disciplinary action, including expulsion from the university, can be expcted," Williams warned in special meetings Thursday with all male students.

The threat Thursday apparently signaled the most serious crackdown by university officials against student violence here. The warning followed a quickening in the sporadic incidents of rock and bottle throwing and name calling.

Soviet Physicist Landau Is Nobel Prize Recipient

STOCKHOLM (UPI) — Soviet physicist Lev Davidovic Landau, who recovered four times from "clinical death" after an accident, was awarded the Nobel physics prize Thursday for his research on gases. Two British scientists shared the chemistry prize.

Dr. John C. Kendrew, 45, and Vienna-born Dr. Max Perutz, 48, who work together at the Cavendish Laboratory in Cambridge, England, were honored for their studies of hemoglobin and myoglob, two proteins which makes blood and muscles red and form links in the body's oxygen supply. They will share the $50,000 prize, the same value as Landau's.

Landau, a 53-year old Russian Jew, still is in serious condition from the automobile accident last January. He told a Western visitor in Moscow hospital he was delighted to have received the prize. But he was not allowed further visitors.

No Brain Damage

Landau incurred a fractured skull, fractured pelvis, and nine broken ribs in the crash. The Soviet press reported his heart stopped briefly four times during his recovery — "clinical death" — but that he was revived without brain damage.

Although Landau's research concerned liquefied gases, it was stated authoriatively that it had no connection with rocket fuels, liquid or solid. He is a specialist on low temperature physics, studying the effect on gases by converting them to solid or liquid by reducing their temperature to the nearest attainable point to absolute zero—459.7 degrees below zero, Fahrenheit.

The Swedish Academy of Sciences, which awarded the prizes, singled out Landau for his pioneer work on helium. It acts like no other gas at low temperature and even will flow upward as a liquid.

Landau's contribution was to develop a theory which made it possible for other physicians to predict the behavior of helium at certain stages of liquefaction, opening the way for more and better uses of the gas.

Perutz, who has lived in England more than 20 years, said he was "extremely pleased" with the award. He described the work carried on with Kendrew on the two globular proteins, hemoglobin and myoglobin, which he called "the chemical machine of life." "Hemoglobin makes blood red. It is the substance someone is short of if he is anemic," Perutz said. "Myoglobin makes muscles red. Steak is not red because of blood, but because of myoglobin. Hemoglobin takes oxygen from blood to the tissues.

Rioting Indian Students Protest Invasion By Reds

NEW DELHI (UPI) — Rioting Indian students Thursday smashed a Chinese restaurant and shops, burned a figure of Communist Chinese Premier Chou En-loi, and stoned a Communist party office in an angry protest to the Communist invasion of their country.

On the border battlefronts, the only action reported was Chinese mortar fire. Prime Minister Jawaharlal Nehru took over as defense minister and sent the man he demoted from the post, V. K. Krishna Menon, on a one-day trip to the battle headquarters of Tezpur, where a crowd cheered him.

Women Sell Gold

Indian women, including Nehru's daughter, sold their gold jewelry to help the government buy arms and even the Indian "Chinese Party condemned "Chinese aggression" and backed Nehru. India thanked the United States for offering military aid, but Pakistan appeared worried that the weapons might be used against it.

An angry crowd of about 500 students split off from a protest demonstration of 10,000 students in downtown New Delhi to attack the fashionable Golden Dragon Chinese Restaurant. Police fought the rioters but could not prevent them from shattering the windows of the restaurant and ripping down the Chinese characters forming its sign. They also damaged a Chinese shoemaker's shop and curio store.

Shouting "death to the invader" and "drive the Chinese back to the China wall," the students waved aloft an effigy of Chou and later set it afire.

Then they turned on the parliamentary headquarters of the Indian Communist Party, pelting the office with stones. Some Communists defending the office threw stones at the rioters and three or four students were injured.

Reds Oppose Invasion

The rioting in New Delhi's smart Connaught Circle district broke out only a short time before the Communist Party of India, which has been split on the issue, announced its opposition to the border attacks. After two days of debate, it appeared to all sections of the people to unite in defense of the motherland against Chinese aggression." It approved buying weapons abroad but opposed sending foreign troops to India.

Race Is On— Can You Find Ugliest Man?

By CHRIS FARRAN

The Ugliest Man on Campus contest is in full swing—from three to tree.

The kick-off was held Saturday at the Wake Forest game, when religion got kicked in the teeth 23-14, a fitting omen for the start of the UMOC contest.

Voting boards are now placed in three strategic buildings on campus, like Y-Court, Lenoir Hall, and the Circus Room; which qualify as strategic places because you can (a) eat there; and (b) watch the girls there.

Votes are 1c each, or more, if you are (a) drunk; or (b) with a girl you'd like to impress. The candidate getting the most money wins for the sponsoring organization one year's possession of a large trophy. The Ugly One himself wins an all-expense paid date with a campus beauty — whose name is being kept secret to protect her mother. In fact her name is so secret that she doesn't know the good news yet herself . . . this will certainly be a big surprise for the lucky girl!

"Jungle Jim," otherwise known to the free world as David Lobdell, was last year's winner from Cobb Dorm. He could win again if be were sponsored by Cobb Dorm, because so few girls have such magnificiently hairy chins; but Dave is sponsored by Mangum dorm this year. Never before has a winner sought to be Ugliest twice. Maybe it's habit-forming. Maybe he knows who the Lucky Girl will be. Maybe he's the Prophet of Something New.

Other entries and their sponsoring organizations are:

Asian Foe, sponsored by the DU's; "Open Gates, from Joyner Dorm; The Mature Nail, from TEP; the Monster from Philips Hall; Rogah, escaped from Everett Dorm; Troll, courtesy of the SAE's; Avery Ghoul, from Avery dorm; and Crisis, from the Scabbard and Blade.

The contest is a lot of fun, and there is no truth to the rumor that it is being investigated by the American Legion. It is being investigated by the AEC and those people in white coats from the biology department who are running around looking for mutants.

See, the money raised by the contest goes to the charity HOPE. This is a very worthwhile project and the APO, sponsors of the contest hope that all students will support the fun to the hilt.

So, here's your chance to do Alfred Hitchcock and the Twilight Zone a favor. Strike a blow for Boris Karloff and Lon Chaney!

Vote for the Ugliest Man!

Harrington: This Society Is Cruel

By BILL DOWELL

"This society could in many ways turn out to be the cruelest society man has ever known," Michael Harrington, author of "The Other America," said in Carroll Hall last night.

The new poverty, Harrington said, is more difficult to see because it has been isolated by suburbs and zoning laws.

The lowest estimate by any serious observer, Harrington said, lists the poor in the United States at at least 19 per cent of the population. Harrington said that it was probably a lot closer to 50 million.

The poor in the country now are different, he said, because they are the first minority poor. In a country where the majority are poor, he said, poverty would be the nation's biggest worry. In the United States it is often ignored or hidden.

The new kind of poverty is particularly deadly, he went on, because in it there is none of the hope or advancement that existed in the old slums. The advent of automation and the need of higher education in order to advance, Harrington said, had made crossing the gap from prior to middle class nearly impossible.

The major groups composing the poor, he said, are those over 65, racial minorities, agricultural poor and the industrial rejects.

Of the people over 65, Harrington said, half were living on under $1000 a year. They live not only faced by death and illness, he said, but with no way of getting enough money to live decently on.

Discrimination against Negroes, he went on, increases with professional training so that there is far more discrimination against a Negro doctor than there is against a Negro worker. Th result is that society is increasingly demanding more advanced education, and at the same time making it impossible for Negroes to live when they have it.

The industrial rejects, Harrington said, were a growing problem.

It used to be, he said, that 50 was the age limit for industrial workers; men now have trouble finding jobs in their 40's.

Venezuela U. Head Salutes UNC Progress

"Venezeula's youngest state University is very glad to salute the oldest state university in the United States," said Dr. Luis Manuel Penalver, president of Venezuela's University of the East, who is visiting here this week.

Dr. Penalver extended a message of universal friendship to faculty, administrators, and students of all North Carolina universities. He is visiting the UNC Peace Corps training project to speak to the trainees on the socio-political aspects of life in Venezuela and to acquaint traineers with the Venezuelan educational system.

All universities in Venezuela are free ,according to Dr. Penalver. Students have to pay only for their living facilities. At the University of the East where the majority of the UNC Peace Corps trainees will be performing their two years of volunteer service, the administration is trying to stimulate cooperation between the government and private corporations, Penalver said. He said that 30 per cent of that university is now supported by private corporations while the remainder is government-supported.

Of the UNC Peace Corps group, Dr. Penalver said, "They have a very big interest in their future jobs. They are very enthusiastic and we feel that they will do a very good job in Venezuela."

Dr. Penalver said there is a great pressure for higher education in Venezuela, and generally Venezuelan university students are from the middle classes. The university enrollments are jumping with increases, according to Dr. Penalver. He attributed the growth to the Venezuelan government's tremendous effort to develop the country's educational system.

LATE BULLETIN

GREENSBORO — The Women's College Student Legislature voted Wednesday night to submit a referendum concerning the school's continued membership in the National Student Association to the student body.

UNC Vice President Mike Lawler and N.S.A. Coordinator Harry DeLung have been asked to speak affirmatively for N.S.A. in a four person debate scheduled before the referendum.

"We just heard about the referendum," said DeLung last night. "I'll have to talk to other Student Government officers before I could say what action we will take."

Positions Sought On Faculty Group

Two student legislators are attempting to gain faculty acceptance of a non-voting ex officio student representative on faculty committes which deal directly with the students.

Student body vice-president Mike Lawler has written to Dean Henderson and student representative Gordon Appell has talked with Dean Long regarding student representatives on faculty committees. They plan to follow this with interviews with committee chairmen.

The proposal would affect such committees as the committees on fraternities and sororities, discipline, university government, athletics, and others.

Curtain Closed To Arms

WASHINGTON (UPI)—The United States Thursday reclosed its Caribbean curtain against Soviet arms to Cuba and resumed aerial surveillance to determine whether weapons already there are being dismantled.

The steps were taken as U.N. Secretary General Thant, back in New York after two days in Cuba, was announced by Arthur Sylvester, assistant Defense secretary for public affairs. He said the photos would not be analyzed before Friday, and gave no indication whether the findings would be made public.

Sylvester also flatly denied a report from Key West, Fla., that two American pilots who made flights over Cuba were missing. The report is "without foundation," he said.

Earlier, White House Press Secretary Pierre Salinger confirmed that the arms blockade of Cuba resumed at dawn Thursday after being suspended for the two days Thant was on the island.

In his statement, Sylvester said: "The United States conducted a reconnaissance mission over Cuba Thursday. The planes returned without incident. No analysis of the pictures is expected before Friday morning.

"Reports from Key West that at least two other pilots are missing on a mission over Cuba are without foundation."

By "other pilots" Sylvester said he meant pilots other than Maj. Rudolf Anderson Jr., the Air Force flier whose body the Cubans have agreed to return to the United States.

Salinger Explains Action

In explaining why the picture-making would be resumed, Salinger said Wednesday night: "In the absence of effective United Nations arrangements, the hemisphere nations have th eresponsibility for continuing survillance."

This referred to Thant's apparent inability, during his meeting with Castro and other Cuban leaders, to work out any agreement for inspection of the arms pullout.

In an apparent move to soothe or persuade Castro, the Kremlin dispatched Deputy Premier Anastas Mikoyan to Cuba by way of New York. For one thing, Mikoyan was expected to offer the Cuban premier additional Soviet economic assistance.

U Thant, opening a new round of Cuban-crisis talks at the United Nations, said his two days of discussions with Castro were not unpleasant. The Secretary general was reported "still optimistic about settling the immediate problem" of a U.N.-policed removal of the Soviet arms.

University To Celebrate 'Morehead Day' Tomorrow

John Motley Morehead will be 93 this Saturday. The famous Carol in a graduate, who has served his country as a scientist, diplomat and philanthropist, will celebrate the occasion in his Rye, New York home.

He is now the oldest employee of the Union Carbide Corporation, which he serves as an engineering and chemical consultant. He is a member of the Baptist Church and the Republican Party.

"Uncle Mot" was born in Spray, N. C. and graduated from the University with the Bachelor of Science degree in 1891. While in school here he was a member of Sigma Alpha Epsilon and was tapped by the Golden Fleece.

Upon graduating he went to work in his father's aluminum mill in Spray. In 1892 he discovered a commercial process for the manufacture of calcium carbide which is still used today. The process was verified by Morehead's old Carolina chemistry professor, Pres. Francis P. Venable.

Morehead later devised a method for the analysis of gases that was widely accepted as the most efficient and cheapest procedure. In World War I Pres. Wilson held his abilities in such high regard that he asked Morehead to be in charge of the wartime production of TNT.

Morehead's work in the diplomatic field is hardly less distinguished than his scientific accomplishments. In 1929 he accepted appointment by Pres. Herbert Hoover as Envoy - Extraordinary and Minister - Plenopotentiary to Sweden. For his distinguished work here Morehead was the only foreigner to ever receive the gold medal Kungl from the Swedish government.

But "Uncle Mot is probably best known to most North Carolinians and Carolina students as a great philantrophist. Much of his generosity to Carolina, which includes the gifts of the Morehead-Patterson Bell Tower, the Morehead Planetarium, WUNC Sundial, and the Morehead Scholarships, is well known. But Mr. Morehead has also been very generous in other areas. He has made a substantial contribution toward the establishment of WUNC-TV, Carolina's educational television. In 1953 he gave the station and Morehead Stadium and Chimes to the Tri-City High School at Leaksville-Spray-Draper.

In recognition of Mr. Morehead's many accomplishments, he has been awarded various honorary degrees. These include: an LL.d. from UNC, (1926); a doctorate in Science from Wake Forest (1944); and a doctorate in Engineering from Upsala (1944).

India-China Dispute And Free World Concern

However removed the United States citizen may feel from the bitterly contested border struggles of the Asian Nations, the U. S. Government is in no small degree wading in potential poison.

The agreement to supply arms to India came in due course and as an expected approach to Chinese Communist invasion; and it is of no mean significance that the papers which carry the announcements of U. S. and British arms aid to India carry also the announcement of Krishna Menon's removal from the post of defense minister of that country.

Menon has long been a thorn in virtually every issue of Indian-Western relationships. He has been called by some the "most despised man in the UN," and he has repeatedly allienated British and American ambassadors on several counts. He certainly lost whatever degree of acceptability he then had, in 1956 when he actively championed the admission of Communist China to the UN, against U. S. wishes. And he suffered increasing unpopularity with his vigorous defense of India's invasion of Goa. But he really rose to international prominence when acting as India's representative in long and heated debate over Pakistan-India border disputes.

Which draws reflective attention to further U. S. involvement in the present crisis. Pakistan has long been an American military ally, and is armed with U. S. supplies. They are using those very arms to establish border patrols along their Indian border, and are highly critical of U. S. action supplying other arms to their despised neighbor. Indeed, some reports hint at a vague possibility of an invasion into India by Pakistani troops carrying, no doubt, U. S. arms. If such remote invasion should take place, the United States of America would be in the tragic position of supplying arms to two nations at war with one another.

The U. S. is deeply, inescapably involved. And the citizenry of the entire Free World should be deeply concerned with the reports of fighting which filter out of the distant Himalayas.

* * *

Coming out of those reports are appalling accounts of tragic warfare, accounts of Communist disregard for human life which will stand forever as monumental symbols of the extreme and complete dichotomy between the values of an "Occidental-Free-World" and an "Oriental-Communism."

The first eyewitness account of border fighting told of Chinese Communists throwing masses of unarmed troops at armed outposts. The Chinese Communists herd men together like cattle and stampede them into gunfire — into certain death, until the hordes overrun Indian defenders.

This wanton disregard for human life should be sufficient reason for any aspiring "student-communist" to stop his sniggering and do a bit of reflecting. How can an individual form or pledge allegiance to a way of life which negates life? How can a man be impressed by an "ideal collectivism" which collects for the purpose of slaughter? (CW)

"Christmas" In October

Although we would not wish to be guilty of too broad a generalization, we would yet like to sweep into the mood of an aspiring, junior Dwight MacDonald, and observe that the caliber of "movies" brought to the local theaters quite often leaves much to be desired.

We would base our observation on the fact that most often a Jerry Lewis flick (such as "Geisha Girl" or "Bellboy") will run for thirteen weeks, or thereabouts, while a Bergman movie is seldom, if ever, in town for three days. Thus, the problem is, in a peculiar sort of way, both qualitative and quantitative.

That is to say, the local theaters do bring good movies to town, but they do not bring enough of them, and those that they do bring are not given an equal shake against those truly horrible things that run for weeks on end.

This may be solely a result of the demands and tastes of the Carolina student, but we doubt it. And in any event, we would not rest easily in apathy, if we were to let pass without comment the ridiculous, yet pathetic, management which brings Bing Crosby in "White Christmas" to Chapel Hill in October, immediately on the heels of Walt Disneys "happiest motion picture" "Lady And The Tramp," to be followed in turn by that thriller "Five Weeks In A Balloon."

There is little reason to wonder why the Free Flicks are crowded. And there is little reason to doubt that the business in Durham is picking up rapidly. (CW)

Liberals Confused On Cuba

Cuban Question: Military Balance

To the Editors:

I feel that two of your recent editorials, those of the 27th and 28th, and the letter by Stephen White printed the 28th, need reply.

Because I lean to the liberal side in politics, I hate to see the loyalty of many liberals questioned due to their doubt as to the wisdom and justice of Kennedy's stand on Cuba. Yet I certainly believe that such liberals have their priorities mixed. I agree that U. S. support of the Bay of Pigs invasion was wrong. So was our support of the forces overthrowing the pro-Communist government in Guatemala several years ago. But is it wise to do penance for these wrongful acts of aggression by allowing Russia to change the military balance of power without American resistance? Even if Kennedy's actions should be contradictory to international law, our self-defense and security should have first consideration.

You suggest that our nuclear bases in Turkey and Russia's in Cuba were both established mainly for psychological or political rather than military motives. Now that Khrushchev has offered to dismantle the bases in Cuba, we may never know for certain what his original purpose was. But I think that the secrecy and deliberate deception surrounding their establishment make Khrushchev's purpose more suspect. Why would he and his ambassador bother to lie to Kennedy unless it was considered that secrecy could be maintained long enough to establish the bases securely. Such secrecy would be temporary, I grant you, but it surely wouldn't be incidental.

Contrary to both your position and that of the GREENSBORO DAILY NEWS, however, I think that the main issue is NOT over the purposes of both sides or Russia's secrecy but rather over the physical change that Russia would make in the military balance of power. Protection of the Free World, particularly our Latin American neighbors, and the requirements of self defence make preservation of a military status quo essential.

Concerning Mr. White's letter, I don't advocate preventive nuclear war or such other jingoistic ideas as many rightists have. Actually, I'm not enthusiastic about giving my life in any cause. Too many lives have been sacrificed in past wars for very fleeting and inadequate solutions of the world's problems. Yet I think that America has come a long way toward a more rational view of self defense AND preservation of life and cavilization on earth. No longer do we follow Dulles' policy of holding up an inflexible nuclear deterrent as the answer to all types of provocations. Reemphasis on conventional weapons should assure Mr. White that we are turning away from our former perch on the brink of world destruction or surrender to Communist dominance. In the future, if present foreign policy is maintained, we may have to fight many "limited wars" in defence of the free world. I think that such a course, followed rationally and without excessive emotion, should attract the support of all thinking Americans.

Name-Taking Can Do Great Harm

To the Editors:

Several nights ago following the forum on Cuba several individuals were asked their names by a self-proclaimed patriot. These names presumably are to be put on some "list." One prefers to laugh at such action and regard it as absurd in our society, but to pass over such incidents, no matter how rare, is a mistake.

One or two individuals taking down names within a community can cause great fear among the people of that community. People begin to worry about what they say and how it will be interpreted by others. Such an atmosphere in an academic community is a paradox in terms. Some even begin censuring their own thoughts. Such a community becomes atomized with every individual distrusting every other. This results in lack of perspective and lack of clear headedness, which are so very needed in these times. Such methods as name-taking, far from strengthening us, alienate (and rightly so) the consciences of some of our number, making them prey for Communist lies.

We defend our actions in foreign policy not only on the basis of our right to national survival, but also because of what we stand for. Our determination to keep the free world from communist domination is predicated on our opposition to political regimentation and thought control. We oppose not only police terror, but all forms of thought control. Thus our fight must go on within our own borders as well as beyond.

The lessons of post-World War I Germany fighting Bolshevik tyranny with a fascist tyranny of their own, of Lenin's rout of the tzarist police becoming a police-state, and of Castro's fight against the tyrant becoming a new tyranny must not be lost on us.

All this probably seems very far from Chapel Hill to most of you. We minimize the consequence of a few extreme students taking names, make light of it, and go on with our normal routine. Such action, however, grows if it is not combatted and faced openly, and becomes more difficult to limit, the larger it is. McCarthy has shown us that. The Wall which we so detest lies not only in Berlin and is not made only of brick. It is anywhere where fear and distrust separate men, one from another. We shall defeat Communism, not by imitating their methods, but by firmly reaffirming by example those principles for which we stand.

Good Taste?

The ruling about campus newspapers containing "anything which violates the limits of good taste and decency"—does this apply to the Yack as well?

View From The Hill

Conservatives Supported JFK

By ARMISTEAD MAUPIN, JR.

BLOCKADE

One of the favorite charges levelled against conservatives by liberals fell to pieces last week after the announcement of the formation of the Cuban blockade. The leftist has often contended, if not logically, certainly audibly, that right wingers put political labels on public figures and base their opinion of these leaders' actions on the labels.

Campus reaction last week indicated that nothing could be further from the truth.

Scores of conservatives lauded the President for his stand. On October 25 over 500 students held a mass demonstration for the Kennedy quarantine. The president of the Y.A.F. "ate his words" in a letter to this newspaper and called the President's move "one of the most positive and heartwarming decisions in the history of American foreign policy." Applause came from everywhere, yet, contrary to liberal theory, the conservatives seemed to be clapping the loudest.

SCHLESINGER

When Presidential aide, Dr. Arthur M. Schlesinger Jr. isn't falling into swimming pools he is expounding his ideas on how to run the country. The CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, vol. 107, September 26, 1961 contains an article by Dr. Schlesinger in which he states: "Neither communism, with its deposition, nor capitalism, with it's instability, nor fascism, with its combination of the two, provide attractive solutions to the problem of how to live with modern industry and the modern state. Is there another possibility?"

Dr. Schlesinger suggests socialism and says: "If socialism (that is, the ownership by the state of all significant means of production) is to preserve democracy, it must be brought about step by step in a way that will not disrupt the fabric of custom, law and mutual confidence upon which personal rights depend."

Of this "step by step" process Dr. Schlesinger comments: "There seems to be no inherent obstacle to gradual advance of socialism in the United States through a series of New Deals."

So there you have it.

DEFINITION

One acute observer offers this definition of the New Frontier: "Out where the waste begins."

Cuban Tension As Seen From The UN

By BILL CRISWELL

This has been a week which will long be remembered by Americans and the rest of the world as "The Cuban Crisis." Events moved so rapidly as the world hung on the brink of war, that no one really knew exactly what the next moment would bring.

On Monday, October 22, President Kennedy announced to the world that the United States had detected a rapid and clandestine move by the Soviet Union to build offensive missile bases. He went on to declare that the U. S. was reacting to this by establishing a naval "quarantine" of the island of Cuba, and might be forced to take further measures. Nevertheless, Kennedy suggested that the matter could be resolved by the removal of the bases, coupled with U. N. inspection. The world was shocked, and opinion eminated from everywhere.

The Organization of American States surprisingly came up with an immediate and unanimous approval of the U. S. move, and some members even volunteered military support. The next move rested with the Soviets.

First, Fidel Castro declared he would never allow United Nations inspectors or observers on Cuban soil. Then Chairman Khrushchev made some vain attempts to suggest that no offensive bases existed. The next major step occured when the matter was taken before the United Nations Security Council. At this point, the world had an arena in which a solution might be found, and all eyes were focused on the U. N.

Students at the University of North Carolina were discussing and debating the issues as fervently as anyone else. Speculation was everywhere. As I had been fortunate enough to have been associated with the United Nations as an intern in the Secretariat during the summer, I wanted to get a first-hand view. Accompanied by David Lester, a Political Science student, we set off for New York on Thursday. By this time the crisis had settled into a state of uneasy calm, while the representatives on the Security Council alleged and refuted various aspects involved.

When we arrived at U. N. Headquarters, the Security Council had adjourned indefinitely, with its delegates on a stand-by alert. This had come about through the intervention of the U. N. Acting Secretary-General, P. Thant, at the suggestion of some of the nonaligned nations. He offered to meet with Ambassadors Stevenson, Zorin, Garcia, and others to see if his mediation couldn't resolve the matter more expediently.

After a few preliminary duties involving the procurement of press acreditation, which was generously extended to us by Mr. David Exley of the U.N. Office of Public Information, we proceeded to gain a sampling of current opinion. Everyone from security guards, secretariat officers, press reporters to delegates were questioned. The general concensus was that a temporary moratorium would probably be reached, and that nothing would be done at least until after the U. S. elections were held. The operations of the Headquarters were normal. The moment was aptly described the next day, referring to the previous day, as the "eye" of the hurricane.

In contrast to Friday, however, Saturday started calmly enough, but picked up momentum rapidly. The "eye" had passed, and the second wave of the storm was upon us. Chairman Khrushchev had just admitted in a letter that indeed the bases in Cuba were of an offensive nature, and he proposed that they they be swaped for missile bases in Turkey. Actually, we had gotten wind of such a proposal in an interview with a Russian member of the Secretariat in the Delegates Lounge the previous night.

At approximately noon, Ambassador Stevenson arrived at U. N. Headquarters and proceeded quickly to U. Thant's offices on the 38th floor. He made no comment at the time. He left one half hour later thereafter with nothing further to add. Shortly thereafter Sir Patrick Dean of Britain slipped upstairs and left just as quitely. By this time reporters began collecting and speculating. Mr. Frank Carpenter, spokesman for Ambassador Stevenson, came up to the press "bull pen" and commented on the Ambassador's visit. He shed no real light on the talks, but did stress very strongly the fact that construction was continuing at a rapid pace on the sites in Cuba. This caused quite a stir among reporters. David Lester and I were curious to see what release the Cuban "Prensa Latina" was issuing at that moment, but were curtly asked to leave.

It wasn't long before Ambassador Zorin, of the Soviet Union, arrived with the letter from Khrushchev. He also had "nothing" to add, and I was amused when one of the reporters interrogating him as he left asked an aide how "nothing" was spelled in Russian. In rapid succession Ambassador Riad of the United Arab Republic arrived and left, followed by Ambassador Garcia of Cuba. Neither of them had any comments, except that Riad did say he thought all sides were trying to cooperate, and he didn't feel the Security Council would be meeting soon.

Many of the reporters covering the story were getting annoyed at the scarcity of information being released concerning the talks, and all felt that something would have to break within 24 hours to three days at the most.

Meanwhile, Adlai Stevenson was meeting, across the street at the U. S. Mission to the U. N. with the representatives of thirteen nations including a large number of NATO members. When Mr. Carpenter came back over to the Headquarters he mentioned that the U. S. meeting had been held to inform the various delegates on the most recent events, and that it would be wise to assume the "Turkey for Cuba" swap was discussed. He further hinted that it was not greeted very heartily. He wanted, primarily, to emphasize the fact that the construction was STILL continuing, and that the matter was now urgent.

Small bits of information had been trickling in all afternoon which gave one the impression that an invasion of Cuba was a likely outcome, unless something happened soon to change it. It can be readily seen, then, that the press section was a very excited area around 6 p.m. that Saturday night. It was just about that time that we called Chapel Hill with that information, and it appeared in Sunday's Tar Heel.

By pure accident one of the public information officers had been mistaken for a translator, and been admitted to the conference between U. Thant and Garcia. Before the mistake was discovered, however, the reporter did read the text of a letter from Fidel Castro to the Secretary General inviting him to Cuba. This was a major move in a positive direction, but since the Secretary General announced later that he wouldn't give his decision until the next morning, all the people around the U. N. left that night wondering whether they would wake up the next morning in the midst of a Cuban invasion or peaceful outcome.

Everybody knows, of course, that Chairman Khrushchev's letter came early the next morning, and indeed the situation does appear to be clearing up. U. Thant did accept Premier Castro's invitation and the United Nations played a strong role in helping to settle the matter.

It may flare up again, who knows? At least it was quite an experience to be present at the right place at the right time to watch matters move from tension to uneasy calm to tension, and now apparent clearing.

I cannot say enough about the cooperation we received from all the U. N. personnel, the compatibility of the press people, and the warmth of the many associated persons ranging from Mr. Frank Carpenter to the police inspector who was supervising the control of a demonstration of pro and anti Castro groups in front of the U. N. on Saturday. The interest they all had in student opinion was quite gratifying.

REFLECTIONS

The professor of an English class here recently assigned a theme on "the purpose of man." A coed in the class (this is true) asked, "Sir, does this have to be idealistic?"

Yes, dear, it does. Just stroll sweetly into a men's dorm or a fraternity house and you'll see what we mean.

Tar Babies Meet Maryland In Kenan Stadium Battle

Freshmen Seek Third Victory

By JOHN MONTAGUE

Carolina's Tar Babies make their second and final home appearance this afternoon against Maryland's in a 2 o'clock Kenan Stadium contest. Both teams enter the game with 2-1 records.

And Coach George Barclay has every reason to believe that his freshman gridders will put on a much better show than they did in their first Chapel Hill engagement. This was four weeks ago, when the UNC yearlings bowed to Clemson, 21-7.

One week after that loss, the Tar Babies were at their best, knocking off Wake Forest, 35-7. Since then they have had three solid weeks of practice and Barclay says the improvement is quite noticeable.

Center Ed Stringer anchors a rugged forward wall which includes guards Henry Sadler and John Harmon, tackles Jimmy Morrison and Tommy Stowe, and ends John Atherton and Tom Golden. Against Wake Forest this line held the Deaclets to 42 yards on the ground.

Up front on the second unit are Greg Battistello, guards Mike Dubis and Gary Wiles, tackles Bill Hudson and Don Prillamon, and ends Steve Lister and Bob Denlinger.

The starting backfield will be minus the services of fullback Harper Ruff, who hurt his knee in practice a week ago. He is replaced by Frank Bowman, who moves up from second team. Quarterback Jim Harrington running back Bob Wise and wingback Bill Darnall complete the starting line-up.

Harrington is being hard pressed for his job by second-teamer Jimmy Byrd. Running back Max Chapman, wingback Alan McArthur and fullback Jim Schuetz also lend solid support to the first unit. Chapman, who will handle the team's punting chores, will split the second team running back duties with Charlie Ephland, the team's leading scorer.

Rock And Roll, Baseball Mix At Clemson

The varsity football contest between North Carolina and Clemson wil be only one of many big events on the Clemson campus this weekend.

Charles and his Raylettes will play from 9 to 1 p.m. at a charge of $5.50 per couple.

Tomorrow night, Maurice Williams & the Zodiacs take over at a dance from 12 to 1 p.m. The charge for this affair will be $4 per couple.

Whitey Ford and Bobby Richardson, star ballplayers for the world champion New York Yankees will also be on hand at the homecoming game and a subsequent press conference.

Duke Edges Runners In 27-28 Thriller

By LASZLO BIRINYI

UNC's previously unbeaten Tar Heels dropped their first cross-country meet of the year Wednesday to Duke's Blue Devils.

Louis Van Dyck led the unbeaten Dukes to their eighth straight win, a 27-28 squeaker overs the Tars. Van Dyck set a new course record, covering the 4.2-mile Durham course in 20 minutes, 57 seconds. Van Dyck's time topped the previous record by two seconds.

Larry Henry, Carolina's barefooted ace, finished second, 21 seconds behind Van Dyck. Duke's Frank Campbell finished third.

Jerry Stuver, in fifth place, was the next Carolina finisher. He was followed by Bob Bennett, Jerry Smith, and Carmine Lunetta, all of UNC.

This was the last regular season dual meet for both teams. Carolina carries a 6-1 record into next Monday's state meet. Duke, Wake Forest, N. C. State and Davidson will be among the entries in the state meet.

The Atlantic Coast Conference championships will be held in Chapel Hill on November 12.

Soph Candidates Offer Statements

KIPPY CARTER, SP
For Soph Vice-President

As the Student Party nominee for Vice-President of the Sophomore class, there are several goals which I would like to see obtained if elected.

The first of these is urging the continuation of the Sophomore of the Month Award and second, the continued recognition of outstanding teachers on the sophomore level.

In addition to these academic goals are some social goals with which proper coordination may benefit the class financially as well as socially. There would be such things as the combo parties, sales and cake bakes started last year.

During the past year I served on the Campus Chest Solicitations Committee, the Publications Board, as an orientation counselor, and as a Legislative member from Dorm Men's II. I feel that this experience has qualified me as a candidate for Sophomore Class Vice-President.

PUD HASSELL
For Soph VP

In seeking the office of Vice-President of the Sophomore Class I find the job to hold two main responsibilities. The first is to help the President carry out the University Party platform by coordinating the various committees and carrying out the policies that he sets. The second is to encourage the class to participate fully in the programs that we will be carrying out. Our platform depends on active participation and active leadership. I, and those running with me, will give the leadership and will seek out the participation.

I believe my participation in Student Government here and my enthusiasm for our platform show my sincere desire to be Sophomore Class Vice-President. The University Party candidates have very definite plans for the coming year and they have the experience to carry them out. I hope that the members of our class will study our plans and our candidates and then will vote UP next Tuesday.

PAUL CHUSED, SP
For Soph Treasurer

With the SP and UP Campaigns in full swing, many ideas have been brought out. I feel there are several points I would like to enumerate again.

Last year, under a predominately SP slate of officers, our class had a very successful financial year. By many projects under the leadership of our cabinets and its committees, on which I played an active part, we raised $190. As decided last year, $100 was put away for a scholarship fund. I also plan this year, if I am elected, to put the first $100 we make in this fund.

At the present time I am on the Student Credit Commission, which is the main connecting link between the Merchant's Association and the UNC students. I feel that in my capacity on this Commission, I will have many inroads into setting up merchant-class sales and, most of all, setting up a student discount store.

Furthermore, in my plans for the coming year, I hope to see a Sophomore Weekend in the spring. This would consist of a picnic at Hogan's Lake, a concert, and a combo party on Saturday night.

Regardless of whether I win or not, I would like to serve the class and see these forementioned ideas fulfilled. I hope that on Nov. 6, you will look at my past service and initiative, and elect me to serve you in the capacity as Treasurer of the Sophomore Class. Thank you.

JOHN SCHULTZ, UP
For Soph. Treasurer

In line with its all out effort to provide more opportunity in student government for dormitory residents, the University Party has selected the president of Manly Dormitory, John Schultz, to run for the office of sophomore class treasurer. John has displayed a keen interest and enthusiasm for service both in high school and at UNC. A National Honor Society member, Atlanta Journal Cup winner, American Legion Award winner, and possessor of other honors, John very definitely has the capability and the qualifications to insure the use of the office of treasurer not only as a financial recorder, but in service to the sophomore class as a whole.

To quote his words, "I am not going to make any absurd and unrealistic promises or predictions in an attempt to dazzle or more likely baffle the voters who are already overly bombarded with campaign propaganda. I do feel that a great deal can be accomplished with the residual funds we have to work with and with the active participation of all of those interested. I would sincerely like to serve the sophomore class in the capacity of treasurer."

JOHNSYE MASSENBURG, UP
For Soph. Secretary

In light of the coming election, I would like to present the Sophomore class with my purpose in being a candidate for Secretary. Having served as Freshman Class Secretary, I feel that my experience would be most important in carrying out the projects I deem

Morehead Is Best Known For Gifts

By BOB SPEARMAN

(Editor's Note: Nov. 3 is Morehead Day. This is one in a series of articles on Mr. Morehead, and his contributions to the Carolina campus and student body).

The gifts of John Motley Morehead to the Carolina campus are many and well-known. In 1931 he donated the Morehead - Patterson Bell Tower and Chimes. In 1949 he gave funds to set up the only planetarium on an American college campus. In 1956 he donated the Morehead Sundial and rose garden. Mr. Morehead also made a substantial contribution to establish WUNC, Carolina's educational television station.

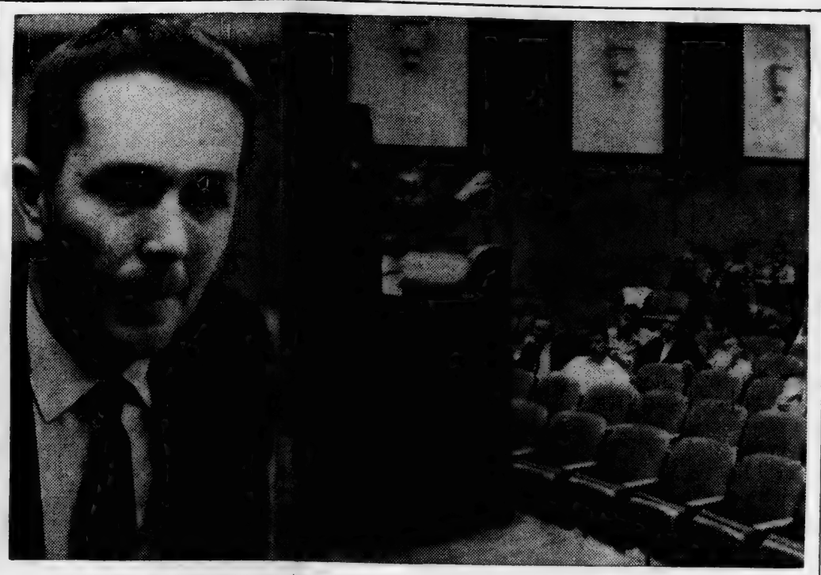
But perhaps his most important gift was the Morehead Scholarships, which were set up in their present form in 1951. These scholarships are worth $5,100 over four years of college and are second in value only to the famous Rhodes scholarships.

Mr. Morehead's purpose in starting them was to attract outstanding students and leaders to Carolina. They are not primarily designed to help needy students, but rather to help Carolina. They are awarded solely on a basis of merit.

How well have these scholarships succeeded in their purpose? According to the records of the Morehead scholars, they have succeeded very well indeed.

Scholastically the Morehead Scholars have been outstanding. Last year 13 were members of Phi Eta Sigma and 15 were in Phi Beta Kappa.

Many Moreheads have held positions of student leadership. Last year 18 were presidents of different campus organizations. One was president of the student body, another chairman of the Men's Honor Council and another was Attorney-General. The chairmen of both political parties were Moreheads.



They were also active on the athletic fields. Twenty-two were in the Monogram Club and ten won freshman numerals.

But statistics do not tell the whole story of the Morehead scholarships. The contribution which the scholars have made to campus life is a large one, but much of the value to Carolina lies in heightened reputation and prestige.

Before the Morehead Scholarships were started, it was very unusual for Carolina to attract outstanding Northern students away from the Ivy League schools. Now it is almost commonplace for many of the North's best to choose Carolina for college.

CAMPUS TOURS

Campus Tours of UNC are conducted daily from the Information Desk, South Building, at 11 a.m. and 2 p.m. Mondays through Fridays, and at 10 and 11 a.m. on Saturdays.

Presented by the Carolina forum, Harrington said that, "This society could in many ways turn out to be the cruelest society man has ever known," in the way it deals with the problem of poverty.

Voting Districts Won't Be Changed

The Student Legislature Thursday night passed a bill to reinstate the present judicial districts until the spring elections. If changes are made in the districts, there will now be time to make them well in advance of the election.

Charles Cooper (SP), Chairman of the Judicial Committee, introduced the bill Oct. 30. Mike Lawler (SP), Legislature Chairman, gave up his chair to speak for the bill.

A bill was also passed to appropriate $70 for 2 delegates to attend the Connaissance Conference at the University of Pennsylvania, Nov. 9-10.

The purpose of this conference is to present an educational and interdisciplinary approach to the vital issues which confront the United States today.

Three bills were introduced Thursday night involving more than $5,500. Gordon Appell (SP), introduced a bill to appropriate $4,650 to purchase a Student Government bus. According to the bill the bus would "provide bus service during the day for Ehringhaus and Craige dormitories," would provide "transportation to and from conferences and other meetings," and would be available to "fraternities, dormitories, and other campus organizations."

A bill to supplement the Yackety-Yack budget by $951.60 was introduced by Jean Yoder (UP). Mistakes of $1,246 and of $420 had been made in the Yack budget. The bill stated that the Yack staff "has done everything possible to cover the deficit, but are still considerably in the red."

Bob Spearman (UP-SP) and Scott Summers (SP) introduced a bill to establish an interclass council. This council would guide and coordinate the activities of the four class cabinets.

It would be composed of the President and one other elected officer of each class to be appointed by the class president. The President of the Senior Class would preside over the Council.

Dr. Douglas M. Knight was elected yesterday as the new President of Duke University by the Board of Trustees. Dr. Knight, 41 year-old president of Lawrence College in Appleton, Wisconsin, will succeed Dr. J. Deryl Hart as president sometime during the 1963-64 academic year.

Dr. Knight has served as a member of the English department faculty at Yale University and has received three degrees from Yale, (A.B., M.A., and Ph.D.)

Dellinger Issues Statement On Cases Heard

Walter Dellinger, chairman of the Men's Honor Council, made a statement yesterday concerning the cases heard by the council Thursday night. According to Dellinger, the following cases came before the council.

The first case concerned a student who pled guilty to violations of both the Honor Code and the Campus Code. The student, a freshman, admitted having taken a total of six books from the Library on two separate occasions without checking them out. He also admitted to the theft of a raincoat and to fighting in his own dorm. He was suspended for the remainder of the year.

The second student to come before the council, also a freshman, admitted having taken two books from the Library without checking them out. This student voluntarily turned himself in to his resident advisor after learning that this was considered a serious violation of the Honor Code. The council placed him on definite probation for the remainder of the year.

Under a sentence of probation a student cannot belong to any campus organization or represent the University in any way. A second violation of campus law by a student on probation results in automatic suspension.

The final case to be heard envolved a student who was brought before the council for alleged public drunkenness and refusing to leave the police station upon the request of an officer.

The council felt that this action cast no discredit upon the University. The arresting officer said that the boy was not boistrous, profane or disorderly. Hence the council felt the defendant did not behave ungentlemanly and accordingly found him not guilty of a Campus Code violation.

Junior Class Candidates Tell Why They Want Office

WATTS CARR, UP
for Junior Vice President

The University Party has established a very sound and workable platform for the Junior class. As Vice President, my job would be to co-ordinate this platform. Basically our platform consists of unity among the Juniors. We would like to see a Junior Class Day in the early spring, with a campus-wide address by some prominent state or national figure to be followed by a class social function, an organiation of the "Junior Eggheads", a representative group of our most intelligent class members to form a debating team to challenge faculty and other students to debates on current events, organization of intra-class competition to raise money for charities, expansion of campus-wide Essay Contest, Campus-wide sales Downtown to raise money, combo party every month solely for our class, expansion of the teacher of the month recognition, and expansion of Class Cabinet participation.

We would appreciate your support very much, and in all our projects our aim will be class unity through wider participation. Therefore we are asking all juniors to vote UP next Tuesday.

WOODY HARRISON, SP
for Junior VP

The Student Party platform for the Junior Class offers a progressive and effective program that will benefit every member of our class. Our emphasis is a dual emphasis concentrating not on academics alone or social activity alone, but on both academics and social life. The projects which we have outlined are good projects, projects that make a contribution to our class and to the whole campus. But perhaps most important we the Student Party candidates will fulfill every single promise contained in our platform while meeting any other needs of the Junior Class that may arise.

The Vice-President of the class I feel is an extremely important position. But it is up to the individual to make it an office of effectiveness. I feel that the Vice-President must not only assist the President in class activities but must also coordinate the activities of the various class committees in order to gain the greatest value from these committees. He must be an iniator of ideas and at the same time must offer practical means of achieving these ideas. Most important he must be willing to work—I am more willing to work for a class with as much potential as our Junior Class.

Experience is another important factor in the election of class offices. I feel that my experience as Treasurer of our class last year would be extremely valuable in achieving our goals this year.

These then are a few of my ideas concerning my candidacy for Vice-President of the Junior Class. I would appreciate your consideration for the office.

BONNIE HOYLE, SP
for Jr. Class Sec'y

To me, a new student at Carolina, one of the most striking aspects of life here is the importance and emphasis placed on Student Government. Feeling that I can serve my class and participate actively in Student Government work, I am seeking the office of Secretary of the Junior Class.

I am aware of the responsibilities which this office entails, and I feel that my past experience will equip me to fill this position effectively. If I am elected, it will be my personal goal to keep all members of the class more closely in touch with the officers and the activities which they plan. I can only promise my sincere interest, and hope that you see fit to elect me your secretary.

PAM RUDY, UP
for Junior Secretary

I am the University Party candidate for Secretary of the Junior class. It is my aim to establish a better relationship between the members of the Junior Class and their officers and also to encourage Juniors to get to know their class officers so that the officers may know exactly what the class wants in the way of social functions and other activities.

As secretary, I would keep all members informed of class activities through the Daily Tar Heel and also through bulletins and notices. In addition, the class scrapbook would take on more meaning for our class as I would make an honest effort to see that all our class activities and achievements of our class would be recorded.

I believe my past record and experiences, such as last summer's when I was secretary to the Director of National Airport in Washington, would be of invaluable aid as secretary. I urge all my fellow juniors elect experience and proven leadership and vote UP on Nov. 6.

GERRY GOOD, UP
For Junior Treasurer

I feel that the office of treasurer is more than a position of finance officer; he must keep the ideas of the class cabinet going and also think of new ideas to both raise and spend money so that the class may have a surplus going into its senior year. I believe that I am well qualified for this position since I served as President of Ruffin Dormitory.

Anyone who has lived in a dormitory knows there is no harde job than keeping a dorm out of financial difficulty. At the present time my dorm has more money per capita than any other. Also I have served on the IDC and as a committee chairman have had to coordinate the efforts of several groups at times.

I have had experience working with the administration here on several occasions and think that this could be of help to me. To be of success as a class officer takes more than experience, however.

The successful officer has to have an extreme amount of energy and drive in order to handle the many facets of the job. I believe that I have these qualities and the necessary experience to fulfill the office of Junior Class Treasurer.

ANNE ESKRIDGE, SP
For Jr. Class Treasurer

Being a girl and seeking the position of Treasurer of the Junior Class, an office usually held by a boy, I, Anne Eskridge, would like to bring to your attention some aspects of this campaign I believe to be important.

I sincerely believe that some experience is necessary for this office. Therefore I think that some of my previous experience would be an asset. At W. C. I served as treasurer of the Sophomore class, executive officer of the Sophomore Commission, executive member of the Interclass Council, and as a freshman member of the Hall Board. I also helped co-ordinate Rat Day and Parents Weekend which are two of the largest yearly functions for sophomores.

At Carolina the Junior Class has sponsored in the past a successful program of activities including combo parties and awards to professors. The Junior Class Student Party candidates will undertake specific projects in the areas of academics, social life, and class spirit. I am interested in working for and with our class, and I pledge myself to the continuation of the progressive programs begun last year and the new programs set forth in our platform.

With respect to my previous experience I feel that I am capable of carrying out the duties of this office. I would not be going into this office unaware of the responsibility that it entails. Thus, I offer to you my interest and experience.

DIANE HILE, SP
For Jr. Class Social Chmn.

Proud to be the Student Party's candidate for Jr. Class Social Chairman, I would like to enthusiastically support our platform for the Junior Class.

As you know, it is the Social Chairman's duty to make these plans effective. The office of Social Chairman can be broken down into Journalism's five W's and the H. That is, it uses the "Who," "What," "When," Where," Why" and "How."

A social chairman must know "who" to see in order to carry out plans for social functions. She must know "what" to do in order to carry out both academic lectures and lost weekends. Since timing is of the essence, she must be constantly aware "When" to make plans, and "Where" to hold these many and diversified functions.

Now I come to "Why." "Why is the reason I would like to be elected—because I'm interested and aware of the intricacies involved to make your Junior year "unforgettable."

And "How"? "How" is through your votes on November 6.

JOAN HALEY, UP
For Junior Social Chmn.

Joan Haley comes from Lookout Mountain, Tennessee. She has wanted to come to the University of North Carolina since her first weekend visit four year ago. Now that she is here, she is extremely anxious to participate in student affairs.

Joan has always been an active participant in class activities. She has held various class offices including those of secretary and president. She has served on her school's Honor Council, the staff of her school newspaper, and was art editor of her high school yearbook and has been a member of various clubs.

She has been in class plays and was head cheerleader. Upon her arrival at U.N.C., she joined Y committees, the Catholic Orphanage and International Relations. She was a member of the Homecoming Court. Joan feels that these varied activities prepare her as a qualified candidate for social chairman of the junior class, since she would be organizing varied events if she is elected to serve in that capacity.

Financial Gifts Mean Faith And Trust

Today has been set aside as "John Motley Morehead Day" in a meager attempt to express the sincere gratitude felt by thousands for the actions of one. Needless to say, the University as a whole and students as individuals have benefited greatly from the many contributions of Mr. Morehead, perhaps UNC's greatest single benefactor.

But one, in assessing the significance and value of the Morehead financial contributions, should not think so much in terms of just "how much" or "what" he has given to the University, but rather in terms of what his past and continuing contributions are indicative of —that is, faith and trust in this University and its educational undertaking.

We tend too often to be awed by the dollars and cents that come our way, and hereby inadvertently overlook the motive prompting and the spirit accompanying the gift we receive. If Mr. Morehead or Mr. Kenan writes a check for thousands of dollars, this in itself is a wonderful thing, but the check is but an outward manifestation of something even yet more wonderful.

The gift represents faith that the Universiy will make wise use of the money—faith that those benefiting directly will not squander the trust—faith that so many dollars and cents will be "educationally" transformed into so many enriched minds, into so many productive citizens. And this faith, this hope should not pass unnoticed because of the impressive size of monetary contributions through which it is manifested.

So let's thank "Uncle Mot," but not so much for the millions of dollars and several buildings, rather for the faith and trust which he has placed in the administrators, and faculty, and students who will use these gifts. (CW)

Observer Slop

The CHARLOTTE OBSERVER has never been a paper to stick strictly to newspapering. In the past its readers have often been bombarded by front-page advertising, guised as news material, for Observer promotion campaigns for everything from language records to the OBSERVER'S women's club award.

The last few weeks have seen the paper's pages filled with copy on the OBSERVER'S "Operation Amigo" — a plan by which a group of Peruvian students were brought to live with American families for a short time.

The visit was climaxed last Thursday when the OBSERVER devoted over a third of it's front page (51 column inches) and an entire inside page to a melodramatic combination of self-advertising and tear-jerking slop.

"Tears Flow As Amigos Go," and "In The Queen City, The Rest Of The Day Was Long," were the front-page headlines over OBSEVER slop-king Kays Gary's tear-stained article, which described in detail the agonized faces and tears of several 'Amigos." Kays' own tears were flowing so freely they turned the story into pure mush.

For OBSERVER readers who may wish to know what else went on in the world that day, we quote the following news story which appeared in most other papers Thursday but which the OBSERVER apparently didn't have room for what with all the tears:

"OXFORD, Miss (ap) — Military policemen hauled out a dismantled pistol, a dismantled M-1 rifle and several tear gas grenades tonight from a men's dormitory at the University of Mississippi." (The dormitory is next to the residence of James Meredith; the military also found a supply of fireworks and a 5-gallon gasoline can; a crowd of 100 students gathered around the hall.)

That the Observer is to be given credit for arranging what was an apparently worthwhile project in international relations is undeniable. That the paper should also devote so much of its news space to a disgusting revelry of self-congratulation serves to degrade the whole project.

Pencilsharpeners

Although this is the modern day and age, there are some habits which resist all enlightenment and which continue to shape our ways in spite of scientific advancement. And these retarded habits are not just the burden of a few.

Take, for instance, the habit of taking class notes with a pencil. We feel justified, in light of hearsay and research, in stating that at least 50% of the student body has resisted the "ball-point-pen" habit and continues to take lecture notes with plain wooden pencils.

Therefore, we feel obligated to lodge a complaint to the building and grounds committee, or the administration, or the faculty committee for the absence of pencil sharpeners from so many classroom buildings.

Murphy Hall has two in the whole building, both in private offices; Saunders is equally void of said implements, and Bingham Hall is no better. Rumors are that even some of the new buildings lack any sharpeners.

This may appear as a small matter to those whose only concern is the delivery of scintillating lectures, or to those whose business is the erection of new, well lighted, airconditioned buildings, but to the old fashioned student, plodding along through the educational enterprise with one wooden pencil, the beneficent placing-about of a few simple pencil sharpeners would certainly be a boon. Junior Candidates Praised

Appell Supported For Jr. Prexy

To the Editors:

It was encouraging to learn that this year we have a man running for Junior Class President who is thoroughly experienced in student government. This man is not a figurehead. He has the admiration of student government leaders for his fine work in the Student Legislature, Interdormitory Council, the I.D.C. Court, and various other student government committees.

This man I am wholeheartedly supporting is Gordon Appell. I endorse him because he is running on a platform which is imaginatively thought out. Most importantly, for once a platform emphasizes academics. Its pledges can be implemented and we can be sure they will be if such a capable man as Gordon is elected. So I urge all Juniors to support him on election day, Tuesday, November sixth.

Carr Praised In Junior VP Race

To the Editors:

When I first arrived on this campus, I was, to say the least, very lost. Before my arrival I had thought that the first week would be very difficult. Through the efforts of one person my first few days were made easier and even enjoyable for me. He did all the things that were expected of him to help me. But this is not what really impressed me about this person. The thing that showed me his worth was that he did the extra things which were not expected of him, but which he did simply because he wanted to do all that was in his power to help, not just part. It is this extra effort on his part that showed me his caliber.

He is now a candidate for class office in the junior class, and I know that his desire to put forth extra effort can benefit everyone. It has been a great pleasure to me to know Watts Carr, and I fervently hope that you will bestow upon him the honor that he so greatly deserves. Watts Carr has proven to me that he is man who goes a step farther than duty.

New Left Seminar Called Worthwhile

To the Editors:

After having just attended the seminar on Nuclear Disarmament I feel that a great deal of credit is warranted both the New Left Club for its sponsorship and Mr. Cusick for his moderating. Although my views probably represent those dominating at the meeting I feel reasonably certain that even the extreme rightists can hardly criticize the discussion. Everyone was permitted his say and for the most part intelligence prevailed throughout.

I do have, however, one criticism. The meeting became hopelessly bogged down by political ideological affairs, with loyalties being enumerated by both left and right. I think for the next meeting it should be made clear that being "Red or Dead" has nothing what-so-ever to do with the seminar's function. The question is not whether or not there should be disarmament, either bilaterally or unilaterally, but rather the problem is centered around how to disarm effectively.

It would appear to me that the group should be working toward a plan of disarmament or how the individual must commit himself to the philosophy of pacifism. Again I say it is not a question for the seminar to decide whether to consider this point or not, since the group is already dedicated to the aversion of nuclear war.

Finally, I would like to point out that although the meeting has an open nature (and I am in no policy-making position) it would be just a waste of seminar time for those holding extreme political views (and because of this are against disarmament) to bring up ideology as a question. The meeting needs extreme conservatives and extreme liberals who are dedicated first to peace; primarily it needs those untapped and so far uncommitted sources to afford to be uninformed.
hind holding a seminar is the absorption of knowledge; on a question of all-out nuclear war, no one can afford to be uniformed.

Playmakers Play Had Pace, Vitality

To the Editors:

I must register a dissenting opinion to that expressed by Mr. Neil Clark in his ill-tempered and sloppily written review of the Playmakers' production of GUYS AND DOLLS. Far from finding the show "mediocre" and "a pretty dreary affair," I was delighted with its pace and vitality, with the highly effective sets and lighting, and with (here Mr. Clark and I agree) the adroit performances of Constance Moses and John Crockett. Judging from audience reaction on Sunday night, most of the viewers were equally impressed. I speak not from the nostalgia of an ex-New Yorker but from the experience of a semi-professional playgoer when I declare that the Playmakers and the director of this production, Mr. Jurgenson, are to be warmly congratulated.

Calligraphy Show Presented Here

To the Editors:

A remarkable event in the artistic and cultural life of this community occurred last week—demonstrations of the art of Japanese calligraphy—witnessed by several hundred University students, school children, and others. The demonstrations were given by Baison Kawasaki, Japanese artist and teacher, who is travelling through the United States as a one-man Peace Corps, showing this art of calligraphy and thereby offering us a glimpse of the Japanese spiritual outlook on the world. He came so silently without sponsorship by any college or government agency, that many people missed him—hence this report.

In a studio in the Ackland Art Building he spread large sheets of paper on the floor and, with black ink in large brushes, wrote poems and inscriptions on them. He also "wrote" pictures consisting of a single hieroglyph or character standing for water, pine tree, the inner experience, or other idea. His interpreter, an American girl, explained what he was doing and what the writings meant. People were fascinated by being in the studio with this man working in shirt sleeves and socks, and were delighted at seeing the dazzling writings and drawings appear so rapidly.

The demonstrations were on the mornings and afternoons of October 24 and 25. At each demonstration Kawasaki covered in capsule form a history of Japanese calligraphy. He drew examples of the oldest pictograph characters of Japan, he drew the same characters in cursive, flowing styles, and in other recent styles. Alway he ended his demonstrations with modern calligraphic painting — where single characters are painted very freely as a picture or as a writing, whichever word you care to use. These "pictures" look much like certain contemporary abstract paintings from the United States and Europe, our recent, western calligraphic painting.

In modern Japanese calligraphy there are "no rules" and many novel procedures. Kawasaki sometimes splashed water over the paper in advance of painting. Sometimes he used two brushes held firmly together, each charged with a different color. Most fascinating of all he drew on the top sheet of paper, the ink soaking through to a lower sheet. When the top sheet was removed, crumpled up and thrown away, the audience squealed in pain—which turned to pleasure at discovery of the fabulous drawing on the lower sheet of paper.

The word calligraphy comes from the Greek words kallos, beauty, and graphien, to write. Calligraphic writing is indeed beautiful, and we accept it, but it is difficult for us to accept calligraphic painting as painting. In particular, the recent production of calligraphic paintings by our American and European artists is an arresting phenomenon. It seems strange that the subject matter of painting—landscapes, portraits, and so on—now include writing, mysterious signs, and structures somewhat akin to written characters.

All this began in earnest, about 50 years ago, during the remarkable, trail-blazing decade of the 1910s, when Braque, Picasso, Klee and other painters introduced "printed" words, arrows and graphic signs into their canvases. Some American painters like Hartley and Davis were in this first activity, and since then American painters have continued to expand and develop the idea. Since the 1930's attention has shifted from "printed" letters to letters and marks which seem "hand written"—and this is where Eastern calligraphy became of special interest. The American painter, Tobey, for example, living in Seattle, near the orient, actually studied Chinese calligraphy in the 1920s, travelled and studied calligraphy in China and Japan in the 30s, and developed his distinctive "writing" style. Pollack "wrote", all over his canvases before he came to his famous drip procedure in the late 40s. Bradley Walker Tomlin popularized a sign painter style of abstract writing in the 40s. Kline became a sensation with his "action painting"—bold black-line structures on plain white ground—in the 50s.

Against this background, the present day Japanese artist has calligraphy as a common ground for conversation with us. Kawasaki knows this, and came to America to paint for us. He is a small man, 53 years old. At his home in Osaka are his wife and three children. He has had five one-man exhibitions in various Japanese cities, and is founder and head of the New Calligraphy Organization. Two thousand students, from many countries, have studied in his school of Calligraphy.

In planning his present trip he wrote to former American pupils—in Oklahoma, Minnesota, Maine, Connecticut, and other States—offering to visit their town and give demonstrations at his own expense. One former pupil was Ruth Price, Professor of Dance at the University,—that is how he happened to come here. We express our appreciation to her—and to Professor Sloane, Head of the Art Department, who sponsored the demonstrations, and to Professor Kachergis who made the arrangements.

Lastly, you would want to hear a word about Miss Edith Henson, Kawasaki's interpreter. A few years age her brother was awarded a Fulbright grant to Japan, and she decided to go with him. She studied calligraphy for two years with Kawasaki, and after the present tour will return to Japan. She has gentleness like Kawasaki, and her words have the grace and precision of his paintings. One could hardly imagine a better aide in Kawasaki's humble presentation of his art and of Japan.

Out Of The Fryin' Pan...

We were fortunate enought Saturday night to have been invited to what might be called a scotch luau or folk song fest with flasks. After an hour or so, everything was swinging, including the front door that swung open to reveal a large, tan tree with a hat on.

Though we had consumed our fair share of tiger's milk, still we were able to deduce that it could not be a tree as trees definitely do not walk; neither do they wear hats —certainly not hats with badges on them. Alas, we have given it away.

Having neither knocked nor otherwise requested entrance, this intruder began to bellow in a voice that would have put Huey Long to shame, and he stood there glaring at us with red rimmed eyes, his mouth working overtime.

We were, he yelled, making too much damn noise and what the hell was the matter with us and didn't we know the damn trumpet could be heard a half mile away and . . . ad infinitum ad nauseam.

He threatened that if he had to return again, he would lock us all up, supposedly in whatever place is set aside for the temporary incarceration of wassailing folk belting the blues.

Having thus imparted this tidy bit of information, he stormed out of the house, slamming the door behind him. Our host, a county taxpayer, was shocked. We were angered, and the atmosphere of song went up with the smoke as lighters flared to ease the tensions with a little instant lung cancer.

Let us consider. We are no stranger to the law, to parties, or to college towns of any towns—having lived in a hundred such towns throughout the length and breadth of the land; and we are easily aware that there are quite obviously here, as elsewhere, any number of statutes concerned with the preservation of the peace, inciting to riot and random goosing in revolving doors.

And had we been warned—even informed—that the music was both too loud and too late, surely it could have been dropped a few decibels or cut off completely, if the need arose; but no such preliminaries appeared to have been in order.

Instead, this swaggering, blustering night rider barged his way in rather like a refugee from Spartacus and proceeded to give us what for. Granted, we did not expect him to possess the smoothness and knowhow of a Federal Agent, for deputy sheriffs, just as poets, painters and philosophers, are poorly remunerated for their work; still, we did have a right to expect a modicum of decency and tact, a semblance of professional courtesy and a slightly lower tone of voice. In short, we deserved, at the very least, to be treated as free citizens of a free society rather than numbered and tagged members of an Orwellian horror.

The point is this. Is the law only for the law or for the citizenry as well?

Is it a two way protective exchange or a one way ticket to jail?

It is the purpose of a badge and gun to insure the preservation of law and order or to frighten human beings in an unhuman manner?

It is a good point and one that might bear more than little thought. We may state here flatly that never have we witnessed a more brazen intrusion, a more shocking disregard for the basic rights of man and a more crude and overblown interpretation of the rights of badge and gun.

We submit this. If this is the level of law enforcement in Orange County, then we can commiserate with the citizentry. If, however, it is only one man, underpaid, undertrained, overworked, forgetting himself in the heat of the moment, forgetting the oath he took, forgetting the true meaning of the badge and of the gun—then we may regard it as an error, a grievous one to be sure, but an error nonetheless.

Either way, it's a bitter pill to swallow and puts thalidomide in a class with chocolate covered cherries. Frankly, we've had our fill of both.

DTH, Not Housing Office In Error

To the Editors:

I don't think "It seems quite peculiar that the administration would make a change in policy from encouraging students to move out of dorms to virtually 'financially' forbidding them to move out, without some open announcement to students."

I think that "It would seem, rather, that someone made a foolish oversight or blunder." That someone was not the housing office or the administration but seems to be the DAILY TAR HEEL.

The letter sent to applicants to this University last spring and summer confirming their acceptance stated: ". . . Twenty dollars of the enrollment deposit and $75.75 of the room rent are refundablei prior to July 1. NO REFUNDS ARE MADE AFTER JULY 1."

I think it was very unfair of your paper to criticize the housing office due to your lack of correct information.

REFLECTIONS

Why is it so difficult to pick up WUNC-TV (channel 4), the University's television station, on Chapel Hill TVs?

A usually reliable (and all that . . .) source has informed the Tar Heel that the Durham Sun is agitated over the presence on campus of the dread INJRCCC. Rest assured, bright Sun, that the Conspiracy is not threatening Durham — at least not yet.

necessary for a progressive class organization.

The proposed projects are (1) A secretariat committee which would have as its prime responsibility submitting to the Daily Tar Heel reports of the activities of the class officers and class cabinet (2) a continuance of the history of the Class of 1965 in the form of a scrapbook which I began last year—this being available to any student upon request (3) prompt and careful performance of the correspondence duties of the secretary.

Because I am familiar with many different phases of student government through my election to the Legislature in Dorm Woman's I and my work with both Graham Memorial and the Consolidated University, I believe I can most efficiently fulfill the duties of Secretary; and thus I may contribute to the progress of our class through experienced leadership for better class unity and inter-class co-operation.

COOKIE COCHRANE, SP

For Soph Secretary

1. To take care of the administrative duties which are assigned to the secretary of our class as efficiently as possible. I am experienced with the office and am proficient in typing, taking dictation, use of office machines, and other secretarial duties.

2. To let everyone know, in so far as possible, just what extra-curricular activities are taking place and when and where they are meeting. Being a resident of the nurses dorm, I am well aware of the fact that students don't really know what is going on on the campus. If students knew more about these activities and special programs such as language tables at Lenoir (an entire meal with use of only a certain foreign language), I feel that they would want to participate in these activities.

3. To work earnestly with the other officers in carrying out their plans for the class, and to be fair in all my decisions. Now that you know just a little about me, I hope you will give me your support.

JUDY TYSON, SP

For Soph. Social Chmn.

As the Student Party nominee for social chairman of the Sophomore Class, I would like to present some of my ideas and plans if I am elected. These will broaden, of course, as you, the students, let your officers know what you want.

One major idea that I would like to see materialize is a successful all-campus weekend, including a possible lawn concert and a dance here on the campus. The weekend would be highly publicized, so that you could make your plans accordingly.

I shall also plan and promote dances, open houses and other social gatherings, solely for our class. Perhaps through some of these functions, we could raise money to keep our treasury brimming.

Finally I would like to see the office of social chairman deemed not only effective, but also essential for the continued success of our class. If I am elected, I shall dedicate myself to this goal.

DEE JOHNSON, UP

For Soph. Social Chmn.

One of the major social problems here at Carolina is the difficulty of meeting members of the opposite sex. I have been nominated as social chairman of the Sophomore Class by the UP and my platform is to alleviate this condition. To do this I propose mixers between the various girls dorms and the boys dorms. I propose better and more organized social functions. I would like to have bigger and better combo parties. In addition, I propose the establishment of a list of combos. This list would be a list of all the combos which failed to meet an engagement on campus. Thus, any combo which fails to show up for a dance or party would not be asked to play on campus again.

Also, I would cooperate with other classes for the establishments of a Campus Weekend.

I believe the programs and proposals on which I am campaigning are sound and could be carried out.

Therefore, I am asking for all sophomores to weigh the issues and candidates and to cast their votes for the University Party, the party for you, on election day, Nov. 6.

Candidates

All campus candidates must have their expense accounts in to the Elections Board Office at GM by high noon Monday.

UNC Pennant Being Shown In Germany

A University of North Carolina pennant was recently sent to West Germany for display at the 10th anniversary celebration of the Fulbright student exchange program on Nov. 17. This university is one of 36 American institutions invited to exhibit their pennants at the event because they have been hosts to a considerable number of German students under the program.

The request for the pennant was received by the UNC Alumni Association, which immediately complied by air-mailing the familiar blue and white banner that bears the University's name and seal.

The call for the 36 American pennants came from the German Returnee Organization, which represents West German alumni of American colleges and universities. Delegates from other Fulbright returnee groups in Europe have been invited to attend the anniversary celebration, being sponsored by the Fulbright Commission in West Germany in its efforts to establish closer ties with the American Alumni Council.

Pall Mall Presents~
GIRL WATCHER'S GUIDE

HORN-RIMMED BOOKSTACKER
CAMPUS TYPE III
The Bookstacker serves the cause of classical literature in various ways. Perhaps the least of these is in keeping the rows of books properly aligned and the jackets free of dust.
Her most important contribution is in improving the environment for study, enhancing the halls of learning with her own classical form. Many a college man has discovered a previously unfelt craving for knowledge simply because he received his copy of Homer from the hand of a deep-breathing redhead who sighed, "I think Homer is the most!" Yes, it pays to take a good look at the classics now and then.
Among cigarettes, Pall Mall is a classic—famous length, fine tobacco . . . no flat "filtered-out" flavor, no dry "smoked-out" taste. Try Pall Mall and see!

Pall Mall's natural mildness is so good to your taste!

Carolina Invades Death Valley Today

TAR HEEL Sportscope

By Ed Dupree

Upsets stayed out of the college football picture last week and this column managed to ring up an .857 percentage in the prediction department.

Victories by Navy, Maryland and Stanford spoiled a clean record—but 18 correct picks more than made up for the errors. A pair of ties rounded out the 23 games. So, back up to .709, we'll try our choices again.

Carolina's Tar Heels have quite a challenge awaiting them in Clemson's Death Valley. The Tigers will be angry after losing three straight on their home field.

The story should not be like the past two seasons when Frank Howard's men swamped UNC, 24-0 and 27-0, but four consecutive home defeats for the Tigers doesn't sound logical. They almost toppled an unbeaten Auburn team last week.

Hoping my Carolina predictions are as bad as they were before the Wake Forest game, I'll have to go along with the tough Tigers. A high-scoring game should give the fans plenty of TDS to yell about. CLEMSON 21, NORTH CAROLINA 14.

Elsewhere in the ACC, Duke also has its job cut out. Playing Georgia Tech is never an easy assignment. The home-field advantage is slight here. Durham will be quiet tonight. GEORGIA TECH 14, DUKE 7.

Maryland squeezed past South Carolina last week in a thriller. Maybe the Terps will be tougher after having a hair-raiser in their on conference. Tom Nugent's men will have to be tough to stop Penn State. MARYLAND 22, PENN STATE 17.

Wake Forest will make a sad trip across the mountains this weekend. Tennessee boasts only a win at the hands of Chattanooga in five tries. The Volunteers will feast like vultures. TENNESSEE 35, WAKE FOREST 7.

Georgia, playing in Athens, rates the nod against N. C. State's luckless Wolfpack. State should play a good game, but the Raleigh men are playing in the Southeastern Conference. GEORGIA 23, NORTH CAROLINA STATE 14.

South Carolina and Virginia tangle in another family affair. It's time to find out if the Cavalers are for real. At home, the Gamecocks wll stop Virginia's three-game winning streak. SOUTH CAROLINA 26, VIRGINIA 16.

The week's big game is Mississippi—that's in Oxford—versus Louisiana State. Last year the Bayou Bengals took a squeaker. They should do it again. LSU 7, OLE MISS 3.

A bowl bid might rest on the outcome of the Southern California-Washington contest. The Trojans won't falter, they want to host the Rose Bowl. SOUTHERN CAL 24, WASHINGTON 21.

Alabama will stay near the top of the nation with an easy win over Mississippi State. BAMA 21, MISSISSIPPI STATE 3.

It could be a wild one in Philadelphia where Navy and Notre Dame meet. Navy used a lot of steam against Pitt last week and the Irish are hungry. NOTRE DAME 17, NAVY 15.

Around the nation:

UCLA 20, CALIFORNIA 7. The Uclans shouldn't be upset again.

PRINCETON 32, BROWN 9. No match, even in the crazy, mixed-up Ivy League.

OKLAHOMA 28, COLORADO 8. Wilkinson's warriors have reached high gear now.

AUBURN 17, FLORIDA 7. But sooner or later the Tigers will be tamed.

NORTHWESTERN 27, INDIANA 0. Another mismatch in the Big Ten area.

KANSAS 22, KANSAS STATE 7. The underdog Staters might put up a good fight, but that's all.

OREGON 24, STANFORD 14. But those Indians have already ambushed Michigan State and UCLA.

OHIO STATE 35, IOWA 13. The Buckeyes have lost two more than they should have.

By ED DUPREE

A fellow once said that there's no place like home and his oft-repeated statement is rarely disputed.

But the usually mean Tigers of Clemson College are beginning to wonder. It seems Frank Howard's men are having a wee bit of trouble winning in their treasured den, Death Valley.

The home sweet home in this case is officially known as Memorial Stadium, and for the fourth straight week the South Carolinians are laying out the welcome mat for their opponent.

North Carolina's Tar Heels will be the scoreboard visitors this afternoon at 2 o'clock and they will be trying to keep a small winning streak alive.

Three weeks ago the orange and purple-clad Clemsonians had a 2-1 record—boasting victories over N. C. State and Wake Forest. A 26-9 loss to Georgia Tech was the only point against them.

But another crew from the Southeastern Conference, Georgia's Bulldogs, pinned the Tiger's tail, 24-16. A week later Duke whitewashed Howard's huskies, 16-0. And last week, a hard-fighting Clemson eleven almost out-Tigered Auburn, but lost by a paw, 17-14.

Clemson football teams are not accustomed to losing. Since the quick-witted, straight forward Howard took over the head coaching job in 1940, Tiger teams have had only seven losing seasons. Howard - coached teams have played in six bowl games.

The Tigers won three, lost five and tied one in 1953, their first Atlantic Coast Conference season. Since then Clemson has won 55 games, with no losing seasons, in eight years.

And there's nothing Jim Hickey and his Tar Heels would like better than to help Clemson post a losing season. The UNC coach has never had a winning season. In 1959 he was 5-5, losing to Clemson, 20-18. In 1960, a 3-7 season; Howard's men won, 24-0. Last year a 27-0 victory for Clemson helped keep Carolina away from a winning season—the Tar Heels finished 5-5.

The Tigers now lead the series, six games to four. The rivalry started in 1897, was discontinued in 1915, and started again in 1957 when UNC won, 26-0.

Both teams have nationally-ranked footballers in their lineups. Eddie Werntz billed as Clemson's mile-high punter, is fourth in the nation in punting. He's kicked for a 42-1-yard average on 26 boots.

Clemson's big problems will be stopping Carolina's passing combination of Junior Edge and Bob Lacey. Edge is 14th in the nation in total offense (799 yards in 143 plays) and 11th in pass completions (59 for 98 attempts). His passing has been good for 741 yards and five touchdowns.

Tricky Bob Lacey, the junior end who looks better every game, is Edge's top target. Bob has caught 26 Edge passes for 426 yards and four six-pointers.

Leading the Tiger offense will be senior quarterback Joe Anderson and junior signal-caller Jim Parker. Parker is the total offense leader with 392 yards in 71 plays. Anderson, the first stringer, has been in 99 plays, accounting for 354 yards.

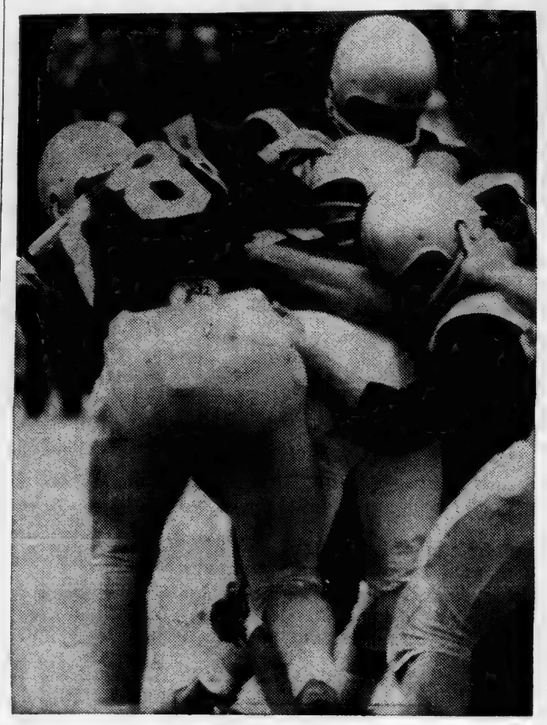
Another fullback who will see a lot of action is Jimmy Howard—the coach's son. Young Howard and Mr. Crain are trying to fill the shoes of Bill McGuirt, a pile-driving, would-be senior who flunked out of the agricultural college.



Top halfbacks are Jerry Taylor, Mack Matthews, Hal Davis and Elmo Lam, an ACC baseball star.

Countering for the Tar Heels will be speedy Ronnie Jackson, Ron Tuthill, Ward Marslender and Joe McLamb.

Ken Willard, UNC's sophomore fullback, leads the team in rushing with 194 yards on 52 carries—a healthy 3.7 average.

One Tar Heel would certainly like to make an encore in Clemson Stadium. That would be Jackson, the 5-8 scooter who has returned 14 kickoffs for 326 yards this season. Last year, as a freshman, Ronnie ran two kickoffs back for touchdowns and scored another on a pass reception. The frosh dropped that wild and woolly contest, 30-27.

Jim Hickey has a lot of sophomores dressed in blue and white, so the rookies, as well as the upperclassmen, will be seeking revenge today in Death Valley.

TACKLED MUCH?—Jimmy Morrison and three unidentified Tar Baby gridders make sure that a Maryland back doesn't get away. The Toy Terps got away with a win, though, 14-13.

Terps Top Tar Babies With A Foot, 14-13

By JOHN MONTAGUE

After spotting visiting Maryland a 14-0 advantage, Carolina's Tar Babies came roaring back for two TD's of their own, only to lose, 14-13, on an abortive two-point try following their second score.

With 1:53 left on the clock, quarterback Jimmy Byrd hit Bill Darnall with a short pass from the Maryland 14 and the Tar Baby wingback fought his way into the end zone for the score which moved the UNC yearlings to within one point of the Baby Terps.

As a small Kenan Stadium crowd yelled its approval, Coach George Barclay elected to go for the two-points. Byrd, looking for an open receiver, rolled out to his right. When he couldn't find one, the little man from Raeford tried to bull his way across the goal line. He was hit and dropped one yard short of his destination.

The Carolina frosh, now 2-2 for the year, still weren't through. Max Chapman's on-side kick attempt failed, but the Tar Babies held the Terps at the Maryland 44, forcing the invaders to punt with 1:28 remaining.

Charlie Ephland took the kick, but wasn't able to get away from the on-rushing Marylanders and was brought down on the UNC 13. From here Jim Harrington threw long, but his pass, intended for Alan McArthur, was intercepted by Jim Landis. This nailed down the victory for the Toy Terrapins, their third in four contests.

Maryland got its first score in the opening period, marching 80 yards in 11 plays. Two penalties against Carolina, one a 15-yarder, aided the Terps. But the big play was Howard Lusby's 38-yard pass to Ron Manges, which placed the ball on the UNC 27.

From here the 15-yard holding penalty sandwiched between several cracks at the line moved the ball to the UNC one. On fourth down Lusby slammed across for the TD and Jim Rowe booted his first of two important point-afters to make it 7-0, Maryland.

Mid-way in the next quarter the Toy Terps just missed another score. After recovering a Byrd fumble on the UNC 25, Maryland's Ed Pyne hit end Howard Humphries with a pass near the goal line. However, Humphries was hit hard by two defenders, one of them being Bob Denlinger who fell on Humphries' bobble at the one-foot line. UNC then drove all the way to the enemy's 26, only to be stopped on downs.

Before the half ended the Tar Babies again threatened, moving the ball to the Terps' 17. But three incomplete passes and a 15-yard penalty killed the drive.

In the third quarter Maryland got its second TD and they did it the easy way. Lusby intercepted a pitch-out by Byrd on the option play and sprinted 36 yards untouched for his second score of the cold, overcast afternoon. Rowe's foot made it 14-0.

At this point the Tar Babies finally got un-stuck. Halfback Gordon Haithcock returned the kick-off 50 yards to the Maryland 35. Charlie Ephland picked up 7 and 4 yards in two carries for a first at the Terp 24.

A 15-yard penalty moved the ball back to the enemy 45, but Byrd quickly moved it back with a 29-yard completion to Steve Lister. Byrd then snuck to the 13 for a first, handed off to Ephland for 3 yards, and tossed to Lister, who made a diving catch in the end zone fo rthe Tar Babies' 1st touchdown. Chapman kicked the point-after to cut the margin to 14-7.

Frosh Booters Stay Unbeaten

Coach Bob DeVoogt's yearlings continue a three-day road trip today when they meet Warren Wilson Junior College in Swannonoa.

Mac Skelly scored both Tar Baby goals against the men from Boone. He tallied once in the first half and again in the closing minutes of the contest. The Mountaineers were still in the contest until Skelly kicked one in with only 1 minute, 43 seconds left.

DeVoogt commended Skelly, Stu Tuttle, Billy Reimer and George Butler for their play against the App varsity.

The Tar Babies return home after today's contest and will be idle until they meet Duke on November 12.

Alexander Wins Again

By STUART BALL

The Alexander Playboys moved up another notch in the defense of their Dormitory Tag-Football Championship Thursday by topping a tough Aycock team. The final score was 20-12, but all of Aycock's points came in the second half and it looked for a while as if the Aardvarks might pull out an upset. The Alexander defense dug in, however, and protected the victory.

Bob Cornwell, Jim Hardison, and Louis Hooks all scored TD's for Alexander as did Butch McCall and George Finch for Aycock.

The victory moved Alexander to the quarter-finals in the single elimination playoffs with an overall record of 5-0, the best in the dorm division. The 12 points scored by Aycock were the first scored on the stingy Alexander defense.

In the only other games played, ATO whipped Kappa Sigma, 12-6, and Sigma Nu won over KA by default in two Fraternity White Division games.

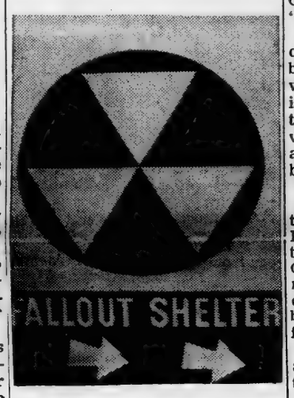
Civil Defense Shelters Will House 12,175



Underground fallout shelters for 12,175 people have been designated at 31 localities on campus this week. These shelters, which are part of the Chapel Hill Civil Defense program, are being supplied by federal authorities with emergency provisions of food, water, medical supplies, radiation detectors, and sanitary equipment.

In addition to the 31 areas now designated with a safety factor of 100 — meaning 100 times safer than being outside — University engineers are now inspecting other areas on the campus that may qualify for a safety factor of the same degree of protection, or less. These additional shelters will make it possible to accomodate townspeople in addition to students, faculty, staff and dependents.

The new shelters are only one part of the CD program that has been organized in Chapel Hill. A warning system is already in effect that calls for police and fire department vehicles to proceed to outlying areas of the town and there to sound the regulation alert — a siren blast of from three to five minutes.

In event of an attack, main headquarters for Civil Defense efforts will be at radio station WCHL, where a command communications post will be set up.

Library, 3160; Hanes Hall, 582; Carroll Hall, 375; Phillips Hall, 207; Whitehead Hall, 99; Wilson Hall, 100; Pharmacy, 233; Public Health, 94; Dental School, 142; South Wing Medical School, 36; Old Medical School, 110; Medical Science Research Building, 225; Hospital Clinic, 225; Hospital, 2937; Psychiatry Wing, 105; Psychiatry Wing Tunnel, 105; Nurses Dorm Wing B, 150; Nurses Dorm Wing C, 270; Filter Plant, 260; and Town Hall, 100.

Campus Uglies Give Views On Sex, Politics, Religion

Want your opinions on sex, politics, religion, the Carolina coed, and various other assorted and sundry topics in the DTH. Get nominated for Ugliest Man On Campus.

Of course not even the nine lucky contestants will get all their thoughts printed, mainly for two reasons—decency and space.

However, when asked for their opinions on these earth-shaking subjects some of the UMOC aspirants gave fairly printable answers.

Take for example the Avery Ghoul's opinion of the Carolina coed: "They're pretty great stuff." He didn't elaborate. Troll said the coed is "okay." (Asked about sex, he said, "That's okay, too.") The Mature Nail wondered why we don't have a UGOC contest (maybe to replace the Yack beauty pageant?) And—girls, get this!—Open Gates says the coeds are "lookin' better every year."

Naturally the natural sequence of things is from coeds to sex, but only two usable comments were forthcoming—one from Crisis: "Can't think of a single thing to say," (he's married) and a very profound statement from Asian Foo: "It's here to stay, God bless it."

Which leads us to religion.

When asked about that, the Mature Nail quipped, "Like Nixon, I'm for it." (Was the irony intentional?). The atheistic Avery Ghoul queried, "God? There ain't none." Apparently his belief is not campus-wide, considering the number of believers at the last two football games.

Politics? Well, you can have it as far as Troll is concerned. By the way, current UMOC Jungle Jim Lobdell had quite a few words on politics and other things in general, so it is suggested that you see him personally. The Mature Nail as usual came up with something vague . . . "Sex and politics don't mix." (Does he have a sex complex or something?)

One interesting little tidbit—Jungle Jim doesn't think he'll win, though the others were unanimous in making him the favorite.

In case you want to help determine the outcome, you can deposit a penny per vote in stands at Lenior Hall. Y-Court and the Circus Room. APO fraternity is running the show and will donate all proceeds to the charity ship Hope.

The lucky winner receives an all expense paid date with a campus beauty, and his sponsor gets the trophy for a year.

Here are the entries and their sponsors: Jungle Jim, Mangum Dorm; Asian Foo, DU; Avery Ghoul, Avery Dorm; Mature Nail; TEP; Crisis, Sword and Scabbard; Monster from Phillips, American Physics Institute; Open Gates, Joyner Dorm; Troll, SAE; and Rogah, Everett Dorm.

Incidentally Jungle Jim wants us to burn down Dook's bonfire before They can do it when the Game nears. Any comers?

Oh, yeah, you may be wondering what Crisis (the married one) will do on his date with a campus beauty if he wins. He says it will be a "family affair." (What an outrageous waste.)

50,000 Reds Grouped On India Border

NEW DELHI (UPI) — India Saturday was reported reactivating World War II U. S. air bases to speed the flow of American arms to the Northeast Frontier before 50,000 Chinese troops massed on the frontier can launch a new offensive.

Calcutta's Dum Dum Airport, where American supplies began landing Saturday, was used by the U. S. Bomber Command against the Japanese invasion of Southeast Asia. The United States also built bomber bases throughout the northeastern areas now threatened.

Highly placed sources said fresh Chinese troops were moving into the Towang Valley near the intersection of India, Bhutan and Tibet for more of the human wave assaults which overwhelmed Indian defenses last month in a Korea-type attack.

The Indians feared the Reds would launch their new offensive in the 17,000-foot mountain passes before the American arms could be phased into Indian defense lines, and they equated the present lull with the same tactics the Chinese used in Korea in which each human wave assault required a week or ten-day buildup.

Full Army Corps

The high military sources said the Chinese had a full army corps along the northeast border and in position inside the territory claimed by India. They estimated at least 20,000 in or behind Towang and another 10,000 or more facing Walong near the Burmese border.

The sources said they believed another full corps of two or more divisions about 20,000 men were poised inside Tibet just above the tiny Himalayan state of Sikkim, an Indian protectorate which holds the most logical invasion route from Tibet.

The first American Air Force jet cargo plane roared into Calcutta three hours ahead of schedule and was met by Indian army trucks which rushed the infantry weapons to Indian planes standing by to take them to the war zone.

Pete Seeger Slated Dec. 5; Proceeds Will Go To SNCC

Pete Seeger, a folksinger of some renown, will be singing in Memorial Hall on December 5th, sponsored by the New Left club.

James Salter, a member of the executive committtee of the New Left, was asked why this group, which is basically political, should take it upon themselves to sponsor a folksinger program.

"First of all, Pete Seeger will provide some very fine entertainment for the campus, and we had the connections to be able to get him."

"Secondly, the program is for fund-raising purposes. Our group may bet a portion of the proceeds. The larger part, however, is to go to the organization called the student non-violent Co-ordinating committee, which is a student group for non-volent liberal activities."

He said that the New Left is sponsoring the performance because there is no SNCC chapter on campus, and they wished to have a performance here.

Salter flatly denied that there were any political implications to the program itself, or any politics to be brought out during the performance. He says that the fund-raising capacity is the only way in which the clubs will beenfit.

Upon being ased why Seeger agreed to sing under the sponsorship of a leftist group, Salter replied: "Pete is a liberal himself. Among his many accomplishments, he has been before the House Un - American Activities Committee. He has been giving benefits all over the South for the Student Non-Violent Co-ordinating Committee.

DTH Mag Issued Tomorrow; Mike Robinson Is Editor

The first issue of the Daily Tar Heel monthly supplement, "The North Carolina Magazine," will appear tomorrow, it was announced by the magazine's editor, Mike Robinson.

The magazine will be distributed free around campus and town.

Robinson said the first issue of the magazine should form the foundation for a large campus humor magazine.

"Although this first issue is not nearly as large as we'd hoped, future issues will be able to build on it," Robinson said. "We'd like to stress humorous short stories, cartoons, satire, critiques, and off beat material that does not generally have an outlet in this area. The local angle in most material should give the magazine acceptance on campus."

The first issue, which is eight pages, contains cartoons by Ray Chatham and Bob Bernard; short stories by Louis Bourne and Roy Rabon; and a critique on college courting by Robinson.

The short story by Rabon, "Boy and the Woman," is "a rather bizarre account of incest" that most males should understand, Robinson commented.

The verbal sketch by Bourne, "Luncheon at Lenoir," should appeal "to every guy who's been shot down at Carolina," Robinson said.

The magazine, which will have circulation of 8,000, will be paid for from paid advertising and Daily Tar Heel profits.

UP, SP Class Officer Candidates Issue Campaign Vows

GORDON APPELL
Jr. Class President

As some may have noticed in yesterday's DTH some of the other Student Party members in Student Government and I have already started work on acquiring faculty acceptance of a student representative on the Standing Faculty Committees directly effecting the policy, under which we work as students. We feel confident that this controversial plank of the S.P. Junior Class Platform will be accepted.

The second recent development is the Bill which I was finally able to introduce into Legislature Thursday night after much investigation of its feasibility. This bill calls for the purchase of a Student Government owned bus to offer transportation to the residents of Erhinghaus and Craige to and from classes.

This bus could also be used by branches of Student Government and Fraternities for transportation to Raleigh and for social functions. This was part of the Student Party Platform last Spring and its acceptance by Legislature will be another example of the Student Party fullfilling its promises.

We are stressing academic stimulation by the class offices, but we are not in any way neglecting the responsibility of the class officers to plan, publicize, and administer parties and other class unifying social functions.

We would bring speakers to the campus to discuss the practical uses of the many Liberal Art majors after graduation. We would continue the Essay Contest on the topic of the Student's Concept of the Spirit of Carolina, offering a monetary prize.

As mentioned above we would continue to strive for faculty acceptance of a student representative on Faculty Committees effecting Dorms, Fraternities and Sororities, curriculum, discipline, athletics, etc.

It goes without saying that we continue the Jr. Classics Basketball Game, the sales at Town and Campus and combo parties. I have already been assured by the manager of T. & C. that we could use his store for a fund raising sale.

Only with your support on Tuesday, and throughout the year, can we work for you, the Junior Class.

BILL AYCOCK
Soph Class President

In Thursday's issue of the DTH, I stated some specific ideas and some general principles concerning my candidacy for Sophomore Class President. Today I would like to give you a better look at two specific planks in what we consider to be a well-balanced platform.

Since the beginning of the new dorms. Craige and Ehringhaus, the Student Party has made repeated efforts to secure transportation to the campus for residents of these dorms. Last night the Student Party introduced a bill in the legislature to appropriate money to purchase a bus for this purpose. With support from the Student Body in general and the residents of Craige and Ehringhaus in particular, this once "impractical idea" will, I believe, become a reality. I will certainly do any and everything I can to see that it does.

I have a letter from a young lady in student government at the Woman's College in Greensboro concerning a series of "open houses" that will be held on their campus beginning on December 1. The WC girls have asked Carolina students to come to Greensboro for dinner and a party. More publicity on this will be forthcoming, and I hope that everyone will take advantage of this definite commitment and opportunity for a fine social event.

In conclusion, let me reiterate something I said Thursday and something I have said in dorm meetings and in conversations. The prime motivation behind the campaign of the Student Party slate of officers for the Sophomore Class is concise and to the point: every student in this University who has any desire to work or help in Student Government in any way should have the opportunity to do so. He is not getting that opportunity now. Our platform is designed to bring about greater and more active participation.

* * *

JACKIE HARRELL
Freshman Class President

Today, I would like to present the platform of the Freshman candidates of the Student party, a platform dedicated to advancement of the freshman class through active work; not only in Student Government, but also in everyday campus life.

Our platform is based on two principal ideas: class unity and inter-class co-operation. We hope to achieve stronger class unity through more effective use of our available means of communication, giving the officers a more personal concern for each student. Class co-operation will be accomplished through an inter-class council, which would co-ordinate the programs of all four classes and eliminate conflicts between them.

There is a wealth of benefit for freshmen in the honors program or "A" courses. By making known these benefits, I hope to create effective Freshman interest in academics.

Freshman social life, especially in the dorms, needs much improvement! Through a more effective dorm-mixer schedule and by providing better party facilities, I believe we can do much to alleviate this situation.

Increased partcipation in the intramurals program would be of considerable value. I feel that through more recognition of achievement, we can create a spirit of interest conducive to this participation.

This platform is purposely idealistic. On these ideals, we the Student Party candidates will base our actions while in office. We are not running on the laurels of our Party or of our past achievements, but on what we offer you, the Freshman class.

Let me urge each of you in my class to exercise your right to vote next Tuesday. We believe that we offer the best slate of qualified and sincre candidates and a meaningful platform of action. I hope you will agree.

Please feel free to stop me at anytime to discuss any questions you may have concerning our candidates and program. I look forward to meeting each of you during and after the campaign.

CHARLIE SHAFFER JR.
Jr. Class President

If elected President of the Junior Class, my platform will involve two overall desires: (1) to unite our class through wider class participation in activities and projects in which each Junior will be interested; (2) to present the Junior Class to the campus and University as an active and ambitious group.

My platform and ultimate goals involve academic, social, athletic and service activities; and in each area, I hope to bring every Junior to the forefront as individual, in such a way that we illustrate our potential as an outstanding group. Whether you are a scholar, an athlete, a socialite, it will be my aim to interest you. Perhaps it would be better to say that my platform will be of, for, and by every Junior.

During my campaign, I have tried to meet every Junior personally, so that if I am elected I can feel that I do represent each of you. And if I am elected, you can be sure that this campus will hear from the Junior Class, in such a way that we can be proud of our unity as ambitious classmates.

* * *

HARRISON MERRILL
Soph. Class President

It is most important that the members of the Sophomore Class know the platform on which I am running. The platform of the University Party Sophomore Candidates is as follows:

I. Better communications between officers and members of the class.

a. By Daily Tar Heel column.

b. By Communications Committee.

II. Sunday evening discussion groups with prominent citizens of the State.

III. Better relations between dorm and fraternity residents.

a. Impartial selection of cabinet and committee members.

b. Expansion of dorm problems committee.

c. Class socials with best possible accommodations.

IV. $100.00 scholarship fund to be presented to worthy class member.

V. Outstanding faculty member award based on service to sophomore class.

With active participation by the members of our class, an active leadership by the elected officers, and sound financing by the plans of our treasurer we plan to make this Carolina's best Sophomore Class in a long time. Through my experience as class Treasurer last year and my active participation in student government, I feel most qualified to lead the class this year. The University Party candidates offer experience and ideas: I hope that the Sophomores will take this into consideration when they vote next Tuesday.

* * *

EARL JOHNSON
Freshman Clas President

As the University Party candidate for President of the Freshman Class, I would like to present the platform of our slate. It encompasses four areas as follows:

A. Social

1. Freshman Weekend with a freshman Queen and two dances.

2. Dances with Nurses and Spencer.

3. Freshman Contests such as a Co-Rec Carnival with the girls on campus.

4. Transportation for Woman's College by scheduling the bus companies on a direct route from there to Chapel Hill.

B. Academic

1. Poll on the effectiveness of all Freshman Dorms.

2. Tutoring service sand co-operative review sessions for those students who need them.

3. Information on the "Suicide 50" and Morehead Scholars.

C. Campus Quarterly

1. Legislative and Government actions pertaining to Freshman.

2. Articles on the achievements of past outstanding Freshman.

3. Party stands by both the UP and SP.

4. Emphasis on freshman activities such as freshman athletic teams.

D. Finance

1. Freshman day in town.

2. Bake Sales.

3. Car Wash.

4. A concession stand at a home football or basketball game. The entire platform stands for increased interest in campus affairs through the formation of a cabinet designed and staffed by a large number of active Freshman for the Freshman.

I feel that the UP freshman candidates have the experience and leadership to carry out this platform; I urge all freshman to vote UP on Nov. 6.

Campaigns: From Courts, Tricky Dick . . . To Campus

While the campus politics are busy making weighty promises to continue giving awards, improve "communication" and be honest if elected to class offices, there are several important races going on in the outside world.

The most publicized gubernatorial race in many years is taking place in California between Gov. Pat Brown and Richard Nixon — the primary difference being one of integrity. Brown's opposition to capital punishment and refusal to stamp out academic freedom on the California campuses has given Nixon a chance to bellow "criminal-and-commie-coddler." Nixon (who adapted a famous circus phrase to suit his individual politics: "Now you see it, now you don't") is having considerable difficulty running against Brown's efficient and honest administration, and is being forced to revert to his famous brand of let's-avoid-the-issues-unless-I-can - use - them-to-smear-my-opponent politics.

New York's Gov. Rockefeller is coasting into a victory against Robert Morganthau, whose campaign is hurt by that incessant quibbling which always marks New York Democratic politics. A narrow victory for the Republican governor, however, would probably not help his presidential ambitions.

Michigan's Gov. Swainson is up against the rolling, rambling wonder-boy George Romney, who has presidential ambitions aplenty. A defeat would take him out of the 1964 Republican picture completely, and a victory would just put him on the spot. He somehow would have to prove to the Republicans and the nation that he is a better campaigner than Rockefeller, more personable than Goldwater, less unpopular than Nixon and more statesmanlike than Kennedy and . . .

Closer to home, a UNC student committee has been working for passage of the state court reform amendment. This amendment, which would set up a unified judicial system throughout the state, is a long overdue reform. The amendment provides for a logical system of district courts to replace the present confused condition. Equally important, no magistrate's compensation would be dependent upon his decision or upon collection of the costs.

* * *

In voting on campus the Inter-Dormitory Council is asking dormitory residents to approve a 75 cent hike in social fees Tuesday. The Council explains that dormitory officers usually have to start a special collection among dorm residents in order to have more than a few dorm parties a year. This fee hike would enable dormitories to enter in more competitions, put out a better dorm paper, have broader social activities, make capital improvements, and generally make the dormitories more liveable. We second the IDC's "vote YES" recommendation.

* * *

And, oh yes, there are 30 persons running for freshman, sophomore and junior class officers. Somehow they have all managed to dig up platforms upon which to campaign.

This year's slates appear to be attempting to inject a few more issues into the election than usual, but basically they run into the same old problem — that class officers have very little power and very little money, and so mean very little. (JC)

Music, Music, Music?

With the greater majority of this area's radio stations apparently catering to the taste of juvenile idiots and their craving for rock 'n' roll nonsense, we find the musical score served up by Chapel Hill's local station, WCHL, if not magnificent, at least a most welcome relief.

Nowadays, one cannot twist the dial without be subjected to the grunts and groans of sick teenage lovers crying for the return of their "babies." And if the radio listener is fortunate to tune into a station in between songs, he is most likely going to hear some idiot disk jockey belching out the clever aria which proclaims his station as "number one in the nation"—as "first with the worst," or as "the most popular spot on your dial."

Everything, literally everything is set to some swell jiving rythmical score. Nobody talks anymore, they all sing. Commercials, weather, news, contests, station breaks — the works—its all sung, or rather screeched, over the radio.

Maybe it is because Chapel Hill is virtually a "small town," maybe it is because Kemp's doesn't sell rock 'n' roll, maybe it is because the sponsors of the programs insist; but whatever the reasons, we are truly grateful that WCHL has managed to resist the insanity that leads radio stations elsewhere to a ridiculous programming of horrible horrible music.

And it might just be the case that part of that mysterious something which makes Chapel Hill the wonderful place that it is can be attributed to the sensible style of WCHL's presentations. (CW)

THE ONE AND ONLY REAL TRUTH

By BENEDICT BURR

It is with great pleasure that I announce my candidacy for Freshman Class President on a write-in campaign with the endorsements of Othello Konner, Weighed Wellman, and the late Wendell Willkie.

Needless to say, the only qualifications for this office are a long list of my high school athletic feats and a promise that Freshmen will dominate all campus activity this year.

I attended prep school at St. Typhoid's School in Locust-Plague, Vermont. My sports career there was brilliant, although short. I went out for Lacross, Squash, Fox Hunts, and Pile Driving. I made all four teams, and even as far south as UNC, my ability was hailed by Ed DuPree as, "a really Go-Team-istic example of Block-That-Kickism and Get-In-There-And Fightability."

Unfortunately, I had to drop athletics after I came down with a case of mono that lasted four years.

However, it's the thought that counts, so here's my platform of goals for this year's freshman class:

1.) I will institute a President-For-A-Day program, by which every Monday and Thursday, a deserving freshman will assume the duties of the Student Government President for a day. (These two days were selected so that the Thursday President could go before Student Legislature to explain the bills necessary to correct the mistakes of the Monday President.)

2.) As an educational service, every other week freshmen will serve as the men's and women's honor councils. In addition to being good preparation for a career as a member of the Secret Service, this will also harden the freshmen to being misquoted in the DAILY TAR HEEL.

3.) Finally, realizing that every freshman is pre-occupied with sex, I propose the most bizarre of my three planks.

The newly-elected Social Chairman of the freshman class will be MADE chairman of a large committee with a rotating membership. In more explicit terms, this means that every —CENSORED— (Eds' Note: the remainder of this sentence was unprintable, even by DTH standards.)

Clearly then, you see that my candidacy is based on the exaltation of the freshmen at the expense of nearly veryone else. Keep me in mind at the polls. Write in Benedict Burr.

. . . A few really inside jokes for those of you who thought you were clever enough to get this far . . .

Is it any more just for the Student Legislature to control the Honor System than for the Daily Tar Heel to? Ole Benedict is provincial enough to think that the student body should have the "right" to decide.

There is considerable doubt as to whether "Joe Exum" is an "individual." We suspect it is a coalition name for the governors of Alabama, South Carolina, and missippi, and the Grand Dragon.

On Two Junior Candidates

President Allen Supports Shaffer

On behalf of the candidacy of Charlie Shaffer for President of the Junior Class, I would like to express my strong feelings in regard to his qualifications.

Athletically, Charlie received 10 varsity letters in high school, and served as captain for three varsity sports. Here last year, he lettered in basketball and tennis in his sophomore year, and only a severe leg injury kept him off the football field.

Scholastically, Charlie is extremely capable. A Cum Laude graduate from Woodberry Forest, Charlie now maintains a 3.30 or B plus average here at Carolina, and he hopes to read for Honors in History.

In campus activities so far this year, Charlie is currently Chairman of the Student Athletic Council. This council organized the Homecoming Queen Contest and the Homecoming display contest; and in addition to this, he was Chairman of the Episcopal Students Every-Member-Canvass this past month.

I urge every Junior to think very seriously as to whom they want to lead them this year. I heartily support Charlie Shaffer, a qualified leader who, I feel, could become one of the most outstanding Class Presidents we have ever had.

Appell Qualified For Junior Vote

To the Editors:

Next Tuesday we will be voting for class officers. In the past the students have often voted for candidates without giving very close attention to their qualifications. This has been shown by the lack of accomplishments made by the class officers.

I believe the following qualifications are necessary. The first qualification is the candidate's willingness to work for his class. He should express a desire to promote the welfare of his class, but most of all, he should carry these desires out. The only way that a student can be certain that a candidate will carry out his platform is to look at his past record. If he is an individual that has worked hard in the past and has had the initiative to bring out new and better ideas for the students then you can be assured that he will continue to do so in the future.

Secondly, a candidate should have individual has been found. He is Gordon Appell, candidate for President of the Junior Class.

Gordon is presently a member of the Student Legislature, where he is assistant majority Floor Leader and serves on the Rules Committee. Through the experience he has gained in this position he has learned how a class officer can obtain desired goals for his class through the Legislature, when necessary. He is also a member of the I.D.C. Through this position he has learned what the desires and gripes of the dorm man are.

Gordon's willingness to work has been demonstrated by his past efforts. He introduced the bill to the Student Legislature to obtain buses for Student Government which could be used by the dorms for transportation to classes, W.C., etc. This would especially aid Ehringhaus and Craige, but could also be used by Fraternities for their social functions off campus. He has already started work on perhaps the most novel plank in his platform, that of obtaining non-voting student representation on faculty committees.

I strongly believe that because of these qualifications Gordon Appell would be the Junior Class's best choice for President.

Student President Notes NSA Benefits

By INMAN ALLEN
Student Body President

In answer to the question of "What does NSA do for me?" or "What does NSA do for my campus?", I must say that it is the reaction of a person who has, in three years of college, gone from one extreme to the other in his condemnation or acclaim of the United States National Student Association. Before I began participating in those student activities which allowed, and sometimes encouraged, participation in campus, regional, or national NSA functions, I was basically opposed to the concept and the functioning of NSA, as I then saw it. This view, I feel, was an unintelligent and uninformed one—let me add now that these were the most significant factors in any previous condemnation of NSA. Since, I have become more informed about NSA and more aware of its potential, and would now consider myself one of its strongest supporters, although politically I am not a liberal, and it would be a real exercise in semantics to even call myself a moderate.

I would refute the premsie held by many NSA opponents that there is a need for a truly democratic and representative union of students by suggesting that: first, NSA IS this union of students, the largest and most geographically dispersed in America; secondly, I would suggest that NSA is the most democratic institution of its size in existence, and this suggestion will be subtantiated, I'm sure, by anyone who has witnessed a summer Congress; and, frankly, I would suggest that NSA is "gloriously" representative, a situation resulting from recent legislation introduced by those schools concerned in the area of representation and accurate reflection of the trends and concepts of member schools. This legislation deals with referral to the NEC, publication of minority reports, and the change in the Constitution which explicitly points out that membership in NSA does not necessarily imply agreement with, or the responsibility to participate actively in the policy-making processes of, the Association itself. I really feel that NSA is the most democratic and representative union of students at the present in America and that its flexibility of structure and, an interpretation there from, should, when grasped by an individual or group of individuals, because enough for them to implement any changes from within, rather than trying to create an organization in opposition to NSA, an undertaking which could only delay NSA in its attempt to grant unique services to the students of America.

USNSA is doing a great deal for this campus and the present student body. I would not deny the fact that NSA has been very weak as a contributing force to the educational process of student involvement in the past. I would point out, however, that the opposition to NSA on this campus is healthy and constructive in nature—its basis for motivation is to change exisiting structure and strengthen present inadequacies. It is a constructive opposition because these student opponents accept the good points and use the services of NSA rather than condemning it in toto. They are informed to the point where they will not attack the whole institution as being of no value at all to the student body. Then I would suggest that NSA has had its weak years on this campus when everyone wondered what it was doing for the individual, or what it was doing for the campus, and, as a result, was the expense involved with NSA really worth incurring. A situation of this type arises when the NSA leadership on the campus is at a low point—when the NSA coordinator is not a dynamic and projecting individual. The converse of this, a dynamic and projecting NSAAC, who need only make the campus aware of what NSA can offer, would point up how really effective and vital a force NSA can be on a campus—the many services offered by NSA are cherished by an informed and eager student body.

I would conclude by saying that the involvement of USNSA beyond the campus in national or international affairs becomes a minor consideration to anyone who is interested only in the welfare of those within a particular student community, and concerned with what NSA can do to promote that welfare, given the leadership and directed through the proper channels; still, this involvement in national and international matters is a distinct fact of NSA's purpose, and also has its place in the Association's program—

Congratulations, Fraternity Pledge

By ROGER PRENTISS

In The Connecticut
Daily Campus

Well pledges, it's all over. In the next few weeks while you're getting used to your chosen fraternity, you're going to have to make a lot of changes and adjustments.

Yes, you'll have to change your haircut, and invest in a few sets of collgeiate clothes. But there's more to it than that; you'll have to change your personality. That wouldn't seem too bad because you needed some refinement, anyway.

It would be nice if you were only refined by this pledging period, but, unfortunately, you'll be changed in other ways.

Remember Zelda, that girl you could count on to be there and a good date? She'll have to go, probably. The process will be quite subtle, of course. You'll take her to a party and afterwards, one of the brothers who has been around quite a while will say, "Let me get you a date with a real 'sharp' girl . . ." That is when it begins; being a pledge you'll agree. From then on you'll only go out with "sharp" girls; you'll have to call them the week before because the "sharp" girls are all dated long ahead of time. You'll learn their names, of course, not as Mary Jane Jones, but probably as "M.J." and, of course, they'll have to be from the "sharp" sororities.

Remember the gang of fellows you used to hang around with? Those were good times. Yes, they were. They'll have to go, too. This will start when they visit you one night and after they're gone, one of the brothers will start calling them "finks, saps and jerks." A little more subtly, of course, but the thought's there. Shortly thereafter, you'll be too busy meeting campus leaders and sharp girls to have any time for your old friends.

Remember the good grades you got in high school or at the branch? No more; you'll HAVE to have a date every Friday and Saturday night, and coffee dates during the week. If you don't you're "socially sterile" or queer or a grind.

This isn't bad, though, if you think of what you'll learn.

You'll learn the color of all the founding members' eyes and hair.

You'll learn all about your fraternity membership, and its significant members.

You'll learn that all non-fraternity members are animals and all members of other fraternities are "finks" or "saps."

You'll learn how to "unionize." A good 'unionrat' has a lot of skill; he must carry on a minimum of two conversations, well punctuated with "hi Joes," "hi Mary's" and off-color remarks (especially in mixed-company). You'll learn that if there are two at a table, you must be the first to leave or be accused of enjoying the conversation.

You'll learn all the campus leader positions "we" hold and be encouraged to join all sorts of activities because "we" can't lose status and become a second-rate house.

You'll learn all about campus politics, especially who's running for what (This will be posted on your lavatory door, along with the prescribed voting order). You'll learn that voting is more important than eating.

You'll learn that it's not the individual's personality and ability that counts, but it's his house; you must learn that the fraternity is the man; it's no longer "Joe and Fred," but "a bunch of Beta's."

You'll learn not to call your friends by name but to call them "the house."

You'll learn that you're getting "well-rounded" and learning to "live with people" even though your fraternity brothers are all alike.

You'll add to your vocabulary such terms as "sharp," "hi ya slick" and others.

You'll learn that you can't open your mouth without saying something "sharp," "cutting," "biting" or something else critical, though only in jest.

You'll learn to "snake." You can't stick with your date at wild fraternity parties (they're called wild, to hear the stories), especially if you happen to like her.

You'll learn to do whatever you can to conceal and disguise your real feelings.

You'll learn that anyone who doesn't have a phone in her room isn't worth calling, and the higher your phone bill the "sharper" guy you are.

And most important to the fraternities you'll learn the important fraternity secrets like who's' sleeping with whom, what girls can be made, what deals "we" have going. You'll learn to act like you know these secrets, but aren't telling anyone.

But, cheer up, pledge. It'll be fun and you'll be able to look back and say "What a damn fool I was." Years later, you'll come back to Homecoming to try to straighten everyone out, but nobody will listen. Maybe if you start trying now, somebody will listen and maybe the fraternity system will change and maybe it will go back to the old, unfortunately outmoded, system of friends. Maybe. I doubt it.

Freshman Candidates' Statements

Stuark Kagel, SP
For Freshman VP

The Student Party platform for the freshman class is strong and progressive. We are trying to unify a class that is great in both members and potential. We will achieve this unity socially, academically and athletically. We will strive for a more organized dorm life through joint dormitory parties with better facilities for these parties. Academically, we realize the need for dorm libraries, a tutoring committee and more stimulated interest in the Honors program and "A" courses. With your support we will realize these undertakings.

I would like to take this opportunity to share with you my views concerning the Vice Presidency. The Vice President should be READY to aid his classmates in every area of campus life. He should be WILLING to give of himself for the benefit of his class. Finally the Vice President should be ABLE to assume the task of aiding the president, the class and the classmate. I hope by the end of the campaign to have had an opportunity to meet each member of the freshman class personally. I will appreciate your consideration and would greatly appreciate your support.

Hap Stewart, UP
For Frosh VP

The office of Vice-President of the Freshman Class is more than just a position. I see the job as that of coordinating the various phases of our class program. The job is to keep the organization moving so that the President will not be held back by details.

Our platform for the Freshman Class combines the major areas of class interest into a cabinet under the leadership of the President. In this cabinet will be positions to lead the various phases of class participation. The main phases being social;; including a Freshman Queen, dances, and a Co-Rec Carnival; Academic; campus; including the editor of the Freshman Quarterly Magazine; and finance in order to raise the money to pay for these various projects.

The entire purpose of our platform is to encourage better participation by all the members of the class in order to build class unity. I hope that my fellow freshman will learn our platform and will see fit to vote Nov. 6.

DUSTY ANDERSON, UP
For Freshman Secretary

As nominee for secretary of the Freshman Class, I support the platform of the University Party candidates and would like to help us to initiate the programs which we have established. In addition, to establishing these programs, I see the duties of class secretary as being quite specific. First, the secretary must keep her class informed through the Daily Tar Heel and bulletins on the functions of the class. Second, I would like to start a class history in the form of a scrapbook similar to that one started by last year's freshman secretary. Third, I would support the publication of the Freshman Quarterly which would contain articles on the Freshman Class, accomplishments, on Student Government actions pertaining to our class, on Freshman and campus leaders, on the accomplishments of past freshman, and on the Freshman athletic teams.

I will try as secretary to be more than just a name, I want to see a strong Freshman Class united through more participation and better projects. Towards this I will work by keeping the class informed and interested. I know that the voters will see the sincerity of the University Party candidates and of their plans and will vote accordingly Nov. 6.

POLLY OSBORN, SP
For Freshman Secretary

There is a great need for better interdorm correspondence, especially in the Freshman Class. Many activities are held that the Freshmen do not know about. This and several other ideas are the things I hope to accomplish if I am elected Secretary.

I would like to make a brief statement of the plans I will carry out if elected.

1. As I have stated, better correspondence between the dorms to inform them of the various social functions of the Freshman Class is needed. I plan not only to inform them of the social functions, but also of the meetings and decisions of the officers.

2. As far as the regular duties of secretary are concerned, I am well qualified to perform these duties and would do so willingly.

3. My next plan is to send in a regular report to the Daily Tar Heel about the plans and activities of our class. This has never been done before, and I feel that this would be another way to keep the members of the class informed.

These are a few of my plans and I hope it gives you a general idea of what I hope to accomplish if elected.

I fully support the platform of the Freshman Class and the party. I will do all I can to help make our class the best yet. Thank you for any support you may give me on November 6.

JOHN SHELDON, SP
For Freshman Treasurer

As a candidate for Treasurer of the Freshman Class I am very interested that all freshmen be informed of my qualifications. In High School I was an officer in various clubs and was Captain of the swimming team for two years. More importantly though, I was a member of the Senior Finance Committee.

Part of the job of Treasurer of the Freshman Class involves finding new projects for raising money to supplement the student government class appropriations. Some of my ideas for doing this are combo parties, selling football programs as a class, selling clothes in the Town and Campus Store, and working in stores for a commission.

It is not enough, in my opinion, for the Treasurer of the Freshman Class to concern himself with just the account book. He must take an active part in developing the plans and projects of the Class and be able to help carry them through. Some of the things I would like to see us do this year are better inter-dorm activities, a Freshman Weekend, and a Freshman scholarship program.

In closing I would like to say that I appreciate your interest in and support my campaign. I feel a particular sense of responsibility and privilege in having been nominated for this class office by the Student Party. Should I be elected, I pledge that I will do everything possible to make this a successful year for the Class of 66.

PAUL JENSEN, UP
For Freshman Treasurer

As treasurer of the Freshman Class my job will be to supply the funds to back the various class projects. The University Party candidates have a very ambitious platform. Included in it are some of the ways in which I will try to raise money during the year. These include: Freshman Day in town, bake sales by the girls, car washes, and stand concessions at the home games. Through the profits from these undertakings we can pay for our dances, magazine, and other plans for the year.

I hope to keep the class on sound financial footing for the year, and to send us into our Sophomore Year with a surplus. It is most important to make sure that our plans are carried out by active participation of our class, and an adequate financial basis. I hope that my classmates will study our platform and vote for us this Tuesday.

PAM WEDDLE, SP
For Freshman Social Chairman

The social situation for the freshman, particularly the dorm man, is far from satisfactory. There are few if any social activities in which freshmen can participate and feel at ease. Even if these activities were available, the lack of dates would restrict extensive participation.

There are several things I feel that could remedy this situation:

1. There are many freshman girls in the same predicament at Woman's College, Peace, St. Mary's, and Meredith. Organized exchanges between Carolina and these colleges would provide a partial remedy to the situation.

2. Mixers and open houses in Spencer or Nurses Dorm would give you a chance to meet the Carolina Coeds.

3. Social activities are not necessarily restricted to dances. I would like to see a wide variety of different projects in many areas in which we could get to meet more members of our class.

These are just a few of my ideas. I think that through effective leadership and active participation on your part we can have an outstanding class organization.

I strongly endorse our party platform and the obectives which it is designed to accomplish. I would consider it a privilege to serve as your social chairman and I would devote my best efforts to achieving the goals I have outlined.

KATHY JONES, UP
For Frosh Social Chmn.

One of the biggest problems facing the freshman here is the ratio of men and women. There is really very little chance for our class to get together during the beginning of school. However, with proper leadership our class can have good social functions.

I would like to see a Freshman Weekend with a class queen, dances, and a Co-Rec Carnival. In addition, we should have dances throughout the year between Nurses, Spencer, and the various men's dorms. We are working now on getting the bus companies to schedule a direct route from Woman's College to Chapel Hill, so that girls can be brought over here and we can go over there easily.

I would like to serve as class Social Chairman to see the University Party Freshman Candidates platform carried out this year. I would like to see every Freshman take an active interest in his class, to help it unite and mature, and I urge all my classmates to study the candidates and then vote Nov. 6.

Clemson Continues Tar Heel Mastery, 17-6

By CURRY KIRKPATRICK

CLEMSON, S. C., Nov. 3—Death Valley, its menacing name and foreboding myth humbled for three successive weeks, finally took a toll here today as the Clemson Tigers ripped gaping holes in the North Carolina line and rushed to a 17-6 win.

The Tigers, who had lost three straight games in their home lair—the first time in human memory this type of thing had happened to a Frank Howard-coached club—fought back ferociously today and destroyed the Tar Heel defense with an unending supply of bruising backs.

No less than six Clemson men rushed for better than twenty-five yards and of these, sophomore Charlie Dumas, playing in his first varsity game, was the shining light.

Dumas, a 6-2, 218-pounder from Forsyth, Ga., scored both Clemson touchdowns on short bursts and contributed 43 yards to the Tiger ground-yardage total of 303.

Carolina, a Clemson victim four straight years and frustrated the past two times when it has failed to score on, much less defeat, a Tiger club, reverted to the same pattern today.

The Tar Heels found the goal line an elusive target the entire first half and were not able to change the scoreboard until 3:41 remained in the third period.

Then, down 0-14 and with Clemson threatening again at the Carolina 39, the Tar Heels struck—and fast.

Clemson quarterback Jim Parker, attempting to pass on 2nd and 11, was manhandled from behind by Bobby Zaback. Zaback shot the ball loose and Jim Alderman fell on it at NC's 47.

Two plays gained 14 yards and with the ball resting at the 33, the seemingly irresistible force—Ken Willard—took matters into his own hands.

Willard, looking stronger every week, burst through the crowd at the scrimmage line, bolted toward the right side line, and outran two defenders to the goal.

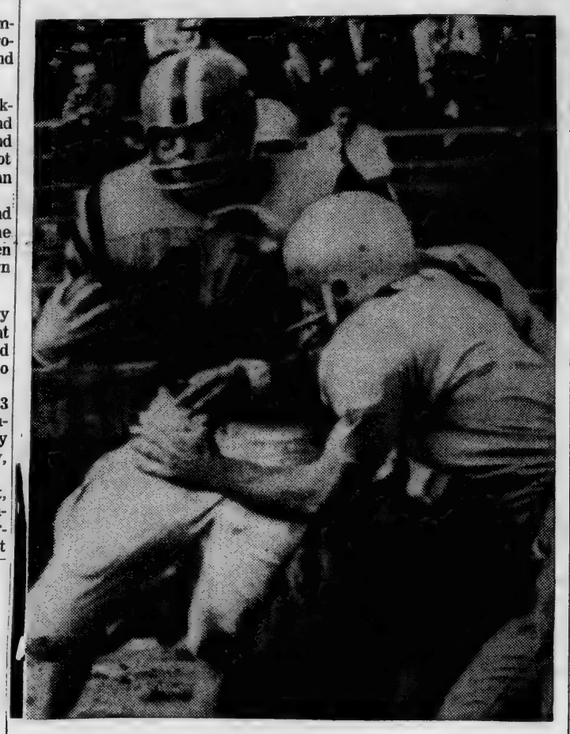
These were just 33 of the 113 yards the rookie fullback accumulated this cloudy day, and they put the Tar Heels, momentarily, back in the game.

That horrendous football epithet, fumble, that led to the NC touchdown, plagued both teams all afternoon, but at no time did it count more than at the start of the second half.

With Clemson holding a 7-0 halftime lead on the strength of a one-yard buck by Dumas early in the second quarter, the Tigers' Rodney Rogers kicked off.

Jimmy Eason received on the ten and rambled upfield. But at the 28, the ball slipped from his hands and was promptly reoovered by the kicker, Rogers.

Three running plays advanced Clemson to the 15 and here, Dumas took over. The 19-year-old soph, who has just recovered from a pulled muscle which kept him out of the lineup, carried the ball four straight times. The last charge was for three yards and gave Clemson a 13-0 margin. Rogers' kick was good and Death Valley was dead no more.



Willard's third-period score reduced the lead to 14-6 and that's the way they went into the final quarter. Then, the fun started.

Clemson got nowhere from its four-yard stripe, to which Junior Edge had punted, and Edge's counterpart, Eddie Werntz was forced to kick. Werntz punted out to the Carolina 49 but Ronnie Jackson was hit hard and fumbled.

Clemson took over as Parker passed 14 yards along the right sideline to Jim Skiffey. But Skiffey was hit hard. He too fumbled.

Carolina recovered on its 35 but lost considerable yardage on penalties in its series of downs. Edge negotiated another fine punt out to the Clemson 45, and Bill Miller received. Miller was hit hard but he did not fumble. From the 45, Clemson, trying to add insurance to its slim lead, mechanically drove to the Carolina 13. Then, with 3rd and 11, a very strange thing happened. Clemson quarterback Joe Anderson faded back to pass—20 yards back to be specific — and promptly threw the ball high up in the right sideline seats. It is believed that Anderson could not spot an open receiver, thus, did not want to throw an interception, but then again, he might have been throwing to his grandmother in the bleachers.

Whatever the case, no intentional grounding call was forthcoming from the officials and Clemson's Rogers got a chance to kick a field goal. He did so successfully and Clemson had its fifth straight win over a UNC football team.

Georgia Tech Throttles Duke Easily, 20-9

DURHAM (UPI) — Quarterback Billy Lothridge kicked two field goals, ran for one touchdown and set up a second Saturday to guide Georgia Tech to a 20-9 victory over a Duke team which stalled on the ground and in the air before 44,000 hometown fans.

Lothridge, a do-it-all-yourself field general from Gainesville, Ga., was the standout of the game. He repeatedly hit with his passes and ground out rushing yardage with his sweeps and sneaks.

Tech scored in each period but the fourth. The Blue Devils booted a field goal the second period, but were not able to cross the goal line until the final quarter.

While Tech rolled with a steady power on the ground and had little trouble finding open pass receivers to hit, the Blue Devils couldn't make their ground attack click for sustained drives. Quarterback Walt Rappold couldn't hit his receivers until the final period when he launched one into the hands of Pete Widener in the end zone.

The game was an exhibition of grinding offensive football. Tech drove for scores every time it got possession of the ball in the first half.

The Yellow Jackets started rolling when they took the opening kickoff and marched 75 yards on rushes by Lothridge, fullback Mike McNames and halfback Zollie Sircy. Lothridge capped it off by running six yards for the score.

But then Duke took the Tech kickoff and drove to the Yellow Jacket 11, where halfback Bill Reynolds kicked a 14-yard field goal.

When Tech got the ball the second time, it marched 82 yards, mostly on runs by McNames and halfback Gerry Bussell to make it 14-3. Fullback Ray Mendheim bucked over from the one.

After taking a Duke punt, the Yellow Jackets switched from running to a passing game, with Lothridge hitting end Billy Martin three times to drive to the Duke 10. From there, Lothridge kicked a 16-yard field goal with 17 seconds left in the first half.

Booters, Runners Play Tomorrow

The varsity soccer team and varsity and freshman cross country squads will be in action Monday as Carolina begins another big week of sports activity.

The booters, returning to action after a 10-day layoff, will be seeking their fifth straight triumph in a 3 p.m. Fetzer Field contest with Belmont Abbey. Jim Reston, with 10 of the team's 22 goals, heads the varsity scorers. The soccermen have a 4-1 overall record, with all their wins coming at home.

Both UNC cross country teams will travel to Raleigh for the State Championships. Other schools competing will include Duke, N. C. State, Davidson and Wake Forest. Both Tar Heel teams concluded their regular season schedule last week in Durham. Duke defeated the varsity, 27-28, to end the varsity's six-meet unbeaten skein and also downed the freshman harriers.

On Wednesday Coach Marvin Allen's soccermen will visit Raleigh where they will meet N. C. State. Earlier this season the booters routed State, by a 9-1 score, in a home contest.

The varsity football team travels to Charlottesville Saturday to meet the Cavaliers of Virginia in another ACC engagement.

Shutouts Feature Intramural Action

In a light Friday intramural schedule, eight Fraternity White Division teams did combat, and in three of the games the opposition was shut out.

The Phi Delts combined a potent offense with a stingy defense in their conquest of the Delta Sigs. The final score was 37-0 and John Poole and Holden Thompson both scored two touchdowns. Don Lesley and O. H. Parrish also tallied one each.

ATO and DKE both shut out their opponents. The score was 21-0 in the ATO win over the Phi Gams. Richard Reitzel scored twice and Roger Penland once for the ATO's. DKE topped DU 15-0 in a closer contest. Nort Willis and Bill Schmidt both scored TD's for the Dekes.

In the only contest in which the loser scored, the outcome was never in doubt. The SAE's took a 20-7 lead over TEP at the half, then held them scoreless the rest of the way and won 33-7. Five player broke into the scoring column for SAE. Blake Young, John Thompson, Jim Vaness, Frank Martin, and Jim Light shared scoring honors.

State Gets Tie, WF Loses; USC Ends Virginia's Dream

U T 23, Wake 0

KNOXVILLE, TENN. (UPI) — Tennessee turned its big weakness into its big weapon Saturday to baffle Wake Forest's passers and punch out a 23-0 nonconference victory.

The big orange Vols of the Southeastern Conference suffered four straight losses at the start of the season because o fa sieve-like pass defense. Saturday they turned six pass interceptions into two touchdowns in handing Wake Forest its seventh consecutive loss.

Left end Jerry Gowdy, who moved up this week to the first team because of injuries to the regular end corps, intercepted a Wake Forest pass and raced 52 yards for one touchdown.

Substitute tailback Bobby Morton, rolled for one 12-yard score and had another 33-yard touchdown run called back because of penalties.

State 10, U Ga 10

ATHENS, Ga. (UPI)—The Georgia Bulldogs settled for a 10-10 tie with underdog North Carolina State here Saturday by running out the clock after a clutch interception rather than run a similar risk in return.

The Bulldogs had come storming back from a 10-0 halftime deficit to catch the Wolfpack midway through the fourth period on an end run by halfback Don Blackburn.

At this point, to the disappointment of 31,000 Band Day fans, Georgia went for the conversion kick and a tie rather than a two-pointer that might have put the bulldogs ahead.

N. C. State drove deep into Georgia territory but fumbled away the ball. The next time the Wolfpack got the ball they lost it on a pass interception by Georgia halfback Billy Knowles.

USC 40, U Va 6

COLUMBIA, S. C. (UPI)—Billy Gambrell, a hard to hold halfback, picked his way for two touchdowns and a heretofore ineffective second unit came to life for two more Saturday to spark South Carolina to a 40-6 rout of Virginia.

Gambrell broke loose for a 36-yard touchdown run in the second period, faked his way four yards for another in the fourth, and set up another tally by halfback Sammy Anderson with a pass.

South Carolina's second unit—which had not scored a point in previous games—broke the ice early in the second period with a one-yard touchdown sneak by quarterback Dan Reeves. Early in the second half it came up with another on a 13-yard run by halfback Marty Rosen.

The Gamecocks' final tally came on a 38-yard pass from Reeves, who quarterbacked both units, to John Caskey.

Soccer Frosh Win Again

SWANNANOA (Special)—The Tar Baby soccer squad took advantage of a 5-2 halftime lead to extend its unbeaten streak to six games yesterday with a 6-4 win over previously unbeaten Warren Wilson Junior College team.

Drew Murphy paced the Carolina team, with two goals, giving him nine for the season, while Penn Szittia, Lyons Gray, Cope Wight and Mac Skelly also netted goals for the winners.

Coach Bob DeVoogt said this was his team's best effort to date, against possibly the strongest opponent yet.

Student Body To Elect Class Officers Today

High Court Opens Review Of Sit-In Case

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The Supreme Court yesterday began hearings on a series of Southern sit-in convictions with the ultimate ruling expected to provide a new key decision in the racial integration controversy.

The National Association for the Advancement of Colored People has declared the seven cases from six Southern states the most important since the school desegregation ruling of 1954.

The states involved are North and South Carolina, Maryland, Louisiana, Alabama and Georgia. According to the NAACP, approximately 3,000 Negro students and other "sit in" demonstrators have been sentenced under local and state laws as a result of their activities.

Jack Greenberg, a New York City attorney, initiated the open court arguments on behalf of seven demonstrators arrested at Durham, N. C.

Pressure On Stores

Greenberg said the manager of Kress's store was "coerced" into bringing action by the "custom of the community to segregate and discriminate against Negroes."

On behalf of North Carolina, Ralph Moody, assistant state attorney general, said racial segregation is not a part of the case.

"A person who owns property can exclude the people he wants to exclude for any reason," he said. "The trespass laws don't pick out any class or group."

Justice Byron R. White referred to the case record that showed Negroes and whites were served together at a stand-up counter elsewhere in the store. He asked if this did not indicate "they were allowed to follow custom in some areas" but "they were not coerced" to obey custom in all forms.

Greenberg acknowledged there was no discrimination at the stand-up counter and that mixed service had been commenced at the sit-down counter shortly after the arrests.

No State Law

Questioning by several justices brought out that the state had claimed before the North Carolina Supreme Court that there was no state law requiring segregation.

Council Leaders Support Move

Opening Of Trials To DTH Subject To Amendment Vote

Whether honor council trials will be open to newspaper reporters will be voted on today as a constitutional amendment.

Council trials at the present are closed to reporters unless a defendant asks that it be "open." Honor Council Chairman Walter Dellinger recommended recently that the trials be opened to DTH reporters, who would write stories of the trials excluding names.

Several student leaders in both the Honor Councils and political parties yesterday stated their views on the amendment. Their statements are as follows:

WALTER DELLINGER, CHAIRMAN OF THE MEN'S COUNCIL

"The proposed amendment to open Honor Council trials to two reporters from the student newspaper is the best available answer to the problem of communication between the Honor Councils and the student body.

"The publishing of depersonalized accounts (in which no names will be used) of Council proceedings and decisions will enable every member of the University community to understand and evaluate the standards used by the councils in judging ungentlemanly conduct and dishonorable behavior.

I firmly believe that weekly published news stories of action by the Men's and Women's Councils would prove to be an excellent method of reminding students of their obligation to the Honor System.

"In addition to establishing guarantees as to how an open trial will be conducted, the proposal also retains the right of the student to a 'closed' trial upon his request.

BUZZY STUBBS, ATTORNEY GENERAL:

"In its present form, I am in favor of the amendment. The campus needs to have a greater awareness of the Honor Council's activities and what the council considers a violation of the Honor and Campus codes.

"However, the student himself is in the best position to evaluate whether or not an open trial is in his interest. This bill adequately recognizes these dual needs."

BEV HAYNES, CHAIRMAN OF WOMEN'S COUNCIL:

"I hope that the bill will be passed. I think it would definitely be an improvement for our system. I think this may definitely establish a tradition of open trials and instill more student confidence in the Honor System."

CHARLES COOPER, CHAIRMAN OF THE JUDICIAL COMMITTEE:

"I unqualifiedly support open trials and would urge its passage by the student body in the fall general election in the interest of an open and more democratic judicial system. I do not see why anyone should vote against it in its present form."

MIKE LAWLER, VICE-PRESIDENT OF THE STUDENT BODY AND FORMER HONOR COUNCIL MEMBER:

"I am in favor of the proposed constitutional amendment for the following reasons:

"No matter how good our orientation programs are for freshman and transfers, we cannot expect the student to adopt this ethic of honor unless he is confronted with it more than just in orientation.

"The Honor System is intended to be a public philosophy; consequently, the student not only has the right, but must be presented with the operations and interpretations of Council.

" 'How does the Men's Council define gentlemanly conduct?' 'What does the Men's Council mean when it talks about the corrective nature of its proceedings?'

"The proposed amendment will not only fulfill this responsibility, but also provides adequate protection of individual privacy and for the responsible proceeding of an open trial."

MIKE CHANIN, CHAIRMAN OF THE UP:

"In the open society that the University of North Carolina strives to maintain it is important that all of us as students know the workings of our Honor System not only to be sure that it is a fair and just system but also to see that this is a system that does work.

"It is also necessary that any student who feels that an open trial will infringe upon his personal well being has the right to ask for a closed trial.

"The Constitutional Amendment presented by the Legislature permits both of these situations.

"In addition, the presence of two Tar Heel reporters bound by the Honor Code not to release the defendant's name except by permission guarantees that the proceedings will be reported in a mature manner.."

ROBIN BRITT, CHAIRMAN OF THE STUDENT PARTY:

"The proposed constitutional amendment establishing Open Honor Council trials represents one of the most significant steps forward in the student judiciary on this campus in a number of years.

"(1) Open trials will acquaint students with the proceedings and general operation of the Honor Councils.

"(2) Open trials will encourage a more standard procedure in the conduct of Council meetings.

"(3) The presence of reporters will prove a further guarantee of the rights of the individual and of the administration of justice.

"At the same time the rights of a student will be infringed upon in no way whatsoever since if he so chooses he may request that his trial be closed.

"Consequently, Open Trials would enhance the ettficiency of our Honor System while offering a further guarantee of the rights of students. I am confident that the campus will see the value of Open Trials and vote for the amendment in Tuesday's election."

RUFUS EDMINSTON, FLOOR LEADER OF THE SP:

"I think this amendment gives the student body no real choice and only changes the wording, not the action. I feel that the student body should have had the privilege of choosing among all the alternatives. Yet, this is a step in the right direction. The students should vote for it."

INMAN ALLEN, PESIDENT OF THE STUDENT BODY:

"I think the most significant aspect of this proposed amendment is that the defendant still has the right to decide whether his trial will be open to the DTH."

BOB SPEARMAN, FLOOR LEADER OF THE UP:

"I believe that the proposed amendment, if adopted, will help the student body to more fully understand the workings and philosophy of the Honor System at Carolina. At the same time the amendment provides adequate and needed safeguards for the protection of the individual. I wholeheartedly urge its adoption."

GRANT WHEELER, HONOR COUNCIL MEMBER AND CHAIRMAN OF THE SUMMER SCHOOL HONOR COUNCIL:

"Open trials are in my mind a serious thing. They should be left up to the individual on trial. The purpose of open trials is to help to inform the student body of the Honor System's functions.

"It seems to me to be extremely selfish to inform the student body at the expense of those who are being tried. Open trials deprive a defendant of one of his basic and most important rights."

Dorm Social Fee Hike To Be Decided

The campus referendum on the social fee hike goes before the students in all men's dormitories today.

The purpose of the referendum is to determine student opinion on the proposed raise of $.75. If the referendum is passed, its results will be presented to the administration as proof of the desire of the men's dorms for an increased social fee. The administration will then take action on the matter.

Bruce Welch, president of the IDC, gave four main reasons for the passage of the referendum.

Under the present social fee, according to Welch, the dorms are overdrawing their accounts and are still not able to provide sufficient social life for their occupants.

Welch said that the present social fee was adopted in 1949 and inflation and other factors have made this amount inadequate today.

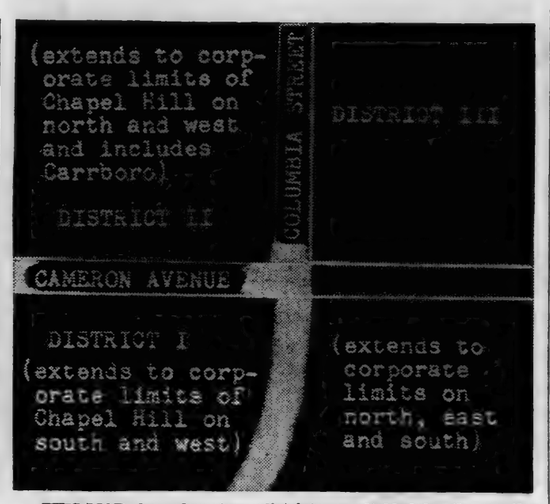
Last year, many dorms had three men to a room. This year with the placing of only two men in most rooms, dorm revenues have been radically reduced, he added.

The IDC President said that if the new dorm social fee is passed, there will be no extra assessments in the future, as have been experienced by Craige and Ehringhaus this year.

Welch said that if the referendum were passed, the hike would go into effect as soon as the administration took such action. He noted, however, that the increased social fee would not be levied this semester, but would probably become effective next semester when it would be tacked onto the dorm room rent bill.

In conclusion Welsh stated, "I'd like to urge each of the men's dormitory residents to vote in favor of the proposed social fee increase in order that they may reap the benefits of an improved and expanded social program."

Both campus political party chairmen have voiced their approval of the issue.



Robin Britt, Student Party chairman said, "Most dorms do not have sufficient funds to present activities necessary for a good dorm program including academic projects and especially social events. Last year a few dorms did not even have the funds to put out a dorm newspaper.

"The problem is acute and the only solution is the proposed raise of the dorm social fees. This is an extremely important issue for the dormitories .

Mike Chanin, University Party chairman noted, "The present $.75 dorm fee was passed in 1949 and it is obvious that inflation and the increase in dorm activities has made this fee inadequate.

In order for a dorm to have a few parties, a dorm newspaper, and floats for the various contests, not to mention intramurals, it is a necessity that this increase be passed. This will double the money available to each dorm and will more than double the activities that can be undertaken. I urge all dorm residents to vote tomorrow, as I will myself, 'Yes' on the IDC referendum to raise social fees."

THIS MAP shows how town districts are divided for the election today. All town residents should vote in the districts in which they live. North is at top of the map.

Voter Regulations Listed By Board

Rules for voting in the General Election today and the location of ballot boxes for the various campus districts were announced yesterday by Polly Hastings, chairman of the Elections Board.

In class elections, a student may vote only for candidates of his own class. However, members of all classes may vote on the open honor council and increased dormitory fees proposals.

ID cards or other suitable identification will be required of each student before he is given a ballot.

Voters must sign a pledge stating that they have not voted previously in this election and that they are voting at the proper polling station. Violations of this pledge will be considered violations of the Honor Code.

All men and women dormitory residents will find poll boxes in their dorms with the following exceptions: Connor men vote in Winston, Emerson men vote in Ruffin, and Kenan women vote in McIver.

Residents of Town Women's District I ma yvote at Gerrard Hall or Graham Memorial.

Residents of Men's Town District I vote at the Naval Armory or the Carolina Inn.

trict III vote at Gerrard Hall or

Residents of Men's Town Dis-Graham Memorial.

Residents of Men's Town District IV vote at Gerrard Hall or the Victory Village housing office.

The following boundaries will determine each District: Men's Town District I is composed of all men town students residing in the area bounded by Columbia St. on the east, Cameron Ave. on the north, and the corporate limits of Chapel Hill on the south and west.

Men's Town District II contains all men living in the area bounded by Cameron Ave. on the south, Columbia St. on the east, and the corporate limits of Chapel Hill on the north and west, and the city of Carrboro.

Men's Town District III contains all men living in the area bounded by Columbia St. on the west, and the Corporate limits of Chapel Hill on the north, south, and east.

Men's Town District IV is all men students residing in the area outside the corporate limits of Chapel Hill and Carrboro.

Brown-Nixon Race Going To Wire

By United Press Int.

Ballots cast by an anticipated 550 million Americans today will go far toward determining the fate of President Kennedy's legislative program in the new Congress. Out of the election also may come the name of the Republican who will oppose Kennedy in the 1964 presidential campaign.

First returns were due early from Hart's Location, the New Hampshire hamlet with the quick count. But it could be 1960 all over again in California where the result of the governor's battle between Richard M. Nixon and Edmund G. Brown may not be known until late Wednesday.

At stake were all 435 seats in the U. S. House of Representatives, 39 U. S. Senate seats, and local offices.

National interest centered on the head-to-head battles between Brown and Nixon in California; Gov. Nelson A. Rockefeller and Robert M. Morgenthau in New York; George Romney and Democratic Gov. John B. Swainson in Michigan, and between the President's brother, Edward M. Kennedy and Republican George Cabot Lodge in the Massachusetts senatorial race.

On election eve, a non-partisan poll showed Brown leading Nixon. Rockefeller was heavily favored over Morgenthau, Republicans had high hopes for a Romney victory, and Democrats were equally high on young Kennedy's chances against Lodge.

In one sense, the year's election was a battle for the House of Representatives. Republicans once talked of winning control of the House but have shied away from such predictions in recent days. They were still favored to register a small House gain, but considerably short of the 44 seats they need to control. The present House line-up is 261 Democrats to 174 Republicans.

The Democrats hold a 64 to 36 majorit yi nthe Senate and the Republicans will be hard put to change that margin. Some Democrats even talked of perhaps picking up a couple of Senate seats, a rarity for the majority party in a non-presidential election year. Of the 39 seats at issue, 21 now are held by Democrats and 18 by Republicans.

Junior Race Is Highlight Of Election

A hard-fought race between wrestler Gordon Appell and basketball player Charles Shaffer, Jr. for the presidency of the Junior class is the highlight of today's fall elections.

Shaffer, chairman of the Student Athletic Council, is running on the University Party ticket. Appell, who serves on both the Student Legislature and the IDC, is the Student Party nominee.

Over 3,000 voters are expected to vote today in the elections. Party leaders on both sides have predicted victory.

In other junior contests, Woody Harrison, SP, treasurer of his sophomore class, will meet Watts Carr, former freshman president, for the vice-presidency. Bonnie Hoyle and Pam Rudy vie for the secretary spot; Anne Eskridge and Gerry Goode are trying for treasurer; and Dianne Hile and Joan Haley contend for social chairman.

Sophomore candidates also include: Vice-president, Kip Carter and Pud Hassell; secretary, Cookie Cochrane and Johnsye Massenburg; treasuprer, Paul Chused and John Schultz; social chairman, Judy Tyson and Dee Johnson.

Freshman hopefuls are, for vice-president, Stewart Kagel and Hap Stewart; secretary, Polly Osborne and Dusty Johnson; treasurer, John Sheldon and Paul Jansen; social chairman, Pam Weddle and Katherine Jones.

Campaign platforms have stressed party activity in promoting both academics and social functions. Combo parties have been promised by all candidates.

Campus Party Heads State Positions Before Election

MIKE CHANIN, UP

The University Party this fall is presenting a slate of experienced and active candidates. Under extreme competion in our convention —competion that produced run-offs in one third of our nominations— we have selected two dorm presidents, two candidates who were elected to class offices last year, and three who were presidents of their high schools last fall. We have not allowed for hand-picked candidates as in the opposite party, where they had eleven out of fifteen chosen by acclamation. This fall we are stressing the fact that our party and candidates represent every area of the campus and every aspect of cmpus llife.

We want to see better social programs for the classes, more people working in class governments, and more emphasis on class academic and residential problems. The University Party is moving upward to more active class leadership and more active class programs. The platforms of our three slates have been presented in the Tar Heel. I urge you to study these platforms; to study the candidates who will be fulfilling these platforms for the University Party; and to study the rational approach to class problems presented by the candidates and the University Party. This year is a crucial year for class government; it must show that it functions actively and that it fulfills the needs of the class. The University Party candidates will make class government work and their platforms, which do fulfill the needs of the classes, will be carried out if they are elected.

Therefore, it is most important that you the voters, are not blinded by irresponsible actions and promises of the political parties, that you judge the candidates on what to do, and on their qualifications, and that you vote next Tuesday. And when you do vote, I am sure that you will have judged the candidates and their platforms and realizing the rational approach of the UP candidates, that you will vote for the University Party this fall.

Robin Britt, SP

Until a few years ago the election of class officers on this campus was little more than a glorified popularity contest. However, recently class offices have begun to make a greater and greater contribution to the campus and are becoming an integral part of Student Government.

Paralleling this rise in importance of class offices has been a healthy development in the election of these positions. The campus has ceased to elect candidates on the basis of popularity and has begun to elect them on their qualifications. In short, students are looking for the real issues that underlie the fall campaign. These are the two points that the Student Party is stressing in this election—issues and qualifications.

(1) First in regard to qualifications, the Student Party candidates have the experience in Student Government necessary to fulfill the progressive ideas outlined in their platforms and to exert effective class leadership. An example in point is our candidate for President of the Junior Class, Gordon Appell. Gordon is now in Student Legislature (he was elected by a record-breaking majority in his district), he is on the Rules Committee of Legislature, he is the representative from his district to the IDC, where he was elected to the IDC Court and in turn elected Clerk of that court. This type of experience is invaluable to a class president who needs to work closely with Student Government.

The University Party candidate for Junior Class President, on the other hand, has been connected with Student Government only through the Carolina Athletic Association. This experience in Student Government means that our candidates will continue the integration of class offices into an even more useful and effective role in Student Government.

(2) In regard to issues, the predominant issue is which slate of candidates will make the greatest contribution to the campus through the fulfillment of their platform promises and through an imaginative, progressive program. Thursday night the Student Party fulfilled another of its campaign promises from last spring with the introduction of a bill in Legislature by Gordon Appell which proposes to buy a Student Government bus to be used for an Ehringhaus-Craige bus service, for trips to Woman's College on weekends, and for other Student Government purposes. This, in addition to the projects mentioned in Thursday's Daily Tar Heel that the Student Party has accomplished this fall, indicates that the candidates selected by the Student Party WILL fulfill their platforms and WILL offer imaginative and progressive leadership.

The campus, then, is now choosing its class officers on the basis of qualifications and issues. On this prime basis, as on every other basis, the scales weigh heavily in favor of the Student Party candidates.

WC To Decide NSA Position

A referendum against continuing W.C.'s membership in NSA may be presented to the Woman's College student body in the next two weeks.

Virginia Harmon, W.C.'s representative to the National Student Congress this summer, said the referendum was being backed by the speaker of the student legislature and last year's editor of the "Carolinian," W.C.'s weekly newspaper.

Carol Fury, president of the Student Government, indicated Sunday night, that she was in favor of postponing the referendum until the student body had had enough time to discuss it.

A group of students from UNC may go to W.C. to discuss NSA's activities at Carolina.

A panel discussion with Mike Lawler, student body vice president and Harry Delung, NSA co-ordinator, may also take place depending on the date set for the referendum.

Open Trials Mean Honor

Although it does not seem necessary for students found guilty of honor code offenses to wear a scarlet letter, a little bit of that dubious distinction which they earn by being violators of the code would seem to go a long way toward heightening their understanding of just what their actions mean and just what this ambiguous concept "student honor" means to the campus at large.

As the situation now stands, one who commits an honor council offense becomes automatically entitled to all manner of anonymity, that is, to the extent that no other student has the right to know that said individual is a violator of the code. The only people who are cognizant of a student's dishonesty are those who tried and found him guilty.

Certainly, we would not advocate the "scarlet letter," but we fail to see why the campus seems to object to having the truth known by and about every individual. Indeed, in this matter of truth, whether or not a person violates a particular code should be but a part of the total, the whole knowledge of one's person, and as such, if the whole truth were the concern, would not receive the inordinate amount of attention which we seem to place on it when it is isolated.

There are two, among other, pertinent reasons for a more "open" honor system on this campus, and these two, which we would like to present as paramount, find, understandably enough, their focal points in the concept of "purpose." That is,what is the purpose of an honor system ?

Is the honor system only concerned with the cessation of student cheating, and failing that, with the punishment of student cheaters? No. But by the same token, the honor system should and does address itself to this problem. An honor system would have, ideally, no cheating; and an honor system would attempt, realistically, to curb cheating.

Well then, it would seem that if an individual were to suffer the self-acquired notoriety of being a cheater—or more to the point of "preventive honor"—if he were to labor under the threat of being known on the campus as "one who cheated," he would be less apt to cheat.

But as the system now works, if a man is found guilty, no one knows outside of the Honor Council. Well, this is a pretty big campus, and you go around quite a lot without ever running into a member of the Council, and most of your business on campus does not concern the Council.

So, in effect, "nobody" knows that you cheat (or just once cheated), and apparently nobody cares.

But they should. For two reasons at least. First, every student should be concerned with eliminating cheating on this campus. And if this can only be accomplished by embarrassing publicly those who do cheat, well then, in search of honesty, cheaters should be embarrassed.

The second reason brings us to consideration of that same old topic, "purpose." If the honor system does not think primarily in terms of eliminating cheating through punihment of cheaters, then consider as a possible purpose for the existence of an honor system "the teaching of Honor."

Well, if we are to learn that Honor is a worthwhile ideal, and that Honor is worthy of respect, we might be most effectively taught this by seeing that dishonor will not go unnoticed, by learning that the campus as a whole is concerned with acts of cheating.

If we were to be forced, by mere truth, to realize our transgressions —to encounter more regularly, individuals who knew that we had broken the code—would we not be more sensitive to what Honor means? Would we not at least feel more strongly what it means to break an honor code? After all, it does mean something. Doesn't it?

We think so. And we believe that the student body thinks so also. That is why an "open" honor system will work on this campus. That is why we advocate open trials. (CW)

Pray For Brown

One of the lowest characters who ever crawled up out of the gutter to run for public office will put his political future on the line in California today. Without further preparation, we introduce Richard Milhous Nixon, the Almost-President, husband of mink-coatless Pat, and friend of Murray Chotiner, Joe McCarthy and Checkers.

Until recently we assumed Nixon had exhausted his store of sneaky political tricks in his many previous smear-smeared campaigns. Particularly, it was difficult to imagine how the former vice-president could use his familiar Red-baiting tactics against a governor who has no part in national policy and therefore cannot be accused of appeasing the Communists.

But we understand Nixon's resourcefulness. His supporters have faked the ultimate fake — they got hold of a picture of Gov. Pat Brown bowing to a young Laotian visitor, and merged it with a picture of Premier Khrushchev. The picture then showed Nixon's opponent bowing to the Russian boss. Brilliant. Simply fantastic — so shrewd — and so dirty . . .

Last night Nixon was slated to go on statewide television for a last-minute appeal to the voters. He probably sat there before the television cameras, and cried a little, and told about his poor wife's cloth coat and his little dog and his daughters and ended with a plea to "Help find employment for this needy man. Sole qualifications — unscrupulous."

Those who wish to take a step back to honest and ethical politics in the United States, those who wish to be rid of the Almost-President, should pray tonight for stodgy little Pat Brown, a man who makes the rare mistake of saying what he believes and standing by it. (JC)

"What Was All The Excitement About One More Nuclear Weapons Base?"

Use Press As Weapon In War?

In his rash statement that "news flowing from actions taken by the government is part of weaponry" during cold war crises, Assistant Defense Secretary Arthur Sylvester has raised a crucial issue in the cold war itself. Indeed, this is exactly the theory of public information — hence of political responsibility — entertained in Red Square, Moscow.

Dictatorial oligarchies, whose shenanigans could scarely survive the searching light of a free press, always chuckle over the deference democratic officials pay to "freedom of the press."

"Why not," they argue in so many words, "do as we do—regard the press as an instrument of government policy and tune it to tell the people what we think they should know, when we think they should know it?" In short, why not use the press as a WEAPON? And so we find the assistant secretary of defense suggesting that the U. S., in effect, fight fire with fire.

Of course, American newspapers sympathize with high officials plagued by "leaks" that often debilitate carefully-planned maneuvers. For instance, if American headlines had trumpeted to the world beforehand that President Kennedy would soon quarantine Cuba, the bite would have been dulled, its surprise annulled. So the American press has traditionally recognized the occasional need for secrecy, particularly in shooting wars when the Bill of Rights would be worthless without survival.

Beginning with this latently dangerous premise, however, it is possible for government officials to reach insupportable conclusions. The Kennedy Administration's recent highhandedness with the press proves it, and one insupportable conclusion is that of Mr. Sylvester, who maintains that the flow of news in moments of crisis should be regulated, like the jet of water from a hose, so that the American press "speaks with one voice to our adversary."

Heaven forbid, in the first place, that the press should "speak in one voice" on any topic, at any time, to anyone—even an adversary. From such frightening uniformity, Mr. Sylvester, deliver us.

The truth is that the assistant defense secretary, with amiably patriotic intentions, has quite overlooked the distinction between secrecy and manipulation. The practice of the Eisenhower Administration was excessive and sometimes foolish secrecy. The more dangerous practice now urged upon us by the Kennedy Administration is manipulation.

There is a difference. Secrecy, discreetly used, is defensible—though never desirable if government is to be by consent of the governed. Manipulation—use of the press as "weaponry"—is never defensible, in any conceivable circumstances.

The fundamental right of the people to know what their elected officials are doing is not a ball of wax to be sculpted by some arrogant bureaucrat, however efficient or patriotic. This is an approach to dissemination of news, moreover, that is bound to boomerang. For the administration will find that every attempt to dupe the press, to use it as an instrument of policy, will be repaid with interest. And who knows but that such repayment will take the form of a disastrous leak in moments of crisis

That is why Mr. Sylvester's philosophy of the press as "weaponry" is not only contrary to the traditions of a free press, it is also incredibly short-sighted.

Dorm Raise Backed, Rightists Hit

Social Programs Must Be Larger

To the Editors:

Every resident of every men's dormitory on campus pays a social fee of 75 cents when he pays his room rent. This fee automatically goes into a dormitory social fund which is used to finance the activities of each dormitory.

It is reasonable that such a fee should exist; this is the only way to insure total participation in dorm activities so far as expense goes. It is reasonable also that this fee should be collected with the room rent; this guarantees collection of the fees.

We wonder, though, whether this fee is now fulfilling the purpose for which it was created. A few facts will help us decide.

This fee was set at $.75 per resident per semester in 1949. It was probably quite edequate then, but since then costs have risen steadily. So, right now the fee, is far from adequate.

At present any dormitory—except Ehringhaus and Craige—which has one big party with a combo and all that goes with it would afterwards be bankrupt or nearly so. And one such party per semester will not suffice as a dorm's total activities program.

A dorm must have funds to participate in the Homecoming Queen Contest, the Yack Queen Contest, the UMOC Contest, the Homecoming Display Contest and the Beat Dook Parade Float Contest.

A dorm must also have funds to improve the physical conditions under which the residents live. They need table tennis equipment and other such supplies for intra-dorm competitions and individual recreation. They need a TV set which works reasonably well and which they can get repaired at their own expense if that's necessary to insure good workmanship. The present arrangement with Dollar TV leaves much to be desired.)

Finally, a dorm must have funds to provide a responsibly edited newspaper which will serve as a means for communicating with residents on dormitory activities and campus issues.

And any active, spirited dormitory wants to compete in all the contests, wants the recreational facilities and wants a dorm newspaper.

But, at present costs, the social funds can support no more than a portion of these needs.

Some figures from dormitory financial accounts will add further support to our conclusion.

Last spring Joyner dorm was named winner of the Best Dorm on Campus and was presented a cash award of $100 for its showing. So, they had this money in addition to their usual social fund. By the end of May they had less than $80.

At the end of the Spring Semester of 1962 six dorms had less than $20 remaining in their social funds. Four of these dorms had less than $10 and one had a deficit of almost $10.

Likewise, at the end of the Spring Semester of 1961, eleven dorms had less than $20 remaining in their social funds. Nine of these dorms had less than $5 and two of them had deficits.

It seems, then, that present social funds are being well drained and, yet, the dorms don't have near the program they'd like to have.

Also to be considered here is the fact that the figure above included many dormitories which had 3-men rooms. This means, of course, that these dormitories had more residents and, therefore, larger social funds than is the case now that most of these 3-men rooms have been eliminated.

We pose our question: Is the present social fee fulfilling its purpose? Evidently not.

Since this is the case, it seems that these fees should be increased.

Ehringhaus has already taken a step in that direction. The entire dorm voted to have each resident contribute an extra dollar to the fund in order to have an expanded activities program.

Last spring the IDC urged increasing the fees to $1.50 per resident per semester. This fall, they will submit the idea to the residents of the dorms in a referendum on Nov. 6.

If approved in the referendum, the increases will become effective next semester, according to William Long, dean of men. In other words, a positive vote will bring some tangible results on this issue this year.

To sum up, then, the dorm social fees should be increased and they will be — if the referendum passes.

So, vote YES in the dorm referendum today.

Mitchener Backs Appell

To the Editors,

The Class of '64 would do well to elect Gordon Appell Class President Tuesday! Throughout this years at Carolina, Gordon has proven himself to be not only one who is 'academically' concerned with the problems of the student community, but, more importantly, he has also shown himself to be one who quickly grasps he essential 'issues' of a situation and begins promptly and willingly to work for sound and effective solutions to student problems.

Nowhere has his ability and willingness to work been more effectively shown than in his work as IDC Representative from Joyner on the Men's Interdormitory Council, particularly as a member of the IDC Court and now as Court Clerk. Of the many problems facing Student Governmnet, I dare say few require more time or greater effort than do those concerned with handling dormitory affairs. The competence Gordon has shown in accepting his responsibilities in the IDC assures me that he will do a fine job for the Junior Class as its President!

Council's Scribe Urges Open Trials

To the Editors:

The so-called "open trials" bill is now before the student body in the form of a constitutional amendment. It is essentially a moderate bill which prescribes the rules under which an open trial may be conducted.

The presence of TAR HEEL reporters is permitted only if the defendant so desires, and a trial is in no sense "open to the public" for casual inspection. The identity of the defendant is protected by law whether the trial is covered by TAR HEEL reporters or not.

I strongly urge the passage of this amendment; it has the endorsement of the legislature, the Men's Council, and the Women's Council.

Name-Taking Not By Super-Patriot

To the Editors:

When I was a small child in elementary school, my classmates and I had a childish fear of having our names sent to the principal. This is a fear which exists among the few remaining primitive tribes in the world today. To a person who believes in black magic it is a terrible thing to allow an enemy to gain possession of one's name, locks of hair, or fingernails. I had thought that this supersition had disappeared from the adult mind with the march of civilization, but I have just read a letter in the DTH stating that name-taking can be harmful.

As I was present when the name-taking in question occurred, I think a few more facts should be brought to light. The two students whose names were taken happened to be standing outside of Hill Hall on the night that Mr. Levchenko of the Russian Embassy spoke on disarmament. Those of us who heard him speak realize his honestly and sincerity in stating his desire for peace. The two students, however, did not go in to hear what Mr. Levchenko had to say, but rather waited outside with signs bearing statements such as "Russian go home!" The student who took their names was not a super patriot. He and I do have a certain sense of pride in our nation and a feeling that peace can better be brought about through courteous exchanges of opinion. The names are not to be turned over to the F.B.I., the principal, or a witch doctor; we merely wanted to know who it was that believed we could bring about peace by insulting our guests.

DTH Misquoted Student On Cuba

To the Editors:

I would like to call yours and the attention of the campus to a very regrettable bit of behavior by one of your staff. I refer to the article which covered the meeting of the Di-Phi on October 23, 1962, and which appeared in the DAILY TAR Heel on Oct. 26, 1962.

The point which I would like to make is that while the quotation did in fact say what I implied in my talk, there were words employed which I did not use, there were statements which I did not make, and there was a very important point which I did not even to imply. I am sure that you can understand my extreme frustration on this matter.

I think that is such things as this which tend to cause hostility towards the press, because it happens too often. For tunately it does not happen often in our paper. I remain confused on exactly how it happens, but I am sure the mistakes were innocent ones.

For obvious personal reasons, I would greatly appreciate it if you would print this letter in the DAILY TAR HEEL as soon as possible.

Dick's Guttersnipe Tactics

From Greensboro Daily News

As Richard Nixon, now back home in the briar patch, faces his seventh (and maybe his last)crisis, strange things are happening—strange, even for a Nixon campaign in California.

California courts have now granted at least three restraining orders against dirty campaign literature against the incumbent Gov. Pat Brown, the "amiable Babbitt" who is Nixon's opponent.

Murray Chotiner, Nixon's old specialist at the sly innuendo, is hard at work again. This week Los Angeles Superior Court Judge Kenneth Chantry restrained from distribution a four-page anti-Brown pamphlet devised by Karl Prussion, one of Nixon's campaigners. Chotiner was named in the suit.

The pamphlet seeks to link the California Democrat Clubs to "softness on Communism" (where have we heard that before?)—then to show Brown as an enthusiast over the clubs. One pamphlet photo purports to show Governor Brown applauding the C. D. C.'s. Actually, the photo was taken of Brown as he applauded a little girl stricken with polio. For Nixon campaign purposes, the little girl was lopped off.

Another photo, as Drew Pearson reports, pretends to show Brown saluting Khrushchev in the obsequious Oriental manner. Originally, that photo was taken of Brown saluting a Laotian. The Laotian was sliced off, Khruschev substituted.

People in more subdued parts of the country have long since come to realize that California politics excels all others of the no-holds-barred school. But there are limits. Nixon's California underground has passed those limits, and it simply defies common sense to suppose that Nixon knows nothing of the gutter literature being sent out against his opponent.

Indeed whenever Mr. Nixon has entered a campaign—with the possible exception of 1960, which he lost—the guttersnipe tactics have not been behind-hand in appearing. They are almost predictable.

This, then, is the man who sought the highest office in the land and missed it by a few-score thousand ballots. Will he never grow up?

Hal Holbrook To Appear As Mark Twain

When Hal Holbrook brings his uncanny recreation of Mark Twain to the stage of Memorial Hall Wednesday night at 8, UNC students will be seeing what has emerged as one of the perenially popular attractions on the American concert scene.

"The stage is faded Daguerreotype," reported Time Magazine in its review of "Mark Twain Tonight!", "with a high- old-fashioned lectern, a desk with a topply mound of books and a cut-glass pitcher of water, a McKinley-era chair. Into this setting shuffles the spry, white-maned humorist in the white suit. Involuntary tremors ripple the stiffened fingers, the lower jaw nibbles spasmodically at wisps of tobacco-stained mustache, the shoulders twitch like marionettes in the invisible hands of time. But a pagan glint of eye suggests that this is a life less spent than well spent. Then the voice, cracked but not ruined, speaks, and the evening begins showering comic sparks."

Holbrook spends three-and-one-half-hours in a makeup session each time "Mark Twain Tonight!" is presented.

This special GM feature is free to all UNC students upon presentation of their I.D. card.

UNC Booters Blast Belmont Abbey, 6-1

Reston Scores Two In Fifth Victory

By JOEL BULKLEY

Jim Reston and Bill Haywood scored two goals apiece yesterday to provide Carolina's varsity soccermen with a 6-1 decision over a young Belmont Abbey team.

This victory, the booters' fifth straight at Fetzer Field, boosted their overall record to 5-1.

Reston accounted for the first Tar Heel score with four minutes gone in the opening quarter when he headed a pass from right wing Pete Blaket into the nets.

Left inside Haywood added two goals within two minutes of each other in the second period. The first came at 9:35 when he booted a rebound shot past the Crusader goalie and the final one, his sixth of the season, came on a head-ball.

Carolina Co-Captain Bob Kepner broke into the UNC scoring column for the first time this year with a goal from his left wing spot after six minutes of play in the third quarter.

Halfback Art Prosser tallied Belmont's lone score early in the same quarter, making the score 4-1.

Reston added his 12th goal two minutes later. The high scoring center forward needs only four more goals to tie the Carolina individual season scoring record of 16, set in 1959 by John Ghanin.

Reserve left wing Paul Jolis added Carolina's sixth score of the chilly afternoon late in the last period.

The varsity journeys to Raleigh Wednesday for another game with N. C. State. Earlier this year the blue shirts vanquished State, 9-1.

Northwestern Remains 1st

NEW YORK (UPI) — Northwestern, which won a squeaker from Indiana Saturday to remain undefeated, led the United Press International major college football ratings Monday for the second week in a row while Southern California closed in on runnerup Alabama.

Missouri, Wisconsin and Minnesota were the week's newcomers to the top 10 group in the ratings of the 35 leading coaches who compromise the UPI board.

This week's first five teams were unchanged from last week, Mississippi and Texas filling the No. 4 and No. 5 spots. Missouri was sixth, followed in order by Wisconsin, Arkansas, Minnesota and Louisiana State.

Northwestern, with a 6-0 record, attracted 19 of the 35 firstplace votes cast by the coaches, while Alabama had 7, Southern California 4 and Mississippi 5.

CAR-O-LINES

UNC Problems: Busses, Death Valley

By BOB QUINCY

They call Clemson College's football pasture the Valley of Death. Well, North Carolina's cup runneth over—with problems.

Most distracting was arrival at the Spartanburg-Greenville airport, which found Jim Hickey and his Tar Heels waiting for more than an hour for transportaton to their workout field on Friday.

Seems those two hospitable cities have built a delightful, modernistic airport, whch is in keeping wth the tmes. No one told the bus drivers. The ymotored to the old strip, which is used only Kamakaze pilots.

* * *

ANGEL FACES—The layover did have it nice side. Shortly after the Tar Heels arrived came word that the famed Blue Angels of the Navy, stunt pilots of the rarest nerve and percision, were slated to land for an air show over the weekend.

So with 45 Tar Heel warriors cheering them on, the Angels swooped low and made passes at the airport that would have made the wildest lass blush. The Angels don't bust signals. If they do, they suddenly become real angels.

* * *

YANKEE ACE—Down Clemson way they wave the Confederate flag with a vigor befitting the Old South. But the press box during the game, which Clemson took from North Carolina, 17-6, the talk favored the Yanks.

Whitey Ford, who toils on the mound for the World Champion New York Yankees, was a special guest. He was witnessing his first collegiate football game.

"Me," said Whitey, "I'm a Giant fan. I mean the New York football Giants."

For is famous for his pickoffs. He seemed content to watch kickoffs.

* * *

Ronnie is one of the nation's finest kickoff return artists. A kickoff is one of the most hazardous plays i nany sports contest. It's survival of the fittest.

Jackson took the kickoff after Clemson's field goal in the fourth period and headed upfield. His blocking dissolved — and Ronnie, running like a rabbit in a forest fire, galloped full speed into the charge of a rhino named Dave Hynes, Clemson's gigantic 235-pound tackle.

The impact made the leaves flutter in Georgia and Tennessee. Tackle Hynes got up, wel satisfied with his maneuver. Poor Ronnie had to be helped off the field, having acquired a seriously bruised hip.

The situation recaled a similar collision back in the 1940's. LSU had a wonderful back named Al Dark. He ran into a bull named Dick Huffman in a game against the University of Tennessee. It ended Al's football career.

Dark, incidentay, is now known as the National League's most successful manager—with the San Francisco Giants. Huffman later was an All-League tackle in the pro football canyon.

WHATTA PASS — Those zebras who cal infractions during football games are honest men. It would take a fool to challenge that.

It reminds me of a famous sports figure who in boxing was known as "The Honest Brakeman." So tabbed because he never stole a box car.

Anyway, the Tar Heelsc are learning something new every week. It seems to be possible for one's opponent to have a receiver in the stands.

In the fourth quarter, Jim Anderson, the capable Clemson quarterback, rolled out to his right, seeking a receiver for his passing arm. In hot pursuit were two Carolina linemen.

Anderson approached the sidelines, obviously trapped. He wound up and threw with all his might. The ball barely misse da youngster in the stands who made a great effort to capture the ball, which was a good 15 yards from the in-bounds stripe.

Had Anderson been trying to intentionally ground the ball, it would have cost him a down and a penalty. Since he obviously was not—which was the official interpretation—the next play resulted in a field goal for the Tigers. It took Carolina out of the game.

Anderson's toss might be compared to Ford, the Yank southpaw, tossing one over the grandstand and the umpire caling a strike on the batter.

READY TO GO—The Tar Heels are now 2-5 on the record, but they appear dedicated to make the final three, beginning with Virginia this weekend, fit the victory column.

Coach Jim Hickey had special praise for Tackle Vic Esposito after the Clemson game. Said Hickey: "Nobody moved Vic off the line of scrimmage. He commanded his spot up front."

Fullback Ken Wiliard skillfully ripped off 113 yards ande one touchdown, another good weekend in a bid for "Sophmore of the Year" honors in the Atlantic Coast Conference.

Jonas Combo Shines In Playoffs

Phi Delta Theta got off to a flying start in the first round of the Fraternity Blue playoffs yesterday with an easy win over Delta Sig, 24-7.

Dick Jonas and Charlie Jonas scored points as easy as their father, Congressman Charles Raper Jonas, would like to score votes in today's elections. Dick racked up two touchdowns and Charlie scored one. Tom Oliver scored the other Phi Delt TD.

Frank Potter's touchdown and Stedman Johnson's extra point kept the business fraternity in the contest for the first half. But the Phi Delts added another six points in the final period to sink the Delta Sigs.

In other fraternity and dormitory action, Phi Gamma Delta topped Sigma Phi Epsilon, 25-0, the Manly Riverrates took Joyner, 31-6, and the Ruffin Hosers beat Avery's Rooters, 30-0.

In intramural volleyball action, Mangum's Migs took the Ehringhaus Edsels, 2-1, the Winston Wildcats topped the Craige Cruisers, 2-0, Old West whitewashed the Aycock Aardwolves, 2-0, and the Grossmen from Everett upended the Winston Wiseguys, 2-0.

'Open Trials' Amendment Passes; Dorm Social Fee Raise Supported

Ugly? YIPE!!

"They won't kick sand in MY face any more!" says talented Richard Gins, who won for the TEPs the coveted "Ugliest Man on Campus" award. Gins, shown here with his sunny side up, collected a winning $105 for the APO-sponsored HOPE charity project.

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

Ugly Man Doesn't Deserve Title (?)

TEP's "Mature Nail" (Richard Gins), officially the ugliest man on campus, thinks he definitely does not deserve the title.

"There are at least 5,000 boys as ugly, not counting at least a couple thousand girls who could win the ugly contest, by a landslide," the modest winner remarked.

Gins finished way out in front with $105.87. SAE's "Troll" (Bill Shaffer) was second with $61.96.

"Jungle Jim" (Dave Lobdell), last year's ugly man, finished in third place with $59.91. He was sponsored by Mangum Dorm.

The contest, sponsored by APO, service fraternity, brought in $322 for Project HOPE.

Gins is a junior political science major from Silver Springs, Md. After graduation, he plans to attend law school.

"I'm not the ugliest man," he confidently stated. "It just so happens that the people thinking I'm ugliest happen to have the most money."

Gins has his own theory about the contest. "This thing runs in cycles," he said. "One year, such as last year, Jungle Jim won. And everyone knows that Jungle Jim is ugly as ..... This year, as you know, a good-looking person won."

Jungle Jim (Dave Lobdell) was not available for comment.

Is Gins glad he won? "Indifferent," he said. "After I got the nomination, I wasn't going to hear the end of it anyway, so I thought I might as well win it."

Gins had a committee working for him which collected $85 the last day of the contest.

The "Mature Nail" as winner is now entitled to a date with a campus beauty. Is he looking forward to it? "Darn right I am." His date has not yet been announced.

"By the way," he concluded, "my picture doesn't do too much for me."

UN Censures South Africa For Racism

UNITED NATIONS, N. Y. (UPI)—The General Assembly Tuesday censured South Africa for racial discrimination and asked members to isolate that country from the world community.

The General Assembly also requested the Security Council—the only U. N. organ authorized to mete out punishment—to apply sanctions and start expulsion proceedings if the white minority government maintains apartheid.

It was the first time in U. N. history that the General Assembly moved to outlaw a member. In 1946 the organization asked members to shun Franco Spain, but Spain was not a member of the world organization at that time.

The General Assembly voted 67 to 16, with 23 abstentions, for an Afro-Asian measure to:

—Brand South Africa's racial policies a threat to peace.

—Request U. N. members "separately or collectively" to break diplomatic relations with Pretoria, close harbors and airports to South African goods, and embargo shipments to that country, particularly arms.

—Establish a special committee to pursue this objective.

—Request the Security Council to "take appropriate measures, including sanctions," to force South Africa to abandon apartheid and, "if necessary, to consider action under Article 6 of the charter"—which provides for expulsion of a U. N. member that "persistently violates" the principles of the charter.

The decision was taken over the objections of the United States, United Kingdom and their Allies, who argued that sanctions will prove unworkable and that expulsion could lead to the breakup of the United Nations.

Infirmary

Interviews

Interviews will be held today for two delegates to the Connaissance Conference at The University of Pennsylvania on November 9-10. President Inman Allen will interview between 3 and 5:30 p.m.

Chess Club

Any Chess Club member unable to attend tonight is advised to play his third round game before next Monday and give Ron Simpson the result.

9 Kids, 4 Women, 5 Men Needed For 'Miracle Worker'

Try-outs for the coming in-the-round production of William Gibson's "The Miracle Worker" begin Sunday in Memorial Hall. Roles are available for five men, four women, and nine children. These include a Negro man, a Negro woman, and a Negro boy and girl.

Scripts for the play are available for reading before the tryouts and may be checked out from the information desk of Graham Memorial. Tryouts will be held in Memorial Hall Sunday, Nov. 11, at 2:00 p.m. and Monday, Nov. 12, at 7:00 p.m. Performance dates are December 14, 15, and 16.

The production will be staged by Wesley Van Tassel and sets will be designed by Harry Callahan, both graduate students in the Department of Dramatic Art. The play will be sponsored jointly by Petite Dramatique and The Student Theatre Workshop.

An in-the-round theatre will be created on the stage of Memorial Hall. Students interested in working at this particular kind of staging are invited to contact the director or designer for technical assignments.

Noted Editor Hits Gov't For 'Stupid Censorship'

By JOHN GOINS

Sam Ragan, Executive Editor of the Raleigh News and Observer, Monday night in Howell Hall called government secrecy "stupid censorship."

"To make sense out of current world insanity — and there is no other way to describe our apparent intent to incinerate ourselves—is no easy task," Ragan said. "It is made no easier by the stupid censorship and manipulation of news in our centers of government."

Ragan, who has been elected president of the Associated Press Executive Editor's Association, spoke to the Carolina Press Club on "Reading, Writing, and Reporting."

In speaking of governmental secrecy, Ragan said that "The Woodrow Wilson policy of 'open covenant openly arrived at' and 'pitiless publicity' of all aspects of public life are still the best guides for governments and newspapers."

Ragan said that when he had tried to get pictures of the Cuban missile sites, which President Kennedy boasted of possessing (they had actually been shown at a press conference), he was given the "run-around" by Washington diplomats. He said that the pictures were finally released through the London embassy.

The speaker cited the defense department as being the greatest offender of withholding information, but also included the United States Congress in his condemnation. He charged the reporter with the duty of breaking down "the barriers of secrecy" in Washington.

Turning his attention to modern newspaper writing, Ragan said that reporters should strive for the clarity achieved by the four Gospel writers. "No reporter can improve on the lead 'In the beginning . . . '"

Ragan defined journalism as "literature in a hurry," and urged reporters to stick to the two main rules of journalism, accuracy and clearness.

Asked if he thought that television could ever replace the newspaper as a source of news, Ragan said that television can never challenge the newspapers because television cameras cannot go behind the scenes and get the story that a reporter can discover.

JOBS AVAILABLE ABROAD

Additional American college students may now be eligible for European travel grants and cash scholarships offered by the American Student Information Service.

ASIS now plans to boost such grants from an original 1000 to 1500 recipients. Qualified groups and individuals could receive up to $175 through the offer.

ASIS has more than 3,000 jobs available throughout Europe. Examples of jobs are life-guarding and waiting on tables at Swiss resorts, camp counseling at French children's camps — some of which are in the Paris area, farm and construction work at international student work camps on the Spanish Costa Brava, in England's 'Robin Hood' country and on Israeli Kibbutsim near the Sea of Galilee, teaching English to children of Finland's leading families, working at a Swedish seaside resort, on a farm in Norway, and at any number of high-paying factory or construction jobs throughout West Germany. Wages range from $190 a month for the highest paying positions in Germany to only room and board in Spain.

The jobs are offered in conjunction with all-inclusive 6 to 24 day land tour arrangements costing from $150 to $799. Although ASIS offers complete arrangements with a round-trip scheduled jet flight, students are free to make their own traval arrangements. ASIS expects that many students participating in college charter flights will also want summer jobs in Europe.

ASIS, the only organization offering summer jobs in Europe to American college students on a large scale, has placed thousands of students in eleven European countries during the past five years.

For a complete 20 page Prospectus and a European Job Application students may contact either the Director of the Student Union, the Placement Officer, or may write directly to:

India Repels Small Chinese Red Attack

NEW DELHI (UPI)—India announced Tuesday it had driven back two small Chinese Communist attacks on the eastern end of the Sino-Indian frontier but it warned of a major Red buildup menacing the Chusul air base in Ladakh at the western end of the border.

Chusul, used by the Indian Air Force to supply its troops fighting in the Ladakh area of Kashmir, is 160 miles south of Karakoram pass where the Indians evacuated their main base without firing a shot. The twin actions increased the invasion threat to Kashmir.

On the political front the government named a 30-man national defense council which included four retired military commanders and the demoted Defense Minister V. K. Krishna Menon.

Eighteen of the 24 members of the executive committee of Nehru's Congress party's parliamentary group Tuesday signed a letter and sent it to Prime Minister Jawaharlal Nehru demanding that Krishna Menon be persuaded to resign. Nehru's decision is expected to be known by Wednesday.

Krishna Menon took note of the increasing reports that his political days were numbered when he told a rally of 5,000 persons in Old Delhi today: "Whether I am a member of the government or parliment or running a canteen I will contribute my mite to the country's war efforts."

The meeting was guarded by police with batons and a number of plainclothes men in view of reports Krishna Menon's critics planned hostile demonstrations. None broke out.

"There is no question of negotiations with the Chinese on the basis of their keeping what they have gained by aggression," he said.

Peiping radio accused Indian military forces Tuesday of new air and ground "provocations" along the disputed border and called India's decisions to close two branches of the Bank of China a "grave and preposterous persecution."

Both Peiping and New Delhi reported fighting in the Walong area of the front. Walong is 14 miles south of the McMahon line at its eastern end and near the border of Burma. Peiping said the Indians had been shelling Chinese positions continuously since Oct. 28.

The Indian Defense ministry said the Indians repulsed two Chinese Communist attacks in the Subansiri division, 10 to 12 miles below the McMahon line near Walong which guards the eastern approaches to the Assam Valley. A spokesman said Indian patrols inflicted casualties on the Chinese without loss to themselves.

Freshman Results To Be Challenged

LATE RESULTS

A DTH press time last night, the following results in North Carolina and national general elections were available: The proposed Court Reform amendment for N. C. appeared to have passed. Republicans George Romney of Michigan and Nelson Rockefeller of New York, both possible presidential candidates in 1964, were elected governors of their states. President Kennedy's younger brother Ted appeared to have won his brother's former senate seat from Massachusetts. In Pennsylvania, Republican William Scranton appeared to have ended Dmocratic control of the Penn. state house with a victory over Democrat Richard Dillworth. There was no word available on the results of Richard M. Nixon's bid for the California governorship against incumbent Pat Brown.

A Constitutional amendment establishing "open trials" for the Honor Councils and the IDC Dormitory Referendum were both passed by substantial majorities in the campus elections yesterday.

The unofficial returns on the "Open Trials" amendment were 1,354 in favor and 710 opposed to the amendment. The issue passed in every polling place with the exception of Stacy dormitory.

All dorms reporting returns on the IDC Dormitory Referendum to increase social fees in men's dorms by $.75 per man per semester voted for the proposal. The vote, according to John Mitchener, IDC Presidential Assistant, passed, 1,336 to 608. Present plans call for the increase to go into effect for the Spring Semester of this year, Mitchener said.

In the class elections and Honor Council returns, only a few final returns were reported at press time, and there have been reports that at least one of the elections wil be contested on a technicality.

Unofficial returns showed that Earl Johnson won the presidency of the Freshman Class over Jack Harrell (SP). An independent candidate named O'Quinn got forty-six votes, but may have been disqualified for not turning in an expense account.

Robin Britt, SP chairman, said that the election would definitely be contested due to O'Quinn's entrance in the race.

No other class election finals were in at press time, but it appeard that Charlie Shaffer (UP) was leading SP candidate Gordon Appell for Junior Class President.

The final returns for Sophomore Class were not yet in, but Harrison Merrill (UP) and Bil Aycock (SP) were only a few votes aptrt, according to unofficial reports.

Final returns for Honor Council seats in four districts reported were as follows:

Women's Judicial District I; Lefled and Deal won. Women's JD IV; Dial won.

Men's Judicial District III; Peterson and Bensch won. Me'ns JD IV; Wales, Boxley, Simpson won.

SSL

There will be a meeting of UNC's State Student Legislature delegation at 3 p.m. today in the TV room of Graham Memorial.

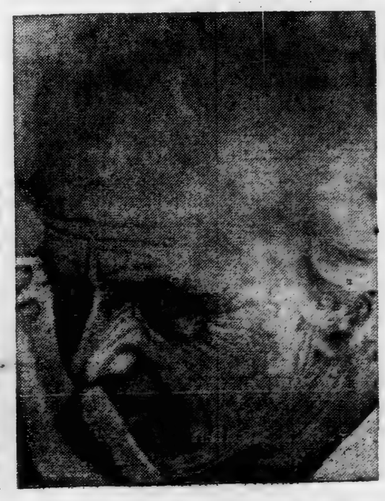
IDC

IDC will meet tonight at 6:30 p.m. on the fourth floor of New East.

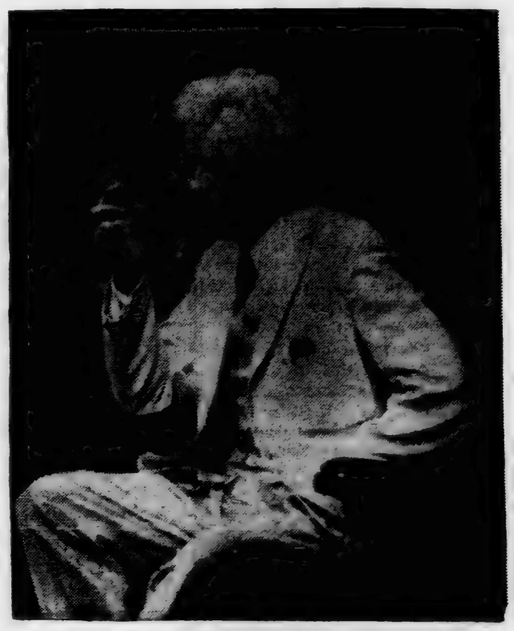
Broken Contract Will Place Band On SG 'Blacklist'

The Campus Entertainment Board is instituting a campaign to "ban" all combos which break contracts with University organizations by failing to show up at social functions. Letters are being sent to campus organizations concerning the Entertainment Board's proposal.

The Board proposes to "blacklist" all combos that fail to observe their contracts. According to the procedure set up by the Board, any fraternity or other campus organization which has engaged a band that fails to show up should contact Phil Smith (968-9062) or Sam Blumberg (942-6032), members of the board. A monthly list of the offenders would be issued to campus organizations which sponsor social events.



The offenders would then be "banned" from playing on the Carolina campus for an arbitrary period of 3 months. There is no requirement that binds any organization to observe this agreement, but the board hopes that all will cooperate so that the problem can be alleviated.



Phil Smith, chairman of the Entertainment Board, commented yesterday that "this plan will make these combos realize that they are not doing us a favor by performing." He also said that "UNC students can easily survive the traumatic experience of not being entertained by any one particuar group."

Holbrook...To Mark Twain

Hal Holbrook, a quiet young man who can change personalities the way a chamelion changes colors, will be featured as Mark Twain at 8 p.m. tonight in Memorial Hall. Holbrook's "Mark Twain Tonight," a solo production of essays and impressions, has received enthusiastic reviews from Broadway to the West Coast. Students with ID cards will be admitted free. Tickets will be on sale at the door.

Potato Chips & People: Chapel Hill Epic

Big business often is accused of being an ugly, impersonal monster only interested in the accummulation of money.

Lay's potato chip company, Harry's restaurant, and five or six UNC students have proved differently.

Last week a group of students were mild-mannerly eating lunch at Harry's when one noticed a "special offer" on the back of the Lay's potato chip bag. There was an offer of free football pennants for only 25 cents and a Lay's label apiece.

Football teams were classified as to conference: Southeastern, Big Ten, West Coast. . . . "Negro Colleges," and independent teams. "Discriminatory labelling," the students said why weren't the Negro schools classed as independents—why were they put in a separate category?

This was a minor complaint, surely, but they took it to Harry Macklin, owner of the restaurant. Harry said he would stop buying the Lay's chips, and informed the delivery man the next day.

From there the complaint was telephoned to Durham and then to Greensboro, the district headquarters. A customer was dissatisfied, several students were displeased.

Then Monday afternoon the marketing director of Lay's and the chairman of the board of their advertising agency appeared in Harry's. They had both specially flown up from Atlanta, Ga. to attempt to placate a customer and get to the source of his complaints.

Following an afternoon of talks with Harry and several students—ending in a smiling settlement of all differences (Lay's will change bags for this area) — the two men flew back to Atlanta.

This is a marvelous example, not necessarily of exalted liberalism, but of big business concern for all its customers. We only wish more companies took such interest — and that more students would take note of what one feeble complaint can lead to. (JC)

"I've Got To Be..."

Scene from within President Inman Allen's office on a recent afternoon:

A young man entered, appearing very agitated.

He was average-looking and was wearing the standard uniform . . . Weejuns, V-neck, button-down. Pinned on his sweater was a small light-blue shield with a white cross on it.

Frantically, he asked Allen when he could get on a committee. The president explained that appointments had been made two weeks ago, but it would be announced in the DTH when vacancies occurred.

"No! You don't understand! I've got to be on one by tonight. They'll ask me at dinner," the young man feverishly protested. "Can't you tell me the name of a committee I can say I'm on?"

Allen, quickly recovering from the shock of all this, began to get a thoughtful look on his face. The thoughtful look turned into a subdued snicker. He said to the young man, "Tell them you got on the N.S.A. Committee for Civil Liberties and Civil Rights."

The other's eyes became as bright as his blue and white pin. He repeated the name to be sure he had it correctly. We nodded, and he walked out happily, mumbling "Civil Liberties and Civil Rights . . . Civil Liberties and . . ."

Hiroshima, Here We Come

An Associated Press news story recently reported the United State's fifth "successful" nuclear explosion in a series of nine in the Pacific.

The explosion "treated" residents of nearby islands to "two magnificent auroral displays." The nuclear scientists thus "bowed out" with a relatively small explosion, the story said.

The bomb blast appeared "only" as a flash of light to Hawaiians hundreds of miles away, the story lamented, although it had the "strength of the atomic bomb which levelled Hiroshima in 1945."

Ah, we have come a long way. No longer does a little old bomb the size of the Hiroshima toy perturb us. In fact, we consider such a bomb rather inconsequential.

The bombs must be bigger. The U. S. "scorecard" on successful explosions must be improved. And the bomb cloud must be made more impressive so as to "treat" observers to a more impressive sight. Ah, America. (JC)

Everett's Wasps, Dum, Dee, Deedle

By AMISTEAD MAUPIN, JR.

THANT

Someone pointed out the other day that U. N. Secretary-General U Thant ought to be quite capable of handling the Cuban crisis. For this reason: In Burmese "U" means "Mr." and "Thant" means "to cleanse or purify." And Mr. Clean can handle even the toughest situation . . . .

EVERETT

The only dorm on campus that can boast of a wasp nest over the entrance and poison ivy on the walls. Right, fellows?

EXCITEMENT

Pete Seegers, renowned folksinger for the Student Non-Violent Co-ordination Committee, will be singing (non-violently, of course) in Memorial Hall on December 5. Proceeds will go to the SNCC (which is non-violent) and to the New Left Club.

Wonder if there's a Free Flick that night.

LAB

A familiar sight these days is the language lab slave. Bleary-eyed and numb, he sits there passively, "working off hours." And for the fifth time that week he hears: "Dum dee dum dee deedle dum dum. This is the start of Swahili 3, Lesson 6. Dum dee dum dee deedle dum." Then he stretches once, grins at his classmate (who also knows the tape by heart), and falls alseep.

EQUAL TIME

Because we believe in equal representation of political views, we decided that last week's quote from Arthur Schlesinger on America's need for Socialism deserves an answer. So this week we submit a quote from Premier Khrushchev on America's need for Socialism: "We cannot expect the Americans to jump from Capitalism to Communism, but we can assist their elected leaders in giving Americans small doses of Socialism, until they suddenly awake to find they have Communism."

OLD WELL

It's easy for a freshman to become disillusioned. We thought we had heard the worst when someone told us that South Building hasn't always had columns. That is, until we found out that the Old Well, as it stands today, is nine years old.

But the trees are the same. Tom Wolfe called them Pulpit Hill's "magnificent ancient trees." Stately and sprawling, they wear their fall clothes like seasoned matrons.

And Old Lady Davie still stands, a little corsetted, maybe. But proud.

REFLECTIONS

FIERCE

"It is Generally regarded as One of the Fiercer Animals. I am not frightened of Fierce Animals in the ordinary way, but it is well known that, if One of the Fiercer Animals is Deprived of its Young, it becomes as Fierce as Two of the Fiercer Aninmals. In which case 'aha' is perhaps a foolish thing to say."

Indian Co-existance--Peaceful To Painful; Respect For Speakers, The Charlotte Observer

India-China War: Painful Lessons

To The Editors:

The position of non-alignment which India took after her independence was not a notion cherished by a handful of leaders. It was consistent with her long religious tradition of passivism. Moreover, one could not expect great enthusiasm for military alignment from India, after successfully ending the movement of passive resistence against colonial rule. What else could you expect from a country like India, whose national income is less that 50% of the income of the city of N.Y., provided that she is not threatened by an emeny? Perhaps more important in this respect, was possible even without a cold war. It was in the light of the above assumption and within the framework of her history and tradition, that she saw her role in the cold war as mediation. Our faith in the peaceful co-existence reached its peak when the communist leaders like Khrushchev, Bulganian, ChouenLai, etc., visited India professing brotherhood and our faith in mediation was strengthened after our successful mediation in the exchange of Korean war prisoners.

The recent Chinese attack on India is a shock to us just as it is to anyone else in this world. However, we can not asume that Peiking is making a "deliberate blunder", though it seems so. Then, why did China attack India? In my opinion, there are four reasons for that. First, China wants to destory India's democracy. India's message to the people of Asia is that the age-long Asian sufferings could be eradicated by democratic means while that of China is that it takes force to eradicate them. There is no better time for that than at a time when India is launching her third five year plan. Secondly, China did not like India's role as a mediator in the international politics. China is resenting India's self-appointed spokemanship for the former. According to the Chinese militant view of Marxism, war is inevitable and negotiation has no place in politics. We should not forget the fact that China not only never asked even Russia to negotiate for her, but also often resented Russia's negotiations in international politics. Thirdly, the historic mountain routes which lead to India, have some religious significance. They are the blood-lines for the Tibetian religion, which China unsuccessfully tried to crush. People come to India through these passes to attend religious festivals or to visit shrines. Lastly, these passes have some political significance. It is through these passes, the refugees reach safety and freedom. China still remembers painfully the fact that it was through these passes that India smuggled Dalai Lama and his party to safety.

In my opinion people of India are solidly behind Mr. Nehru for demoting Mr. V. K. Krishna Menon. However, Mr. Menon should not be made a scape-goat in this international crisis. When he spoke for peaceful co-existence and non-alignment, he spoke for the majority of us. But unfortunately, he made many enemines for India because of the undeplomatic way he said what he said. He is suffering from an acute case of native aristocracy of the colonial period, a kind of resentment and arrogance which most of us happened to experience during the colonial rule, though with different intensity and extensity.

Three things are clear to me, as far as the future of India is concerned:

1. Our guns are going to be filled, whether our stomaches are filled or not and our democracy is to succeed or not. India is painfully listening to the message of Bhagavat-Gita. India is at the threshold of a revolution. She is on her way to face the cold fact of political reality, a fact which is not so good to contemplate anything.

2. India has to re-examine her place and role in the cold war. Whatever else her role is going to be, it is not going to a naive evangelism for peaceful co-existence.

3. Our co-existence with China is not going to be a "peaceful" one, as we hoped; but it is going to be a painful co-existence. With a piece of India we have lost our peace and our faith in the peaceful co-existence with the one who took it.

Observer 'Slop' Not Really Slop

To The Editors:

I thoroughly disagree with the recent editorial by Mr. Bill Hobbs entitled "Observer Slop". From lack of his own editorial imagination and the need to somehow, no matter with what, fill the editorial column of the DTH, Mr. Hobbs, to boost his own journalistic ego, took it upon himself to criticize the foremost newspaper of the two Carolinas, Tennesseee, Virginia, and half of Georgia. I speak of The Charlotte Observer not the Chapel Hill Weekly or the Durham Sun, dear friends.

Mr. Hobb's criticism of the newspaper stemed from a front page story about a group of Peruvian students who had been brought to Charlotte by The Observer to live for a few weeks with American families. The article described the tearful departure of the Peruvian students from Charlotte. Mr. Hobbs called this story "a melodramatic combination of self-advertising and tear-jerking slop". He then proceeded to call Observer writer Kays Gary the slop-king and referred to Mr. Gary's story as a tear-stained article and pure mush. Next, Hobbs inserted an insignificant article about the overworked situation in Oxford, Miss. that was omitted from The Observer. This article merely stated the fact that policemen had discovered some weapons in a dorm adjourning the residence of James Meredith. In Mr. Hobbs's opinion it was the duty of The Observer to splash this article about potential violence across their front page and to hell with any emotional friendship among the people of Charlotte and their foreign friends.

Sure, its the duty of the newspaper to carry news to the public, but since when have Americans become so hard hearted as to repel emotional human interest news stories about decent people. I found the story a welcome change of pace after Cuban crisis stories and integration violence articles. Mr. Hobbs claims the news story was not national and was self-advertising by the newspaper. I claim that understanding and friendship among nationalities of common people anywhere should be as important to readers as the news of the Castros, Khrushchevs, and acts of violence that continually make front page news. As for self-advertising by the newspaper, I believe that when anyone does something good and worthwhile in the world today that it should be told to the public.

Hobbs claims the article by Kays Gary was sentimental slop. I claim that America and its people would benefit greatly if more of the citizens could feel sentimental about friendship and loss of friends. If Mr. Hobbs could express emotional feelings in writing a fourth as well as Mr. Kays Gary, then he would probably be more than just associate editor of the DTH. And speaking of waste of space, Mr. Hobbs with his slop story and Mr. Wrye with his pencilsharpener thriller combined to waste the whole editorial space Saturday. Really, Mr. Wrye, if you can pay the tuition feet to UNC surely you can afford more than one wooden pencil and maybe even a twenty-nine cent ball point pen. If you can't manage this financial problem, please send me a self-addressed stamped envelope and I will enclose an extra wooden pencil and a handy Mickey Mouse pencil sharpener so you can "plod along through the educational enterprise" happily ever after.

In the future, I suggest the staff of the DTH take heart to the continual criticism you seem to attract so well and attempt to upgrade your publication instead of criticizing quality newspapers.

No Respect Shown

To The Editors:

During the talk given by Mr. Michael Harrington Thursday night on poverty in the United States, I was shocked by the juvenile behavior displaced by some ten to fifteen student hecklers. Inappropriate clapping of hands cynical laughs, and sneers were exhibited throughout the speech. As a visitor to the University, Mr. Harrington should have been accorded respect and deference. These persons have a right to hold dissenting opinions, but such immature means of expression are not expected of college students. I might also add that these persons were upperclassmen.

I feel that the majority of the student body do not condone such demonstrations. Yet, every student is harmed by the inconsideration of these few "intellectual morons." I take pride in the University and feel indignant toward those who seek to degrade and undermine the principles of it. Students who share this pride should impose some type of sanction upon the latter persons. Further, if some student organization would study this problem, fruitful results would undoubtedly accure. I would gladly assist in this effort. There is no easy answer, certainly, but it is the responsibility of all those who value the University's reputation to demonstrate their concern.

Australians Hit Student Racism

To the Editors:

The Monash University Students' Representative Council, Victoria, Australia, passed a resolution on 2nd October that the following statement be sent to major publications throughout the United States of America. We trust that you will feel at liberty to print this, either as a letter to the Editor or as a general article in your next issue.

"Through the medium of the Australian Press, we have received reports describing the recent events concerning the attempted exclusion of negro student James Meredith from the University of Mississippi. The Students' Representative Council of Monash University, Victoria, deplores the fact that students of the University of Mississippi have actively participated in upholding the racialist policies of segregationalist, Governor Barnett.

We consider that the actions of these students constitute a flagrant breach not only of the principles of liberty and equality as set out in the Declaration of Independence but are a regression towards the worst type of fascist behaviour.

This blatant exhibition of racial discrimination will, we feel, affect considerable harm to America's image, that of a powerful nation and people assisting those of races and countries which are in a more unfortunate situation than themselves.

Inevitably the 'incidents' of the South will have damaging effects on American relationships with the coloured peoples of the world to the detriment of official U. S. policy which has endeavoured to embrace and befriend all the races of the free world, no matter what their colour or creed.

This behaviour on the part of the Mississippi students is all the more deplorable in that educated people have actively expressed a primitive racial intolerance. Education should breted justice and a consciousness of human values, instead it would appear that these students of the South have been unable to suppress their inherent inbred bias. The University educated should have sufficient foresight to be social reformers, not advocates of a partisan policy which is the antithesis of democracy."

—David L. McConachy,
President,
Students' Representative Council.

'Shelter' Signs

I would like to express my concern over the appearance of shelter signs on campus. These signs are bad. They have created what is sometimes called a bomb scare. I'm scared. I don't like to think about the future, or war, or my studies. These make me think.

I think this campus will not benefit from these signs. People will have to think. Can you imagine what this will do to school spirit? What if I go to a party to get drunk and on the way I see one of these signs: I won't have a very good time. What if I am going to my room in the afternoon after spending the day in the woods with my dog and I see one of these signs? I know that I won't be able to love life.

I also don't think that these terrible signs will help too much in case of a big war, for I know that if a big war came I wouldn't want to go under the ground. If a big war came I would want to go home so that I could be with my mother and father. I wouldn't want to go underground with a lot of smelly people.

What I am trying to say is that these signs make me scared. When I'm scared I get indigestion. These signs make everyone else laugh. My indigestion combined with all the laughter makes me very unhappy. Please take these signs down.

Soccermen Travel To State Today

UNC Seeks Sixth Straight In Warm-Up For Maryland

Carolina's varsity soccermen put their five game winning streak on the line this afternoon when they travel to Raleigh to battle N. C. State.

Coach Marvin Allen's booters boast a 5-1 overall season record, including a 2-0 mark in the Atlantic Coast Conference. One of their two league victories came over a weak State team last month. The score was 9-1 and sharp-shooting Jim Reston had five of them in the one half he played. Reston now has a total of 12 goals and needs only four more in the next three games, State, Maryland and Duke, to tie the Carolina one-season scoring record of 16, established by John Ghanin in 1959.

The Tar Heels has amassed 28 goals, while allowing seven scores in gaining successive triumphs over Davidson, State, Virginia, Pfeiffer and Belmont Abbey. Their only defeat came at the hands of Navy, 4-0, in the opener.

Willard Moves Up In ACC Statistics

GREENSBORO (UPI) — The Atlantic Coast Conference did not get a 100-ard individual rushing performance until the sixth game of the 1961 football season, but the latest ACC statistics showed today it came out of the seventh week-end with a pair of such running efforts.

Len Chiaverini of Maryland was the first to crack the century mark on the ground, getting 119 on South Carolina 10 days ago. Last Saturday Ken Willard of North Carolina ground out 113 yards on Clemson and Brian Piccolo picked up 103 on Tennessee.

These performances jumped Willard from seventh to fifth in ACC rushing and brought Piccolo from no-where to seventh.

Meantime, Billy Gambrell of South Carolina leads rushing with 452 yards to 448 for Chiaverini.

Gary Cuozzo of Virginia equaled an ACC record against South Carolina last Saturday when he attempted 38 passes. He just missed matching the completion record by one with his 22 hits for 220 yards. The effort, however, solidly implanted the Cavalier quarterback in third place in passing behind Dick Shiner of Maryland and Junior Edge of North Carolina.

Jim Reston Makes Scoring Look Easy

By MARTIN KRUMING

Before the 1962 season got under way soccer enthusiasts knew that Carolina's chances for the Atlantic Coast Conference crown depended largely on the success of a young man named Jimmy Reston.

After a year at Oxford, England, could this flashy center forward return to the form which made him the Tar Heels' leading scorer with 14 goals as a sophomore?

Seeking the intellectual stimulation and fascination of an English college, Reston journeyed to Oxford for his junior year. Although Oxford prefers to take Americans for at least two years, they warmly accepted this young ambassador.

Reston's record speaks for itself. A Morehead scholar from Washington, Jimmy is the son of "Scotty" Reston, internationally renown head of the Washington bureau of the New York Times. After four successful years at St. Albans school in the nation's capitol, Jimmy passed up Harvard to enter UNC. Reston played four years of prep school soccer, leading the team his final two years with 14 and 13 goals, respectively.

Commenting on English soccer, Reston calls it a "gentleman's game played strictly for enjoyment and exercise. The season lasted for four months, and although it was mostly intramural competition, there was one match with arch-rival Cambridge.

Reston is turning into quite a cosmopolitan. Aside from spending much time in East and West Berlin, "our man at Oxford" toured Europe for 15 months last year and was in Tunisia, North Africa for Christmas, 1961.

Of all the European countries he has visited, Jimmy's heart probably lies in Germany. Arriving in West Berlin on August 18, 1961, Reston missed the building of "The Wall" by only five days.

Looking to the future, Reston would like to work in the State Department in international relations. "I don't want to be switched around the world all my life," Jimmy said when asked about the foreign service.

Under the Oxford influence, Reston has settled on philosophy as a major. He has a great interest in writing and debating, particularly the Di-Phi. Reston is a member of Phi Delta Theta fraternity.

During his stay in Germany, Jimmy wrote a series of eleven syndicated articles for UNC News. These were circulated around the state and appeared in a San Francisco newspaper.

So far this season Reston has lived up to all the expectations of head coach Marvin Allen. Spearheading an attack which has tallied 23 goals, the junior speedster has delighted the Fetzer Field fans with his glamorous and aggressive style of play.

With 12 goals to his credit in six games, the amazing Jim Reston has a good shot at the season scoring record of 16, held by 1959 star, John Ghanin.

Reston has the ability to succeed in any situation. He's well on the way to succeeding in breaking the scoring mark and adding another accomplishment to his record.

Christian Athletes To Hear Al Long

Al Long, the only Carolina graduate to letter in four sports, will be the guest speaker tonight when the Fellowship of Christian Athletes meet.

The Christian Athletes will meet at 9:30 p.m. in the Woodhouse Conference Room of Graham Memorial.

All freshman and varsity athletes are invited.

Justice, Dudley Will Be Honored

CHARLOTTESVILLE, Va. (UPI) —Two all-time football stars, halfbacks Bill Dudley and Charlie (Choo Choo) Justice, will be honored next Saturday when the universities of Virginia and North Carolina renew their rivalry for the 67th time.

Dudley set 10 school records for Virginia before departing in 1942 and Justice set 11 at Carolina in his collegiate career that ended in 1950.

Virginia announced Saturday both expect to attend the game to receive awards as all-time performers in the Virginia-Carolina series.

Runners Take State Title, Prepare For League Meet

By ED DUPREE

"We expect tough competition and we're going to try to be ready for it. We're going to be out to win."

Cross country coach Dale Ranson was referring to the ACC finals and he obviously was pleased with his team's performance in the State Championships Monday. His Tar Heel runners took six of the first ten places, and in the process avenged a regular season loss to Duke.

Duke's Lewis Van Dyck covered the four-mile Raleigh course in 21 minutes, 33 seconds, and took first place. However, only two other Blue Devils finished in the top ten.

Carolina's low score of 26 gave the Tar Heels a wide victory margin over the Durham harriers, who finished with 41. Wake Forest was third with 66, followed by Davidson, 104, and State, 148.

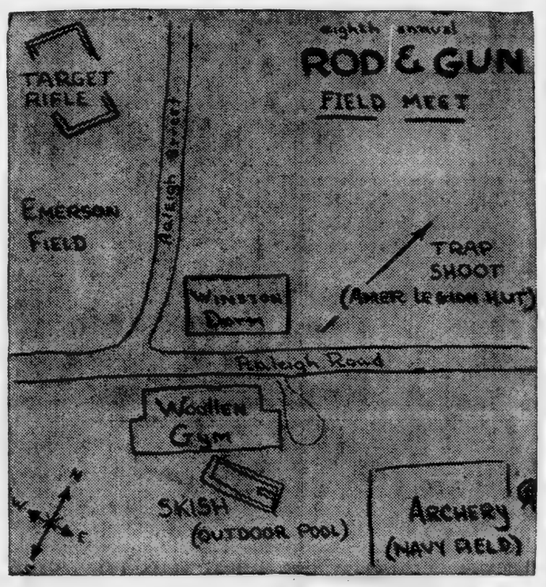
The 15-point spread over Duke avenged an earlier 27-28 setback and gave the Devils their first loss of the season. Ranson's men, of course, would like to make it 2-1 over Duke with a victory in the ACC Championships.

Referring to Monday's win Ranson said, "The whole team ran real well from a competitive standpoint. They moved real well in the middle of the race.

"We got off the track against Duke, but we ought to be ready for the ACC meet. This was our best performance from a competitive standpoint, but it wasn't our best time."

Coach Ranson cited the cold and windy weather as reasons for the slow times in the meet. The narrow State course also hampered his men.

"Our course gives the opportunity for more open running and there is not much congestion among the runners.



The ACC finals will be held here next Monday and Ranson says that having the meet on familiar territory "shouldn't hurt us." However, he doesn't feel that running on the Finley Golf Course track will be a definite advantage.

Other Tar Heels who finished in the top ten Monday were Jerry Stuver, fifth, Charlie Little, sixth, Jerry Smith, seventh, Bob Bennett, eighth, and Carmine Lunetta, ninth.

Carolina's Jim Meade won the freshman race and Bob Fawcett took third, but Duke's Blue Imps took first with 33 points, followed by the Tar Babies with 58.

Rod And Gun Meet Is Today

By STUART BALL

The Eighth Annual Rod and Gun Field Meet gets underway at 1 p.m. this afternoon with events enough to satisfy the most avid outdoor enthusiast. Both teams and individuals will be testing their skills at trap shooting, target rifle shooting, bait casting, and archery.

Any UNC student, except those on ROTC rifle teams, is eligible to enter, and can enter with three compatriots as a team if he so desires. Last year's team honors went to Kappa Psi as they put an end to Sigma Nu's monopoly of the three past years.

This year three of the four events will be staged on campus. Target rifle shooting will be held on the Emerson Field rifle range, archery on Navy Field, and bait casting will be in the outdoor pool behind Woollen Gym. Trap shooting will be held at the American Legion Hut near the Patio. Transportation to and from the Hut will be provided at frequent intervals.

Shaffer Tops Appell For Junior Presidency

Miss WUNC-FM, Linda Mink, Goes On The Air

New Sweetheart Announced By 10-Year-Old WUNC Radio

By DONA FAGG

Fifty thousand watts and a 50,000-watt platinum blonde give WUNC-FM a new look for the tenth anniversary of operation. Linda Mink as Miss WUNC-FM and the power boost are both new additions to the student-staffed and the student-operated radio station.

With the additional power WUNC-FM now has an effective coverage of a 150-mile radius. Operating on a frequency of 91.5 megacycles, WUNC-FM concentrates on classical and semi-classical music, public affairs, foreign news and discussion programs.

With Miss Mink, junior RTVMP major, the public relations department is campaigning for student interest in the station.

The station is completely staffed by students. None are paid. The control from the three-man RTVMP faculty was described by Don R. Schain, station manager, as "very slight."

Wayne Bryant, public relations director and station business manager, pointed out that although many hours are devoted by the students to the station, all of the staff except one member made Dean's List last semester.

He stated that UNC makes no appropriations to the station nor is the station supported by student fees. "The money is scraped up by the department," he explained. He estimates the operating costs to be less than $100 for a three-month period.

Dr. Wessley Wallace, RTVMP faculty member, added that the funds came from the left-overs of the department allocations.

The problem of adequate funds has haunted the radio station since its beginning. Although the station is only ten years old, the idea of a campus radio station was first voiced in 1942. However, the lack of space and money prevented the establishment of a station.

During the war years the department was shuttled from its quarters in Caldwell Hall to make room for the Pre-Flight Training School. The need for a studio was sorely felt, and there was a fresh impetus towards a studio from the journalism department the radio department moved to Byrum Hall. However, there still was no student-operated station.

Student programs were broadcast on several state stations and on the coast-to-coast network of Mutual Broadcasting.

The search for space to house studios and facilities came to an end when the department moved to Swain Hall in 1946. The search for funds continues.

WUNC-FM went on the air in 1952 with a rented transmitter and a license granted Nov. 7 from the Federal Communications Commission. Later in the year the station joined the National Association of Educational Broadcasters.

The radio station represents a rare phenomenon — getting something for nothing. The funds may be scanty but both the RTVMP department and the students feel that the training and experience gained working with WUNC - FM cannot be measured in dollars and cents.

'Beat Dook' Parade Set For Nov. 20

Pi Kappa Alpha is again sponsoring the "Beat Dook" Float Parade to be held Tuesday, Nov. 20, at 3 p.m. This parade is an annual feature to build school spirit preceding the Carolina-Dook football contest.

Last year over 35 floats, the University's ROTC units, and several bands helped make the parade a big success. This year the parade will be even bigger and more important to the Tarheels since much of the student body will miss the annual contest to be held during the Thanksgiving holidays in Kenan Stadium.

The parade will be led by Miss Pat Hall, Yack Queen for 1963, sponsored by the PiKA's, and Miss Beth Wallace, the PiKA "Dream Girl." The center attraction will be the '63 "Beat Dook" Queen. Last year's Queen was Miss Jean Spears, a member of Pi Beta Phi, from Lookout Mountain, Tenn. The Queen is chosen from the approximately 35 organizations which participate in the parade by entering a float. The Queen must be a Carolina coed.

A trophy will be awarded to the winner in each of the following groups: Fraternity Division, Sorority Division, Men's Dormitory Division, and Women's Dormitory Division. This year there will also be a trophy for the best over-all float. All organizations wishing to enter are asked to contact Ted Roberson at the Pi Kappa Alpha house before Saturday, November 10.

24 Leaders Attend Training Program

Twenty four campus leaders from several campus organizations, attended a GM sponsored leadership conference at Southern Pines last weekend.

The leadership workshop, held at the Terraces conference center, was a comprehensive look at the structure and composition of groups, the development of relationships within the group, and the role and types of leadership. Such an intensive weekend learning program for campus leaders has been under study by Graham Memorial for more than year.

The workshop was conducted by Dr. Charles Seashore, training consultant of the National Training Laboratories, National Education Association, and his wife, Edie. The workshop was plit into Training Group where Dr. and Mrs. Seashore acted primarily as observers, and Theory Sessions in which lecture were given on the concepts of leadership, problem members in a group, "feedback," and campus culture.

The conference began at 3 o'clock Friday afternoon and extended through 3 o'clock Sunday. About 5 hours were devoted to theory sessions and 16 hour to training groups. The training groups were spontaneous exchanges between 12 participants with no leadership or direction from advisors. There were two training groups, and the differences and similarities in the development of the two training groups was a topic of discussion by the participants during free times.

IDC Sponsors First Party Friday Night

Cobb Dormitory social room will be the scene of the first of the IDC-sponsored party Friday night from 8 to 11:30 p.m.

Owen Bishop, IDC president, announced that the party will be a co-operative effort between West Cobb and Joyner Dorm. Music for dancing will be provided by stereo. The IDC is assuming all expenses for the affair.

The first party is experimental. Dorm hosts and hostesses will act as a catalyst to get the party going.

If the party is successful, the residents of the Nurse's Dorm and Spencer will vote on joining the co-operation plan. Future plans include regular Friday night dances that are to be rotated among the girls' dorms.

The Communications Committee of the IDC is the originator of the first dance.

New Frontier Is Victorious In Elections

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Democrats Wednesday posted the best off-year record for a pesidential party in 28 years in an election that "heartened" President Kennedy and politically destroyed his onetime political rival, Richard M. Nixon.

Final unofficial tabulations on Tuesday's balloting showed the Republicans gained only two House seats, leaving the Democats in control 259 to 176. Incomplete Senate returns showed the Democrats picking up four Senate seats to boost their margin there to 68-32.

For the Democrats, it was the best mid-term showing for a party controlling the White House since 1934, when Franklin D. Roosevelt was in office. Over the past 8 years, the President's party has lost an average of 39 House seats in off-year elections.

The White House pomptly declared that an analysis of the House seats won and lost by the Democrats showed "a clear net gain in support" of the President's new frontier legislative program. The GOP National Committee challenged this interpretation.

Results Please Kennedy

For himself, the President said he was "heartened by the results." He said the country faced major responsibilities and he was sure the new Congress convening in January would meet them "in a progressive and vigorous manner."

It was a different story in California where Nixon, only a 119,450 vote loser to Kennedy in 1960, conceded defeat to Democratic Gov. Edmund G. Brown and virtually surrendered leadership of the state's Republican party.

In Washington, Democratic National Chairman John M. Bailey said, "I think we have witnessed the last crisis for Mr. Nixon." Bailey claimed a "tremendous" election victory for Kennedy and and predicted the new Congress would pass more administration bills.

Baily also regarded New York Gov. Nelson A. Rockefeller as the chief GOP White House contender in 1964 despite the emergence on the presidential scene of George W. Romney and William M. Scranton, GOP gubernatorial winners in Michigan and Pennsylvania.

Miller Challenges Analysis

Republican National Chairman William E. Miller challenged the Bailey and White House assessments of the election. He said he could "not agree that our failure to capture a greater number of seats in the House and Senate constitutes in any way an endorsement of the new frontier and its programs."

He cited GOP victories in the New York, Pennsylvania, Ohio and Michigan governors races and said they would have "a major bearing on the outcome of the presidential election in 1964." He noted that the four states have 119 electoral votes.

Miller also said that Republican victories in the south — where the party reached a post-reconstruction high in party members from that area—signalled the establishment of a real two-party system in Dixie.

The election was full of other surprises. In California, a dead Democrat — Rep. Clem Miller who was killed in a plane crash Oct. 7 — defeated a GOP businessman. A special election will be held to fill Miller's seat.

Many Upsets Occur

Many prominent office holders were toppled. The defeated list included Sen. Homer E. Capehart, R-Ind.; Sen. Alexander Wiley, R-Wis.; Democratic Gov. Michael V. DiSalle of Ohio; Sen. John A. Carroll, D-Colo.; Sen. J. J. Hickey, D-Wyo., and Rep. Walter H. Judd R-Minn., keynote speaker at the 1960 Republican convention.

In Southern California, one of the strongest centers of the John Birch Society, threeo f the organization's members were defeated — GOP Reps. John H. Rousselet and Edgar Hiestand, and Republican H. L. Richardson, also running for a House seat.

A not unexpected but still pleasing victory for the President was the triumph of his 30-year-old brother, Edward M. Kennedy, over Republican George Cabot Lodge, in the Massachusetts senatorial race.

NSA Sponsors Symposium Next Week

"Radicalism and the College Campus" will be the topic of a symposium on Nov. 13 arranged by the campus committee of the National Student Association.

Carey McWilliams Jr. and Dr. Russell Kirk will debate "How Much Freedom in Academic Freedom?" at 8 p.m. in Carroll Hall. McWilliams is a professor at Oberlin College. His father is editor of Saturday Review.

Kirk is editor of the University Bookman and on the staff of the National Review. Sam Jones, president of UNC's Young Americans for Freedom, called Kirk "one of the most articulate and respected conservative spokesmen in the United States." Kirk is also a national adviser to NSA.

In man Allen, president of the student government, has called McWilliams "one of the most dynamic speakers I heard at the 15th National Student Congress."

A panel discussion on the rights and responsibilities of past, present, and future radical movements will be held at 3 p.m. on the 13th. Speakers will tentatively include Dr. Earl Wallace, UNC professor of political science; Herbert Bradshaw, associate editor of the Durham Herald; and W. W. Taylor, a Raleigh Lawyer.

NSA co-ordinator Harry Delung said, "The NSA Committee felt the need on the campus for programs in which both sides are presented. If we can continue to receive financial backing, we hope to present three other similar programs this year."

The program is being sponsored and financed by the Carolina Forum, and other campus groups.

EDMUND G. BROWN

Brown Victory Kills Future Of Dick Nixon

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Former Vice President Richard M. Nixon was wrecked as a future GOP presidential possibility Wednesday by his defeat in California's do-or-die gubernatorial race.

While Nixon was sidelined, Gov. Nelson A. Rockefeller, automaker George Romney and Rep. William S. Scranton loomed brightly as 1964 Republican presidential hopefuls on the strength of convincing governorship victories in key states.

The former president conceded defeat by Democratic Gov. Edmund G. Pat Brown shortly after 1 p.m. EST after trailing from the start in a race that apparently sealed his doom as a future national political figure. Unofficial returns showed Democrats and Republicans trading successful governorship raids in a dozen states in Tuesday's voting, with some stunning upsets. But if the latest figures held up, the nationwide lineup would remain the same with 34 Democratic governors and 16 Republicans.

Four Remain Undecided

Only four races remained undecided, plus a cliff-hanger finish in Massachusetts where the Republican incumbent conceded defeat but pulled up fast in the late counting. Democratic incumbents were leading in Rhode Island, North Dakota and Alaska, and Republican Gov. Elmer L. Andersen was defending a narrow lead against Democrat Karl Rolvaag in Minnesota.

Democrats ousted a Republican governor in Iowa and apparently in Massachusetts but their other gains were in less populous states such as New Hampshire, New Mexico, Vermont and Hawaii.

The victories of Scranton, a 45-year-old first term congressman, in Pennsylvania and political newcomer Romney, 55, in Michigan left them squarely alongside Rockefeller as 1964 GOP potentials. Rockefeller, 54 won handily over Democrat Robert M. Morgenthau but his margin was less than his supporters hoped for and failed to gain him a dominant front runner's role among party possibilities.

One of the undecided races — Rhode Island — hinged on 7,000 absentee ballots. Democratic Gov. John A. Notte, Jr., held a hairline edge over Republican challenger John H. Chafee on unofficial returns from all precincts.

North Dakota's Democratic Gov. William L. Guy clung to a narrow lead over Republican Mark Andrews.

In Alaska, where counting was slow and difficult, Democratic Gov. William A. Egan was leading Republican Mike Stepovich, a former territorial governor of the 49th state.

Parties In Split Of Class Offices

Charles Shaffer Jr. polled 577 votes to defeat Gordon Appell and claim the presidency of the Junior Class in a clear cut victory announced yesterday.

Shaffer, a University Party candidate, enjoyed the widest winning margin of any candidate in the Tuesday elections, a 186 vote plurality over Appell.

The results of the other two presidential campaigns were not so clear, however, as it may take a recount and an elections board ruling to decide who won in the sophomore and freshman races.

In the sophomore contest, the first count showed Bill Aycock, SP, winning over Harrison Merrill by only 12 votes, 421-409. The board has petitioned to count the votes over for this contest.

In the freshman race for president, Earl Johnson, UP, is the apparent victor over Jack Harrell with 489 votes to Harrell's 460. Student Party chairman has contested the victory, however, by claiming that the 46 votes compiled by write in candidate O'Quinn were illegal.

Despite Shaffer's wide margin for president, the UP was unable to carry the junior race, as it lost vice-president, treasurer, and secretary to the SP. For vice-president, Woody Harrison upset Watts Carr by 510 to 452, and for secretary, Bonnie Hoyle won over Pam Rudy by 573-379, and Anne Eskridge defeated Gerry Good for treasurer by 566-388.

The UP salvaged the social chairman's spot as Joan Haley came through with a 516-439 win over Diane Hile.

In the freshman elections, two contests will probably be recounted. They are treasurer, where Sheldon, SP, led Jensen by 494-490, and social chairman, where Jones led Weddle by 508-497. Races already decided are for vice president, where Kagel, SP, won by 584-402 over Stewart, and secretary, where Anderson swamped Osborn by 582-388.

Sophomore candidates who came out victorious included Pud Hassell, UP, who won by 422-381 over Kip Carter for the vice-presidency. Johnsye Massenburg topped Cookie Cochran for secretary by 57 votes, and Dee Johnson won by 47 votes over Tyson for social chairman.

There may have to be a recount for treasurer, where Paul Chused leads John Schultz by 411-407.

Totals including the contested freshman president's race showed an almost even split between the parties, with the UP winning eight and the SP seven.

Totals indicated that approximately 2,800 students participated in the elections, slightly below the forecast 3,000.

In other voting, the proposal for a constitutional amendment for open trials passed by 2-1 margin, and the proposal to hike dorm social fees was approved.

BULLETIN

NEW YORK (UPI) — Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt, 78, former First Lady of America who became a First Lady of the world, died at her apartment Wednesday after a six-week illness.

The cause of her death was not announced. But a statement from her daughter, Mrs. Anna Roosevelt Halstead, said that doctors had been called because "of indications of cardiac failure."

Mrs. Roosevelt, the precedent-shattering wife of the late Franklin D. Roosevelt, had finally slowed her hectic pace only when illness forced her to.

She was hospitalized Sept. 26 at Columbia Presbyterian Medical Center in New York for treatment of a persistent lung infection and an anemic condition.

Recount Gets Nod Of Both Party Heads

Mike Chanin, chairman of the University Party, and Robin Britt, chairman of the Student Party, has asked the Elections Board for a recount of each election in which the difference was 12 votes or less.

The elections affected include Merrill vs. Aycock for the presidency of the Sophomore Class, Schultz vs. Chused for Sophomore Class treasurer, Jensen vs. Sheldon for Freshman Class treasurer, and Jones vs. Weddle for Freshman Class Social Chairman.

Britt alone plans to introduce a resolution before the Elections Board tonight which, if passed, will necessitate another election for the presidency of the Freshman class.

Britt released the following statement to the Daily Tar Heel.

"To begin with I would like to say that the Student Party would contest an election only in a situation in which there existed without doubt the possibility that the election could have been reversed by the discrepancies involved. This is the case in the Freshman Class presidential election.

"The circumstances which I feel necessitate another election are as follows: Sandy O'Quinn submitted a petition as an independent candidate for President of the Freshman Class. However, O'Quinn did not attend the compulsory meeting of candidates as stipulated in the Elections Law. This disqualified him as a candidate before the ballots used in the election were printed. Sandy no longer considered himself a candidate for the office. Naturally, he did not submit a report of campaign expenditures to the Elections Board, which was a further disqualification. (Sandy said Tuesday night that the first time he knew that he was running for Freshman Class President was when he saw his name on the ballot.)

"However, Sandy's name appeared on the ballot and he received 46 votes. The difference in votes between the other two candidates was only 29 votes. Had Sandy's name not appeared on the ballot, those 46 votes obviously could have reversed the results of the election. Under these circumstances it would seem that the only fair action that can be taken is to conduct another election for this office."

Chanin said he would not make any particular statement on the question of a new election concerning the Freshman Class President until after the Elections Board meets and decides on Thursday.

"However, I feel that the points made by Robin Britt, the Student Party Chairmen, are well-taken but debatable," he said.

"The question of this election can not be answered by the chairmen of either party, but must be decided by the Elections Board or the Constitutional Council. I will express my opinions to them Thursday."

Rockets Gone, Khrushy Announces

By DONALD MAY
United Press International

WASHINGTON — Some new climax in the Cuban crisis appeared in the making Wednesday as Soviet Premier Nikita Khrushchev announced that Russian rockets had been taken off the island.

In another development, the Soviet news agency Tass said in a report from New York that the Soviet Union has agreed to an internationally controlled visual check of deck cargoes on Soviet ships leaving Cuba.

Tass also said United Nations Acting Secretary General Thant had proposed control posts in the United States and Latin America to guarantee Cuba against aggression.

Khrushchev's statement in Moscow caused sudden confusion in Washington. U. S. officials told newsmen they could not say whether Soviet vessels had left Cuba with the missiles, or whether the Russians might be trying to rush the weapons out before international inspection could be arranged.

These officials said the United States was urgently pressing Soviet officials at the United Nations to set up an inspection in Cuba to determine whether President Kennedy's demand for removal of offensive weapons indeed was being complied with.

Among the unanswered questions here were:

—Had arrangements been made or worked out except for details, for international inspection on the high seas of ships leaving Cuba?

—In the absence of such an agreement, would the Navy intercept outgoing vessels for a count of their missile cargoes?

—Had the United States abandoned its demand for ship inspections?

Khrushchev said in his statement, "we have taken out our rockets and they are probably already on the way back."

A high State Department source said there had been several reports concerning "preparations for departure" of Soviet ships leading in Cuba, but did not elaborate.

"Arrangements for checking departures and further assurances asked by the United States are among subjects currently being discussed," the source said. He refused to go further, except to say the talks were on an urgent basis.

Anonymous Letter Writer, Afraid Or Confused?

The Greensboro Daily News recently ran a letter to the editor which they received from an anonymous student here at Carolina. The letter lamented the fact that the majority of the views presented both to and by students on this campus were in effect "liberal" views.

Specifically, the letter stated, ". . . students rarely hear anything other than harangues by all-knowing liberals. And, "When you stop to consider that the 'other side' is never heard, it isn't so amazing that leftist group flourish on the Carolina campus. . . ."

Well, aside from the fact that we would never call the struggling attempts of a very few students to establish a Progressive Labor club on this campus "flourishing leftisism," we find that the letter raises some interesting points about the type of speakers and entertainers who come to the Carolina campus.

The individual, whether a student or not, is obviously sincerely concerned that he does not have the opportunity to hear and applaud the views of some conservatives with whom he agrees. This may be a valid criticism, but the matter does not rest so easily, as this letter writer would lead us to believe, on the specific personalities of those individuals who have appeared on the campus.

But then again, what if the speakers to whom Mr. Anon refers are blantantly liberal, and what if some folk singers sing about their aspirations for peace? This does not prevent any equally talented or vocal conservative elements from presenting their views.

The conservative element suffers only in so far as it remains silent and does not choose to present itself to the campus as a worthy and legitimate "search for the truth," to borrow a phrase from our mysterious, upset student. Certainly, when Fulton Lewis, Jr. was here he had some good points to make and some interesting approaches to current issues, and, no doubt, numerous students on campus would enjoy hearing him again.

Where is he?

For that matter, where are the conservative speakers in general? Where are entertainers who would like to sing a chorus or two about an invasion of Cuba or the glories of nuclear war?

Contrary to what said letter by supposed student would lead one to believe, various campus organizations have endeavored to get conservative speakers here, but in the overwhelming majority of instances the prices demanded by the respected, vocal conservatives have been way beyond the budgets of any campus group. They, quite simply, want too much money.

We would not glibly criticize them for their monetary demands. It may be the only way in which they can afford to come to the campus. It may be that they have so many requests to speak that they must limit themselves in some manner, and by imposing financial barriers they certainly do exclude themselves from many campuses.

* * *

But let all this be as it may, the really frightening aspect—the most disappointing thing about the letter was it's writer's lack of name. Why would a student from UNC write a letter of complaint to the newspaper of another town, and why would he choose not to sign his name? This stimulants, indeed, encourages generalized speculation.

Was it a student who wrote that letter? We will never know, but we have our doubts.

But then again, what if it was a student? Is the situation here at Chapel Hill such that those who lean toward a conservative stand are intimidated? Is there just cause for a conservative to fear being known? We do not think so. There are many on campus who are vocal conservatives, and who do not mind letting other students know that they are.

So, we must conclude that the "fear" is peculiar to this one individual. And that is a shame. For if the "student" is afraid to speak openly on behalf of what he believes, his plight is miserable, to say the least.

Furthermore, the anonymous individual is confused, or at least he confuses the issue, when he closes his letter with the plea, ". . . I do suggest that both sides be given an opportunity to speak;" and then refuses to sign his name—in effect, refusing to speak as an individual for either side. (CW)

Fraternal Pressure

It is quite often, through varying media, pointed out that fraternities require pledges to participate in numerous extra-curricular activities. There are the standard jokes about "pledge-points" and committee memberships, on threat of the banned, rumored, and frightful "rat court."

But when the joking is done. We must admit that system works. Or at least that the majority of student government committees are manned by individuals who belong to fraternities. And in most instances, these individuals, who may have originally joined the committees through fear of the almighty brotherhood, find that they actually enjoy their activities and that they have something to offer to the organization—and thereby, to the campus in general.

So, we may all joke about pledge duties, but let us not overlook the good that comes from some. The haphazard "joining" that is the result of fraternity pressure quite often leads on to an enjoyable and productive service to the campus by an individual who might, otherwise, never have taken the initiative. Magazine Story Struck New Low

To the Editors:

I suppose that all of us will cheerfully grant Mr. Roy Rabon's right to think of himself as a gay young dog. It's just that we'd rather he didn't try to turn the campus into one big fireplug. Without elaborating further on this analogy, I'll just say that his story—titled so cleverly as "Boy and the Woman" — may have hit a new low in taste, humor, and literary merit.

Lest I be accused of shocked "prudery," I'll admit having read stories like this one before—enough of them, in fact to make a few generalizations. One generalization might be that when breasts are described as "round," "shapely," or even "protruding," the situation may still be saveable. But when an author starts calling them "warm," "heavy," and "proud," there's trouble afoot, and weak men sink and strong men fail. Perhaps Mr. Rabon has succeeded in showing us what children do in such a case.

Another generalization might be that most of the rum-dums who write stories like these are still in a state of adolescent prurience, and they're more to be pited than censured. Of course, to the best of my knowledge, this is the first time that one of them has tried to pass his work off as "humor." Some day real soon, I'd like to meet the editor of your magazine.

If Mr. Rabon's story had been funny or significant, or even well-written, it might have been justified. Instead it is a travesty and a waste of time. By now you must have guessed my horrible secret: I have three or four inhibitions I'm actually proud of. Wait till Rabon hears about this!

Bombs Won't Fall On Chapel Hill

To the Editors:

With the Cuban situation everyone in Chapel Hill seems to have suddenly become concerned about civil defense. There are now shelters for 12,175 that we never knew we had before.

Actually we don't have to worry at all. If the Russians ever made a nattack on the U. S., Chapel Hill is about the last place they would think worth wasting a bomb on.

In the first place this is a conflict based around industrial power, and we all know what an important industrial complex is situated on the Hill.

In the second place Chapel Hill has such an unusual ratio of regular Americans to fellow travellers that I doubt the Russians would want to exterminate so many friends.

So forget the CD routine: if it ever happened you couldn't be in a safer place.

Federal Aid To Arizona: A Billion For Barry

By DONALD R. McNEILL
In The Reporter

Mesa, Arizona—In the heart of Senator Barry Goldwater's home town of Phoenix, a new eight-story, block-long Federal Building has changed the desert skyline. Completed last year at a cost of almost $4 million, the handsome black and gold structure is a striking symbol of the continuing influence of the Federal government in the lives and economy of the conservative senator's 1,400,000 generally conservative constituents.

With no particular sense of contradiction, most of these Arizonans—including ranchers with Federal farm loans, retired couples receiving Social Security payments, and businessmen with defense contracts—are proud of Senator Goldwater's growing reputation as the chief national spokesman for reducing Federal spending. "When it operates with as much absence of government interference as possible, the economy operates the best", the senator told Eric Sevareid on a national television broadcast last March. But in the same interview he conceded that Federal expenditures have had an impact on his state. "I don't deny that we take it", he admitted. "We do". When Sevareid asked if Arizona had not accepted about $84 million in Federal money in 1961, the senator replied: "Oh, I think that probably more than that was spent in the state...I think the total would be over $200 million". Even that estimate is low. In 1961, the Arizona economy was bolstered by nearly a billion dollars in Federal money.

A recent report by the Library of Congress, listing only "Selected Federal Expenditures", showed that $796,336,982 entered Arizona during fiscal 1961. Not included in this "selected" list are payments for the purchase, storage, and transportation of price-support commodities, defense subcontracts to Arizona firms from out-of-state industries, and expense of Federal agencies like the FBI, SEC,and Food and Drug Administration which do not break down their budgets by states. Moreover, direct Federal expenditures available in the state far exceed the Library of Congress's careful estimate. For example, Federal highway funds, listed in the report as $34 million, actually totaled almost $40 million in 1961.

What should Arizonans do about this vast and growing Federal spending? "We wish we'd never started it, and we'd like to get out of it, and the governor's working very hard to see what he can do", the senator told Sevareid. Senator Goldwater has not, however, advised the people of his state to refuse Federal funds. He just asks them not to come to Washington looking for money. They usually don't have to.

Like Senator Goldwater, Republican Governor Paul Fannin deplores the power of the Federal government. In a speech at Salome, Arizona, in July, 1961, he warned that "Any government with the power to give you anything that you want is strong enough to take everything you have". Five days later he telegraphed Secretary of Agriculture Orville L. Freeman asking that two Arizona counties be declared eligible for the Federal livestock feed program. They were. Just a few weeks ago, Governor Fannin again applied to Secretary Freeman for Federal aid to three drought-stricken countries.

The governor and the senator face formidable obstacles in trying to convince Arizonans that the Federal government should withdraw from the economy. "It's hard for me to find a farmer who believes in this agricultural program", Senator Goldwater once declared. "Yet when the chips are down and they get a chance to do something about it by voting against allotments, they'll invariably vote for more allotments and say, 'Well, we're in it. We might as well stay with it' ".

What Senator Goldwater regards as inertia may merely be basic economics. Farmers might have found it difficult to operate without the $40 million spent in Arizona by the Department of Agriculture in 1961. Some goes to control cotton and wheat pests, some to combat livestock disease, and some to provide livestock feed during droughts. Wool-growers receive Federal incentive payments and cotton farmers regularly collect Federal subsidies. Arizona farmers look to the government for help in marketing their produce, for electricity and telephones, and for low-interest loans of all kinds. As a matter of fact, it is difficult to see how the Arizona farmer, who generally works a natural wasteland brought under cultivation and maintained by artifical means and harassed by some of the worst pests and drought conditions in the United States, could survive without Federal aid— whatever the money may be doing to his moral fiber.

Millions from Defense

In one area, national defense, Senator Goldwater does not quibble with the amount of Federal spending in his state. The $355,675,000 spent there by the Department of Defense during 1961 has kept Arizona industry booming. Motorola, General Electric, AiResearch, and other large firms are thriving on defense contracts and providing a much-needed diversity to the state's economy, which has traditionally been dependent on agriculture and the tourist trade.

Small businesses, too, have been getting their share, despite Senator Goldwater's complaint that the Kennedy administration is "browbeating business in the face of dangerous economic conditions". Smaller firms profit for subcontracts with the larger corporations, and in 1961 they received more than $2 million in loans from the Small Business Administration. Arizona contractors in particular have reason to be grateful for the $37 million spent by the Housing and Home Fiance Agency an dthe $40 million by the Bureau of Roads during 1961.

Among Arizona businessmen and farmers alike, reclamation is almost an article of faith, since without it much of the state would still be desert. Senator Goldwater approves of the construction of huge reclamation dams like Glen Canyon Dam (1961 expenditures: $35 million; eventual cost: almost $335 million) which are obviously beyond the means of private enterprise. To be sure, the senator vehemently denounces Federal construction of power lines from the dams on the ground that they would constitute Federal interference.

Senator Goldwater's difference with the Department of the Interior often seem more political than economic. Secretary Stewart Udall, a fellow Arizonan, may be Goldwater's Democratic senatorial opponent two years from now. Goldwater has accused him of using the power of his position "to threaten congressmen from western states." Udall's "calculated seizure of patronage," Goldwater charges, "does not bring any great credit to Arizona." Many Arizonans, however, are likely to take a somewhat more tolerant view of Udall's activities in view of the fact that the Department of the Interior brought $97 million to Arizona in 1961, funds that were employed to provide a good deal of impetus to both agriculture and business.

In his syndicated column of Auguest 23, 1961, Goldwater asked: "When will the people of America awaken and shout down those liberal apostles who seek to convert this land into the central collectivist state where everything is for free?" "Can man be fed by superficially benevolent government and not lose the desire and ability to forage for himself?" he asked on another occasion.

The senator's contempt for deadbeats on welfare rolls has probably been received with more enthusiastic approval in his home state than anywhere else. Yet it is interesting to note that each month during fiscal 1961 thousands of retired persons, happily basking in the desert sun, collected their individual shares of the $68.8 million paid to Arizonans in the form of Social Security benefits; thousands of others—dependent children, orphans, the blind, and the crippled—received another $17.5 million. All these funds, and more, came from the Department of Health, Education and Welfare, penetrating almost every Arizona community. Federal funds went for hospitals, sewage plants, vocational rehabilitation projects, research and training programs, and tuberculosis, mental health, cancer, and water-pollution control. Next to the Department of Defense. Hew, one of Senator Goldwater's prime targets, was the largest spender in Arizona —more than $112 million in 1961.

This figure included a sizable amount from Hew's Office of Education. And nowhere does Senator Goldwater deplore Federal interference more than in the field of education. Arguing his case in the Saturday Review, he stated flatly: "Education is one of the powers reserved to the states by the Tenth Amendment to the Constitution. Therefore, any Federal aid program, however desirable it might appear, must be regarded as illegal until the Constitution is amended." Be that as it may, Arizona got nearly $8 million in Federal aid-to-education funds in 1961.

Besides the major spenders—Agriculture, Interior, Defense, and Hew —other Federal agencies, such as the Post Office Department, Railroad Retirement Board, Atomic Energy Commission, and Veterans Administration, pumped $156 million into the state. Scarcely an Arizonan — farmer, rancher, miner, laborer, professional, or businessman — is untouched by Federal money in one form or another. The indigent, the aged, the sick, the unemployed, and the criminal all share the benefits. Wherever an Arizonan turns, the monuments of Federal aid loom before him: airports, highways, parks, schools, hospitals, dams, even weather stations.

Double Your Money Back

In "The Conscience of a Conservative," Senator Goldwater wrote: "The people of my own State..and I am confident that I speak for the majority of them—have long since seen through the spurious suggestion that Federal aid comes 'free.' They know that the money comes out of their own pockets, and that it is returned to them minus a broker's fee taken by the Federal bureaucracy. They know, too, that the power to decide how that money shall be spent is withdrawn from them and exercised by some planning board deep in the caverns of one of the Federal agencies. They understand this represents a great and perhaps irreparable loss — not only in their wealth, but in their priceless liberty."

The loss of liberty may be debatable, but there is no loss of wealth. In fiscal 1961, Federal tax payments by Arizonans came to $351 million. At the same time nearly a billion dollars in Federal funds flowed into the state. In other words, for every Federal tax dollar paid out by Arizonans, they received nearly three Federal dollars in return?

In the Sevareid interview, Senator Goldwater boasted that his capital city and home town of Phoenix had not raised taxes in thirteen years. "We've had surpluses in the state government of $17 million and $12 million in the last two years. This doesn't happen generally throughout the United States, but maybe it's one of the virtues of being able to be close to your government."

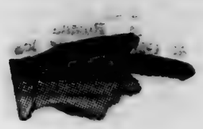
Grand as it is to be close to one's local government, it definitely does not hurt to be close to the Federal government, too.

In Case Of War, Break Glass

By VANCE BARRON

It is comforting to see that the administration is planning for the future, or rather for the lack of one. In addition to fallout shelters we should hope that they have made provisions for an emergency chain of command (like that of the Pentagon) in order that the University will continue functioning after a nuclear disaster. For if not then, when is the maintenance of learning and clear, rational thinking more important? We must be prepared to rebuild.

In a practical vein, the best place to be in case of an attack will be the library. Civil Defense experts tell us that nothing is so efficient as a stack of books in absorbing deadly radiation. There is a useful purpose in having a library. Besides protection, the books would serve a double purpose of providing diversion for the long days that would have to be spent in the shelter. Who knows, but that the intelligent may be the only ones to survive.



Speaking of diversions, we predict a mass exodus toward the Nurse's Dorm or Cobb at the first sign of a rumble. After all, it might be a long seige.

If precedent can be depended on, the large number of fallout shelter signs decorating the campus may soon decrease. The decor of dorm rooms is often improved by a sign or two, and the prestige of a fallout shelter sign would be even greater than the infamous Evacuation Route signs.

One wonders what unconscious motive the Freudians would assign to the inclination to seek security in fallout shelters. Regard for the finer sensibilities of some readers prohibits us from conjecturing here. The image of 1209 people huddled in the basement of Cobb Dorm, incubating in the heat of the blast, is too frightening. We shudder at the thought.

Somehow the conception of fallout shelters has always seemed similar to the idea behind first aid kits. They are completely adequate for the small injuries that don't really matter, but when the big hurt comes, they don't really help.

As a parting note, perhaps we ought to consider the thoughts of Poor Richard. Was it not he who said, "an ounce of protection is worth a pound of cure?" Rest assured, bretheren.

Lankford Gets Three Goals As Booters Top State, 6-1

Reston Gets 13th Tally In Victory

RALEIGH—North Carolina's soccer team took an easy 6-1 victory from an improved N. C. State bunch yesterday as Frank Lankford poured in three goals.

The Wolfpack booters covered high scorer Jim Reston all afternoon and held him to one goal, but Lankford showed the Raleigh men that Carolina wasn't a one-man show.

Reston's goal, his 13th of the season, moved him to within three goals of the school scoring record. John Ghanin set the 16-goal record in 1959. Reston still has games with Duke and Maryland left, giving him a good chance of hitting or bettering the mark.

Herman Prakke and co-captain Bob Kepner also added goals to the Tar Heel attack.

The victory gave Marvin Allen's performers a 6-1 mark for the season. This win didn't count in Atlantic Coast Conference standings, since UNC has already defeated State, 9-1, in the regularly scheduled contest.

In that first battle Reston poured five goals into the net. Almost half of his goals, six, have come at the hands of State.

The Tar Heels travel to Maryland next Monday for their next conference engagement.

UVA Is Dangerous: Cheek

By MICKEY BLACKWELL

"The University of Virginia is one of the most dangerous and experienced teams in the Atlantic Coast Conference this year," says UNC head football scout Emmett Cheek.

Speaking at Carolina's weekly press luncheon, Cheek pointed out that Virginia has eight seniors and three juniors on the starting team.

Carolina's Tar Heels invade Scott Stadium in Charlottesville Saturday for an ACC encounter.

The Chapel Hillians sport a 2-5 records, while the Cavaliers have won four and lost two—the best record in years for a UVA team at this stage of the season. If the Cavaliers win another game this season, they will have their best record since 1952 when they were 8-2.

However, the Tar Heels are favored to take this game. Carolina hasn't lost to the men from Charlottesville since 1957.

Cheek had special praise for UVA quarterback Gary Cuozzo whom he called "a good runner and an excellent passer."

Halfbacks who caught the eye of Cheek were Terry Sieg and Robert Freeman. "Both of these boys have caught a lot of passes this year," he said.

UNC head coach Jim Hickey said that he plans only one lineup change Saturday when the Tar Heels hope to bounce back from their 17-6 defeat to Clemson last week. Hickey said that Ronnie Jackson, who received a bad hip injury in the Clemson game, would not be able to play. Ron Tuthill will move up to Jackson's first-team spot.

Ageless Sam Snead Ready For Tourney

BUENOS AIRES (UPI) — Slammin' Sam Snead, admitting that "I must be coming apart at the seams now that I'm 50," promised today he will ignore a painful right foot and compete in the International trophy and Canada cup golf matches starting today.

"After all, this might be my last shot at this one so some pain isn't going to keep me from playing," Snead said. "There is not a chance in the world that I will withdraw."

Snead has a pinched nerve between the second and third toes on his right foot. He has it tightly bandaged.

"It hurts when I walk, but not when I am shooting," Snead explained. "So long as it stays that way, I'll be all right."

So far it certainly hasn't affected his game in practice rounds for the big International tourney, which will see two-man teams from 33 nations competing for the individual and team trophies.

The U. S. team of Snead and Arnold Palmer is favored. Snead fired a six-under-par 64 over the Jockey Club course in Tuesday's practice round while Palmer, playing the course for the first time, carded an even par 70.

The veteran West Virginia pro shot both nines in 32 to tie the course record set by Antonio Cerda of Argentina in the 1956 Argentine open.

Snead is defending the individual title he won last year in Puerto Rico with a record low score of 272 for the 72-hole tourney. He has shared in three of the four team titles the U. S. has won in this competition, being held for the 10th time. He paired with Ben Hogan to win it in 1956, with Palmer in 1960 and with Jimmy Demaret last year.

Palmer has not played in competition since mid-September when he appeared in the Seattle open. He has played since then, but only in exhibition and friendly practice rounds.

Russian Basketball Team Prepares For U. S. Series

NEW YORK (UPI) — If the Russians win a majority of games on their basketball tour of the United States, they will consider themselves as having passed the Americans in their own port.

At least that's the opinion of Stiepan Spandarian, coach of the Soviet Union men's team.

"As far as we know," he said, "This is the best amateur team the United States has to offer."

Spandarian said he was unaware of any controversy in the United States over the makeup of the American team, consisting of AAU and armed services personnel. Many contend that the Americans could field a better team from college players and thus be in a better position to defend their standing as the world's No. 1 basketball country.

Spandarian said his squad, which opens its eight-game tour at Madison Square Garden Thursday night, was chosen from among 24 teams which competed in the Soviet national tournament, lasting from January to August.

The United States men's teams have never lost to a Russian team. Included on the U. S. team are Gary Thompson, Mike Moran and Jerry Shipp, who toured Russia with the American team last spring.

Other top U. S. players are Don Kojis, Bobby Rascoe, Larry Pursiful, Lloyd Sharrar, and Pete McCaffrey.

Kappa Sigs, ATO Romp In Playoffs

By STUART BALL

The Fraternity Blue League moved a step closer to crowning its 1962 champion as the second round of the single elimination playoffs was completed Tuesday.

Favored Kappa Sig swamped DU, 36-0, with four players breaking into the scoring column. Dave Fletcher accounted for three TD's and Wally Kirtley, Jerry Helms, and Pete Farrior also scored in the romp. By virtue of the seedings this victory by the Kappa Sigs will pit them against the SAE's in the next round, and the winner of that contest could very well be the '62 Champion.

ATO continued its unbeaten ways as it scored its fourth straight victory. The opponent this time was St. Anthony Hall and the score was 42-8. Stu Kagel and Joe Turner each scored twice and George Shepard and Sam Simpson tallied once for ATO. Dick Grant was the lone scorer for St. Anthony.

Sigma Nu also won its fourth straight in beating ZBT 27-7. John Kouri scored twice for the Nus, and Bob Madry and Dick Bramley accounted for one TD each. Larry Fine scored the ZBT's only touchdown of the day in the second half.

In two of the closer contests of the day Sigma Chi beat Beta, 12-8, and DKE edged Zeta Psi, 7-6. In the Sigma Chi win Don Murray and Troy Smith scored the 12 winning points, and Punk Reid and Pat Wilson combined a TD and a safety for the eight losing ones. It was Gaston Caperton's point after touchdown that was the margin of victory for DKE. The PAT came after a TD by Clay Moore.

Intramural Wrestling comes to an end tonight as the finals begin at 7:30 in Woollen Gym. Matches in classes ranging from 123 pounds to the unlimited class will be held in Dorm, Fraternity, and Grad Divisions.

Highlights should be in the 147, 177, and unlimited classes of the Fraternity Division. In the 147 class John Ulfelder of Pi Lamb takes on Bob Kepner of KA in what should be a real scrap.

McKay Is Named Coach Of Week

LOS ANGELES (UPI) — The coach knew the opposition's strength lay in its defensive line, but in a maneuver designed to give his own team a psychological advantage he called for an end run on the first play of the game—and it worked.

Fleet Willie Brown sped by Washington players for six yards. Fullback Ben Wilson made two on the next play and Southern California unleshed a surprising ground attack to defeat the Huskies, 14-0, Saturday.

It possibly was USC's biggest victory in the past five years, keeping the Trojans undefeated after six games and all but clinching the treasured Rose Bowl bid of the Big Six champion.

And for that victory—and the strategic moves that made the win possible—John McKay of USC today was named United Press Internationals' College "Coach of the Week."

McKay's game plan stunned Washington. Expecting the Trojans to exploit their excellent passing attack, Washington was set up with only one linebacker and four deep men.

There will be an SP Caucus at 6:45 tonight in Roland Parker Lounge at GM. All new legislatures are urged to attend.

Chamber of Commerce Head: 'Common Market Aids U. S.'

By BILL HOBBS

GREENSBORO—U. S. Chamber of Commerce President H. Ladd Plumley said Thursday the European Common Market will benefit U.S. business by forcing it to become more diversified and efficient. He spoke at a College-Business Symposium here.

Student representatives from ten North Carolina colleges heard Plumley and other business leaders call for a revision in national tax structure to provide funds for capital investment in meeting the Common Market's "challenge".

Plumley also predicted that England's eventual entrance into the European Economic Community would cause a closer economic union between the United States and Canada.

Archie K. Davis, Director of the U. S. Chamber of Commerce and Chairman of the Board for Wachovia Bank And Trust Co. cited North Carolina's textile industry as an example of the "urgent necessity" of tax cut.

"An investment of over $3 million in a cotton mill here would bring only $50,000 annual profit. This is no competition for the Common Market," said Davis.

Plumley, a native of Massachusetts, noted that much of New England's textile economy has been replaced by new industries in fields such as electronics. "This diversification is possible in North Carolina too. Your greatest resource in this state is the talent, ingenuity and foresight of your business leaders," he said.

Dr. Charles Stewart, Director of Economic Research for the U. S. Chamber, also stressed tax revision as a means for enabling American industries to compete with Common Market businesses. "Our tax structure now discriminates aaginst the more efficient firms. We need less emphasis on income taxes and more on consumption taxation," he said.

"If the U. S. can adjust to the Common Market on a gradual basis, the greater mobility of both capital and labor it will provide can be of great benefit," Plumley said.

Ten students represented UNC at the Symposium. Other colleges represented included Woman's College, Wake Forest, Lenoir Rhyne, Guilford College, Davidson College, Catawba College, High Point College, Elon College, and Greensboro College.

I hope that I also will be able to meet presidents of dormitories and student leaders.

The Carolina Women's Council and the Panhellenic Council are to sponsor the visit and will be responsible for a coffee hour for Miss Ferguson. The coffee hour will begin at 7 p.m. Thursday Nov. 15, in Graham Memorial.

Women students who are interested in these contests may wish to talk with Miss Ferguson.

'Some Agreement,' United States Says

UNITED NATIONS, N. Y. (UPI) —The United States said Wednesday night there is "some agreement" on inspection of shipments from Cuba, to insure that Soviet missiles are being removed from Fidel Castro's island.

At the same time, Acting Secretary General Thant denied reports by the Soviet news agency Tass that he had proposed a control zone in the Caribbean to guarantee Cuba against agression.

Thant issued specific denials of this and a report by Tass that he had suggested control posts in the United States and Latin America.

For the first time, A U. S. delegation spokesman confirmed persistent reports that there was at least some measure of agreement on outgoing inspection of Cuban cargoes to insure the removal of the Soviet war bases.

The appointment was announced last night in Legislature, and the body will consider approval next week. The seat was occupied by Lanny Bridges.

Mike Chanin, chairman of the UP, said, "I feel that Harry will give TM III the kind of representation that is sorely needed in the legislature. His experience and knowledge of student government speak highly for him and are the reasons for his appointment."

Russians Suggest Test Ban Treaty

MOSCOW (UPI) — Permier Nikita S. Khrushchev announced Wednesday night the current series of Soviet nuclear test would end by Nov. 20 and suggested that now was a good time for East-West agreement on an atomic test ban.

Khrushchev, in his first meeting with the press since the Cuban crisis, told newsmen and diplomats at a reception that the world had come "very close, very close" to a thermonuclear conflict over Cuba. Both sides were ready, he said.

He admitted the Soviets had placed 40 rockets on the island for "the defense of Cuba" but said "now we have taken out our rockets and they are probably on the way back."

French Department Draws More People

(Editor's Note: This is the fourth in a series on the departments of the University.)

By JOE WILLIMAN

French as a major is drawing more people with more diversified interests than ever before. So stated Professor George Daniel of the French department.

Its diverse possibilities, said Professor Daniel, are seen by those with an eye toward diplomatic service, History, English, Law, Medicine, Comparative Literature, and even Business Administration.

In satisfying department requirements an undergraduate will follow a two-course sequence in the history and civilization of France, with the emphasis on the arts. One course in French phonetics, one in syntax and composition, one in conversation, and a three course sequence in the literature of France are also required. The sequence course in literature covers the area from the time of Charlemagne up to the latest trends and developments.

Many of the courses are taught in the language itself. This allows the student to supplement the extensive laboratory facilities with classroom practice.

At the moment there are twenty-eight undergraduates and approximately forty graduate students in the French Department. Most of these undergraduate majors choose to align their electives in diverse and unusually profitable ways.

A frequent procedure is to take a third language, usually in the Romance languages, in the 1-4 sequence or in the accelerated 14-15 sequence. In addition, there is often a tendency to take courses in Music and Art, Philosophy and Comparative Literature.

Among non-divisional electives, Psychology and Anthropology, Geography and Sociology are only a few of the fields the French major finds related to his own. But, according to Professor Alfred G. Engstrom, courses in English, Classics, and Comparative Literature are by far the most helpful in making a cohesive whole of the pattern of courses.

RTVMP Prof. Wins Radio Prize

Associate Professor John S. Clayton of UNC was recently named a winner in a national radio contest sponsored by the American Foundation for the Blind.

Dr. Clayton won with a dramatized biography titled "Unchanging Moon," judged among the top 13 among hundreds of radio plays entered in the contest. The acceptance carries with it a cash award of $200.

Clayton states that his play is based on the experience of Marshall Smith. Smith, now practicing law in Chapel Hill, was blinded by flak during World War II while flying a B-29 over Iwo Jima. He underwent numerous operations following the incident and, after separation from service, came to Chapel Hill to earn a bachelor of arts degree and to go on into the University Law School. Although blind he made Phi Beta Kappa and won numerous honors.

The play, Clayton says, revolves around the discovery by Smith that while he had become physically blind, he still was not blind to "truth and things that really matter."

The winning author teaches in the Dept. of Radio, Television and Motion Pictures. He has written and directed a number of radio and television productions.

SRO Audience Hears "Twain"

By CHUCK NEELY

Wednesday night a standing-room-only audience at Memorial Hall saw Hal Holbrook present his widely acclaimed "Mark Twain Tonight." Holbrook was brought to Carolina by the Graham Activities Board.

"It was not the missionary, or the railroad or the pioneer who tamed the frontier. It was instead America's most valuable asset — whiskey!"

With this remark opening his repertoire, Mark Twain, alais Hal Holbrook, recreated turn-of-the-century America before an enthusiastic crowd which Holbrook said was "one of the most warmly receptive and intelligent audiences I have ever encountered."

AUTOGRAPHS—Hal Holbrook signs autographs and chats with students backstage following his performance of "Mark Twain Tonight" in Memorial Hall last Wednesday evening.—(Photo by Jim Wallace).

Lashing out in Twain's inimitable manner, he dissected Americans and their ideas in a satirical fashion that brought him five curtain calls at the close of his two-hour performance.

The topics covered included politics, religion, slavery, Columbus, morals, the Old South, and indeed almost everything in the human spectrum.

With masterful style and a brilliant delivery, Holbrook succeeded rapidly in creating the illusion that he was Twain. He modulated the emotions of the audience from high humor to quiet pathos.

The make-up Holbrook uses gave ample proof of his skill in this field. Holbrook said that he first acquired his interest in this art when he was a student-actor at Denison College. He added that when he first began in the Twain role it took him 1½ hours to apply his make-up. It now takes him 3½ hours to do the job.

Holbrook has been working on "Mark Twain Tonight" since 1947. Until 1953 he worked with his wife in the act, but then he embarked on his solo career.

The time and effort he has put into his act is evident in the polished smoothness with which he portrays Twain down to the tiniest wrinkle and the slightest tremor of his fingers. His shuffling gait, white mane and gray mustache all work to convert a young man into a time-worn and world-weary cynic, philosopher and humorist.

Holbrook has been on an extensive tour of the nation, coming to Chapel Hill from Washington and leaving here for Nashville. He said that he presented "Mark Twain Tonight" in Oxford, Miss., a week after the riots there and noted that Oxford was the only place he had ever visited where the audience applauded after the "Silent Lie" section of his Huck Finn monologue. (The "Silent Lie" is a condemnation of the unspoken prejudices and lies held by people.) He said he felt a moment of fright when he began the Huck Finn dialogue, which deals with slavery and race relations, but that it was received "tremendously well." He thought there was a considerable amount of silent moderation at "Ole Miss", but that the press reports seemed to overlook it.

Holbrook has toured extensively in Europe and has received great acclamation there. He felt that Europeans tend to regard Twain not only as a great writer, but also as a citizen of the world.

In January, Hal Holbrook will return to Broadway to do a production of "Abraham Lincoln in Illinois." He has tentative plans to follow this up with another run of "Mark Twain Tonight", either on Broadway or in London.

Twain, or Holbrook, delivered the following comments Wednesday night:

On politics: "The lie cannot vanish from the earth while Congress remains in session."

On religion: "Heaven for climate — hell for society." "In America you're an infidel if you're not a Christian. In Egypt you're an infidel if you are a Christian. God lacks conviction."

On age: "If you can't get to seventy by a comfortable road, don't go."

Holbrook said that he had always heard of Chapel Hill, but that this was the first time he had ever been here. He said that one of the things that struck him about the University was the awareness and alertness of the people and the students.

New Congress: JFK Must Take Initiative

Barry Goldwater must be very unhappy this week.

The Americans for Democratic Action and fellow "liberal sects must be joyful or moderately so.

Election returns obviously show an increase in pro-Kennedy congressmen, senators and governors, and a decline in the more vocal opponents of the President's program.

There are the major, obvious instances — former JFK foe Richard Nixon sent to the political graveyard in California; election of brother Ted Kennedy to the Senate; and the overall progress of the Democratic party in Congressional races. The party managed the miracle of holding its sizable lead in both houses, even in an off-year.

Less publicized are the decline and fall of such anti-foreign aid, anti-Medicare, anti-civil rights, anti-"No Win Foreign Policy", anti-Federal spending men as Rep. Walter Judd of Minnesota . . . the go-get-Cuba man Sen. Homer E. Capehart of Indiana . . . Sen. Wylie of Wisconsin (defeated by Gaylord Nelson, friend of labor, the welfare state and the American Civil Liberties Union) . . . and, most encouraging for the cause of sanity, the defeat of three John Birch Society candidates for Congress in California—two of whom were incumbents.

Important, when seen from the context of the success of the President's future program, are the political philosophies of the major Republican victors — such generally acknowledged "liberals" or "moderates" as Gov. Rokefeller, George Romney and William Scranton. And one of the GOP's few "pleasing" prospects is the new high number of Republican Congressmen from the South. In some states of the Deep South, however, the Republican party is generally more pro-Kennedy than the Democrats.

There were obvious contradictions to this pattern — Everett Dirksen's victory in Illinois and Lister Hill's near-loss in Alabama. But these were in a minority.

* * *

The reasons for the slight pro-Kennedy swing appear to be more negative than positive — more a rejection of the irresponsible, extreme critics of the President than an endorsement of the effectiveness of his New Frontier program.

Now the initiative seems to be left, more than ever, to Kennedy and his administration. They have been given a stay of execution rather than a full pardon. The initiative is now with the President to sell his program to the people, and through them to the Congress.

Kennedy's strengthened position resulting from the apparent settlement of the Cuban crisis should put him on a stable political footing. The move is very much up to him. (JC)

The People Make Democracy

Regardless of one's political party alignment, he may take heart in the revelation of a two-party system which now actually exists in the state.

The victory of Republican Party candidates was in a real sense a victory for the people, not that in every case Republican candidates were the most qualified or that they will be better for the people than elected Democrats would have been, but rather that the people broke previous bonds of a one-party system and registered their break at the polls.

And nowhere was this break more evident than in predominately-Democratic (nearly four to one) Guilford County. Republican Candidates ran away with every county office and with the entire county's legislative delegation. Quite a few Democrats voted Republican on Tuesday last.

With this Republican sweep, the issue of a one-party system has resulted in a peculiar turnabout of political speculation. The system may be one-party, but the party has changed, and the people changed it.

Therein lies the cause for elation. The numerous attempts at political analysis have seldom before been so concerned with the true "democratic" factor of American Government—that is, the people. The people made the change, the people registered their break, the people decided, the people prevailed.

Any complacency on behalf of the Democratic Party is now securely checked. To get the people's vote you must win it, and to win it you must merit it, and only the people will decide.

The news stories, the news analysis, the informed speculation — it all centers around the concerns and actions of the people. And this gives us our democdacy. (CW)

A Private Citizen

Mr. Nixon is a private citizen now — for good.

He is 49 years old, has held the nation's second highest office for eight years and narrowly missed being elected to the Presidency. He is 49, and a lawyer in Whittier, Calif. and he has no place to go.

So he held his "last" press conference in California after his defeat by Gov. Pat Brown. It was truly a Nixon farewell—full of self-pity and vitriol.

"You won't have Nixon to kick around any longer," he told the newsmen. "For 16 years . . . you've had a lot of fun. You've had an opportunity to attack me."

On his opponent: "I believe Gov. Brown has a heart even though he believes I do not . . . I believe he's a good American even though he believes I'm not . . ."

It is sad that a man of such apparent international stature, former vice-president of the United States, should fall to such petty, bitter criticism. As Brown said, Nixon will regret that press conference "for the rest of his life" — a small ending for a small man. (JC)

Nixon, Observer Editorials Are Hit

Nixon Editorial In Poor Taste

To The Editors:

It is stated on the front page of the Tar Heel that Carolina's daily paper is in its seventieth year of editorial freedom. Although this is a proudly acknowledged fact by the University, this editorial freedom does not give Mr. Clotfelter the right to conduct a personal vendetta with its vengeful smearings and poisonous accusations.

It is for this reason that I am compelled to write this letter. After reading a bitter and completely unwarranted attack by our editor, Mr. Clotfelter, on one of America's great leaders, Richard M. Nixon, one can see why the American Legion wonders about our campus, especially when Mr. Nixon is criticized for his firm anti-communism.

Mr. Clotfelter and others seem to think that if a man isn't born with a silver spoon in his mouth, he is not qualified to serve our country. Just because Mr. Nixon worked his way through college and graduated third in his class at Duke Law School, does not mean that he is not capable of doing a good job of serving his state and country. Mr. Nixon has been offered positions with several leading law firms which would bring him much more money than the governorship. But Mr. Nixon believes he has an obligation to serve the people of California and stop Communism when and where he can.

The California campaign did turn into a mud-slinging affair, but Gov. Brown, not Mr. Nixon, was to blame. Brown has attacked not only Nixon, but has also sought to smear his wife and children. It seems a shame that a man must aim his campaign hate-slogans at children.

Mr. Nixon went on television Tuesday night only to refute the false slander excreted toward his family.

Mr. Clotfelter also fails to mention that the courts have placed restraining orders on two filth-posters put out by the Democratic Party. The Democratic Party of California is also being sued for $250,000 on libel charges.

By the time this letter is printed, the election issue will probably be settled. But the issue of whether we should aim personal attacks at a man because he is one of the few remaining citizens to take a firm stand against Communism will still remain.

Freedom Of Press: Irresponsible Use

To The Editors:

You are to be congratulted, for after reading your latest Journalistic effort, I am convinced that this year's Tar Heel is well on its way to becoming one of the worst daily newspapers in the collegiate field. I am referring to your use of the editorial page to push your pet gripes down the throats of your readers.

In Tuesday's paper you had the nerve to request that your readers pray for the victory of your political party in a state three thousand miles removed from this campus. This editorial was one of the worst examples of dirt I have ever seen in an American newspaper. When you ran out of empty accusations to throw at Mr. Nixon, you quoted him on something you said he might have said, certainly the height of yellow journalism. You also made it seem a crime that he "knew his dog" and that his wife wore a cloth coat. Crimes, gentlemen? Please re-examine your ideals before you ask the members of this university to accept them.

In Saturday's editorial column, you called the Charlotte Observer's story on visiting Peruvians, "slop". Really, fellows, haven't you anything better to campaign against than one of the South's better newspapers? Might I suggest that you look in your own backyard.

From time to time you have deemed it of prime importance to take issue against popular music, implying that a rock n' roll German's concert would be "really swell" for the high school set. If this type of music is not wanted by the students here at Carolina, then please tell me why it is only type music featured at dances sponsored by frats, dorms, and GM. When you want to push something down the student's throats, make sure that they will swallow it.

I don't think it fair to mention that pornographic magazine you published Monday, for I'm sure that by now you've realized your mistake. Better luck next time.

Please don't get me wrong, I'm not anti-Tar Heel, for I did write for your beautiful paper some during my freshman year. You have recent pencilsharpener campaign for reform around campus, as your recent pencilsharpeners campaign —good luck, Chuck, on getting your pencilsharpeners. All I'm asking is that you refrain from smearing everything in sight, and that you use your freedom of the press as the great tool which it should be, and not as the campus joke.

U. S. Can't Talk With Aggressors

To The Eitors:

I read with great interest Mr. Bullard's comments in the November 6 issue of The Daily Tar Heel.

Indeed, I must agree with his viewpoint that name taking is not really harmful—especially when the names taken are those of people protesting Russian imperialism.

Be that it may, I must take exception to some of the remarks in his rather hastily thrown together article. Just as he wanted to see "a few more facts brought to light", so do I wish to bring a few more facts to his attention.

It seems rather odd that Mr. Bullard should criticize anyone for not listening to the discussion in Hill Hall, when he himself left before the debate was half over. If he had bothered to stay a few more moments, he would have seen the picketers he objected to enter Hill Hall to listen to the bulk of the discussion which he himself omitted listening to.

If Mr. Bullard had remained at the debate, he would have heard Mr. Levchenko stick unswervingly to the Soviet doctrine of disarmament without inspection, an idea we all know to be utterly unworkable considering the past record of the broken promises and meaningless pledges of the Russians.

Did Mr. Bullard attend the reception in Graham Memorial after the debate? If he had, he would have seen a very suave and polished diplomat neatly sidestep all questions addressed to him on any of the vital issues of the day.

But Mr. Bullard failed to hear the rest of the discussion in Hill Hall. He failed to meet the guest speaker afterwards and take a more accurate measure of the man that was otherwise possible.

I read with some amusement and not a little trepidation Mr. Bullard's idea that "peace can bettter be changes of opinion" with the USSR. brought about through courteous ex-

This would normally be true in routine diplomatic exchanges.

Unfortunately however, we are dealing with a ruthless agressor whose stated intention is the complete and total Communist domination of the world. No possible doubt can exist on this subject. Time and again the Soviets have stated their goal. Their two greatest philosophers, Marx and Lenin, have made this all too clear.

In a sense Mr. Bullard was right on one point. He stated that "Those of us who heard him speak realize his honesty and sincerity in stating his desire for peace."

It can be safely assumed that Mr. Levchenko does desire peace. During the past seventeen years of "peace", hundreds of millions of people have been swept under the Communist yoke of domination. As long as this "peace" continues, they will continue their overwhelming successes.

It is time for Americans and the American government to realize that we are in a state of undeclared war and that we should take swift and appropriate action.

Wake up, Mr. Bullard! It is time for you and all of your liberal cohorts to see the light—if you can.

Out Of The Fryin' Pan . . .

Folk music is here to stay, and there is not a great deal we can do about it. Please don't misunderstand us, though. We're as folksy as the next and love nothing better than to sit around a healthy fire—or an anemic radiator—and join in on the chorus.

Folk singing on the folk level is great fun and non-fattening, thereby endearing itself to the great majority of Americans. It's Everyman His Own Leadbelly as throughout the country, pimply faced youths smash pawn shop windows for the all desired object—the guitar.

From there on, the rest is simple. Find two other guys who are strong enough to stand up and hold a banjo, start picking and singing and VOILA! you're in business.

And thus we arrive at the dilemma. Business it is, and business it's become. Today, with what we are afraid is a plethora of such groups playing about the country (all dressed in those same dirty shirts) the music rolls out and the money rolls in.

Every student worth his quality points knows of The Kingston Trio, The Brothers Four, The Highwaymen, Peter, Paul, Mary, John, Fred, Alonzo and all the rest. Suffice it to say, there are enough to go around—and then some. The point is this: how many of the audience-public at large are acquainted with the really authentic groups in this musical melange.

We thought we might list a few here, with recent recordings, so that those few interested enough, might start their collection off in the right direction.

THE SISTER'S SEVEN SING WPA CHANTS! Guest Artist Little Jimmy Dickens; Arrangement by J. Hoffa. Recorded on Whew Records, Inc.

This versatile group is not only adept musically, but each enjoys the distinction of being a Black Belt Judo Graduate of the Kodoko-San School, thus adding to their ability to sway audiences when the reception is poor and also enabling them to handle any and all mashers after the show.

They are now on concert tour throughout Southeastern Kentucky, leaving behind them a trail of smiling faces, excited audiences and a few broken bones.

* * *

THE CON'S QUARTET SING PRISON WORK SONGS. Guest Artist Dave "Bubba" Beck. Arrangements by Mickey Cohen.

Each of their concerts is an exciting experience. It is exciting because of the tremendous enthusiasm these fellows generate on stage. It is exciting because of the great verve and polish these men possess. It is exciting because they are wanted in four states, thus each concert becomes a race against the clock, one never knowing when the doors will fly open in a hail of bullets, Elliot Ness running down the aisle to join in on the chorus.

Recorded on Fink Records, Inc.

* * *

VINCE EDWARDS SINGS OPERATING ROOM BALLADS! The Artist accompanying himself on the musical scalpel. Included in this selection are such all-time favorites as: "Pass the Saw, Nurse, We've Struck Another Bone;" "Blood Pressure's Going Down, Boys, Pressure's Going Down;" and "I Didn't Mean to Break Your Wrist When I Took Your Pulse". Recorded on the Suture Label.

This particular record is rapidly climbing to the top of the Best Twenty and recently received the Outstanding Disc of the Year Award from the Saskatchewan Medical Association.

With these three to begin a collection, one can soon build a folk music library that is rich in content and just as nauseating as all the rest. Throw out those Kingston Trio sides. Delve deep into the heartland of America, and you will find yourself immersed in an art as real and sickening as the grade you got on your last quiz. Ech!

Voting Odds & Ends, Mainly Dick Nixon's

By HENRY MAYER

On Election Night every victorious (defeated) candidate told his jubliant (dejected) campaign workers (loafers) that the campaign had been a courageous fight in which all the issues had been vigorously debated. UPI, however, easily penetrated this political smokescreen with a classic typographical error: "NEBRASKA: Gov. Frank B. Morrison (D) re-elected by $5,000 over former Interior Secretary Fred Seaton."

Traditions took a real beating in this year's elections. New Hampshire voters burned their Bridges behind them by electing their first Democratic Governor and Senator in forty years. Neighboring Vermonters, always quick to jump on the bandwagon, sent a Democract to their State House for the first time in history. He undoubtedly had to run with a Whig for disguise.

Republicans countered these hijinks in New England by sending more Southern GOP Congressmen to Washington than at any other time since Reconstruction. They needed no disguises, however, most Southern Democrats sound just like them anyway.

Only in Northern Alabama did tradition prevail. There voters gave liberal Sen. Lister Hill his close margin of victory over his GOP opponent. That neck of the woods happens to be TVA country, and the floodgates really held.

Question of the Week: Will the new Governor's Mansion in California still have to have a doghouse?

Valkyries Tap 7 In Early Morning

A tolling gong and black hooded figures announced the predawn tapping of seven undergraduate women into the Order of the Valkyries, the University's highest women's honorary, this morning.

Honored were Susan Rhodes Crow of Wilson, Brooks G. Garnett of Sanford, Beverley Ann Haynes of Washington, Julie Gatewood Latane of Chapel Hill, Anne Billings Lupton of Winston-Salem, Meridith Gail Patton and Jean Carman Yoder, both of Hickory.

Limited to the top two per cent of the coed student body, Valkyries corresponds to the highest men's honorary, the Order of the Golden Fleece. Founded in 1941 Valkyries replaced Alpha Kappa Gamma, national honorary society. Tapees are recognized for the ideals of scholarship, leadership, character and service.

Current active members are Judy Clark, Judy Deal, Kay Fletcher, Jan McColskey, Margaret Ann Rhymes and Beth Walker.

Citations to the new members read as follows:

MISS CROW . . . one who's ability to stimulate enthusiasm and cooperation has made her an effective and respected leader. With quiet dignity she has made valuable contributions to her sorority and University. Her tireless efforts and imaginative ideas were realized in the improved administration of Women's Orientation. As an individual and as a leader, Miss Crow has exemplified high standards of character and sincerity. To be associated with her is both a pleasure and a challenge.

* * *

MISS GARNETT . . . one whose genuine interest and constant concern over the problems of the University and her fellow students have brought her the utmost respect and admiration of those who know her. Her sensitivity and discerning judgment are qualities that she displays in all her endeavors. Her participation in Wesley Foundation, Student Party, student legislature and orientation has revealed her purposefulness and creativity of the university community with which she has come in contact. Above all, Miss Garnett is cited for her quiet thoughtfulness and her unselfish concern for her fellow students as individuals.

* * *

MISS HAYNES . . . one whose every endeavor displays excellence, profundity, and sincerity. She has magnanimously served her dormitory, her classmates and her University while maintaining a superior scholastic average in the challenging and difficult field of nursing. Possessing unfaultering courage of her convictions, perception and true awareness of honor and integrity, and strong belief in the rights of the individual, Miss Haynes has superbly served with intensity and purpose the Honor System of our University. Her undaunted enthusiasm in giving of herself and adherence to the highest ideals enhance meaning in the lives of those who know her.

* * *

MISS LATANE . . . one who has directed her tremendous vitality and vivacious personality into every facet of university life. She has welcomed the opportunity to serve this University through the student government, the student legislature, her sorority and Panhellenic Council while maintaining high scholastic standards. As managing editor of the yearbook, Miss Latane carried out her responsibilities superbly and efficiently while gaining the respect, admiration, and friendship of all those with whom she worked. Perhaps Miss Latane's greatest contribution to this university is the completely sincere, unaffected, and humble way in which she serves.

MISS LUPTON . . . one who gives of herself to the University with strong convictions and genuineness of purpose through student legislature as clerk of the Student Party and the National Student Association. She has expressed in her contacts with foreign students and all aspects of her endeavors a vital warmth and a challenging awareness. Miss Lupton is an unceasing and dedicated worker—often without seeking the rewards of a recognized position. As an individual deeply concerned with significant student issues, she has demonstrated a courage ,insight and sense of tolerance that is rare.

* * *

MISS PATTON . . . one who has excelled in her field of academic endeavor, pharmacy, exemplified by her membership in Kappa Epsilon, national fraternity for women students in pharmacy, and Rho Chi, national pharmacy honor society. In addition to fulfilling her first responsibility to her University, Miss Patton has always given of herself to her fellow students. Those students who have been most aware of her contributions to dormitory life have expressed their respect for her by choosing her to act as president of Whitehead Dormitory this year. She is one who has displayed the highest standards of scholarship, leadership, and service.

* * *

MISS YODER . . . one who through her tireless efforts has given of herself to her University and her fellow students. In her work in student government, Miss Yoder has acted with cooperation and understanding of others, while standing staunchly by her own convictions. She has exhibited a sincere interest in her dormitory, performing gladly any tasks placed before her. Through her leadership, service and serious thinking, she has channeled her abilities into constructive contributions to all who know her.

Barefoot Runner Larry Henry Is Top Carolina Track Star

By MARTIN KRUMING

For a young man who "just happened to wander down to Fetzer Field" as a freshman, fleet-footed Larry Henry is making quite a name for himself in ACC cross-country circles.

A second year med-student from Horse Shoe, N. C., Henry never ran a mile in high school. As he put it, "I didn't know a soul when I entered Carolina and thought cross-country might be something to try."

After two "average" seasons on the Tar Heel varsity, Larry retired his senior year to enter the Carolina Medical School. But this past summer he began making serious plans to return to the course.

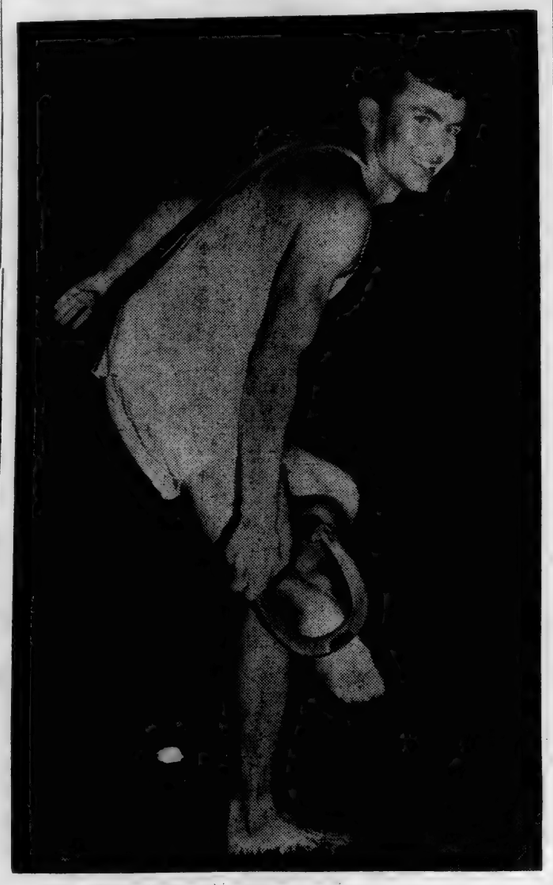
A unique quality about Henry is that he runs bare-footed. Of course this is only on the Finley Golf Course where the comforting pine needles and soft grass suit his taste.

The Henry trademark seems to be working since he has won five dual meets and placed second to Duke's Louis Van Dyck in Durham and at the State Championships in Raleigh.

Speed has always been associated with Larry.

Raised around a horse track and dog track, his father breeds and races greyhound dogs throughout the country. After the dogs are bred in Horse Shoe, they are shipped to the race tracks in Miami, St. Petersburg and Daytona Beach, Fla.

Although Larry plans to compete in indoor and outdoor track, he will call it a career after the spring season. "Medicine is my real interest right now," he commented.



Henry's best time for the four mile Finley course is 20:52. The record of 20:20.5 was set in 1959 by Duke's Jerry Nourse.

Looking ahead to the Atlantic Coast Conference championships at Carolina Monday, Henry feels that the team has a good shot at the title.

In the past Maryland has been the team to beat but Larry thinks that Duke will be the top opponent this time.

Even though Henry is a team runner of the first degree, nothing would bring him greater joy than to win the individual crown. Aside from Van Dyck, the Tar Heel strider will draw stiff competition from Maryland's John Garten and Walter Caldwell.

Without a doubt, nothing could be more befitting Larry Henry than to be the number one ACC runner on the number one ACC cross-country team.

Kap Sigs Win Murals' Rod And Gun Meet

By STUART BALL

The weather was perfect, the shooting good, and the turnout excellent. So went the Eighth Annual Rod and Gun Meet held Wednesday by the Intramural Department and the UNC Outing Club.

Participation for this year's event was way above last year's when the participants almost outnumbered the officials. Over 75 entrants were recorded in the four divisions for one of the best turnouts since the Meet's inception in 1954.

In the final team standings, Kappa Sigma came out on top with the Craige B team and Sigma Nu tied for second. The AFROTC entrant was awarded third place. Last year's champion Kappa Psi team wound up a distant 12th.

BAIT CASTING (Top Score 200) Dennis Gallager, Air Force (120), George Newman, Mangum (114), Benton McMillan, Kappa Sig (94).

ARCHERY (Top Score 324) Bob Perry, Ind. (300), Jim Welborne, Ind. (290), Clayton Burns, Kappa Sig, (238).

TRAP SHOOTING (Top Score 25) Reggie Fountain DKE (23), Benton McMillan, Kappa Sig (23), Alec McFadyen, Parker (21).

RIFLE (Top Score 300) Frank Furr, Sigma Nu (259), Charles Lail, Craige (258), Don Harris, TEP (235).

Tag Football

In the Tag Football playoffs, Law School I advanced to the finals in the Grad Division by topping Law School II, 14-7.

The end of the first half saw only a 2-0 lead for Law I but in the second period Henry Pharr broke loose for two TDs to insure the win. Fred Parker scored both the touchdown and point after for Law II.

In the Dorm Division, the Ruffin Hosers advanced to the quarter-finals by defeating Old East's Atlantics 15-4. Joe Garner and Bernie Isgett gave Ruffin a 13-2 advantage in the first half and the Hosers coasted in the rest of the way.

Navy's Bowlines got a free advance to the playoffs via a default win over the Craige Crusaders.

In the Fraternity Division, the three-way tie between Chi Phi, Phi Gam, and SPE was finally settled with Chi Phi beating Phi Gam, 2-0.

The victory earned them the dubious privilege of facing powerful Sigma Nu. The Nus were 27-7 winners in their last outing.

ATO scored a 28-6 victory over Sigma Nu in a Fraternity White League game. Four ATO's broke into the scoring column in the one-sided contest.

Bill Upchurch, Rich Reitzel, John Alexander, and Bob Whitley all tallied for the winners. Lewis Arthur scored for the NU Nus.

Carolina Selects Brown and Poteet

Senior guards Larry Brown and Yogi Poteet were named this week to co-captain the 1962-63 edition of the North Carolina basketball team.

Brown, a 5-11, 160-pounder from Long Beach, N. Y., led all varsity scorers last season with a per-game average of 16.5. Poteet, 6-1 and 180, from Hendersonville, N. C., sat out the year.

Tar Heel Coach Dean Smith couldn't have been more pleased with the choices.

Brown Is Quarterback

"Larry could very well be the best guard in the Conference," said Smith. "He scored well last year—but scoring isn't his real value. Brown is our quarterback. He calls the plays. He has what it takes: smart and quick."

Although Poteet was ineligible last season, he is far from being stale. He played almost daily during the summer in special leagues and critics who watched him tabbed him a real find.

"Yogi is one of the best shots we've had here in some time," said Smith. "I believe he will be one of the real standouts in the Conference this year. He gets the ball away as York Larese once did—swiftly and with deadly accuracy."

Ambitious Schedule

Brown and Poteet have their jobs cut out for them. The Tar Heels have an ambitious schedule and lack the big man who is so vital in controlling the backboards.

"We realize our shortcoming there," admits Smith, "but I feel we have the kind of personel who can move the ball, shoot well and take advantage of everything thrown their way. We have squad depth and excellent team speed."

Billy Cunningham and Ray Respess, two outstanding sophomores, will be counted upon to sweep the boards for Carolina. Cunningham stands only 6-4½ and Respess, 6-4, but both have terrific leaping ability.

Ten Lettermen

The Tar Heels have ten letter winners on the squad. Other than the co-captains they are Charlie Shaffer, Charlie Burns, Dieter Krause, Mike Cooke, ichard Vinroot, Art Katz, Peppy Callahan and Bryan McSweeney.

Sophomores Bill Taylor, Bill Brown and Bill Galantai should also see a lot of action.

UNC opens its schedule on the first day of December with a home engagement against Georgia.

Intersectional games on the agenda are with Kentucky, Indiana, Yale and Notre Dame.

Challenge

"It's quite a challenge," said Smith. "Kentucky should be the best in the Southeast, Indiana is considered the Big Ten's top contender, Yale is one of the Ivy League's most respected and Notre Dame should be better than at any time in the past five years."

The Tar Heels also face their ACC foes in 14 games, plus the league tournament which will be held at Reynolds Coliseum in Raleigh Feb. 28 through March 2.

Harmon, Stringer Elected Captains

John Harmon, a 202-pound guard from Statesville, N. C., and Ed Stringer, 210-pound center from Ardmore, Pa., have been named co-captains of UNC's freshman football team.

Harmon, a Morehead scholar, is termed "steady and aggressive" by Coach George Barclay. Stringer is being counted upon heavily for duty next year in the absence of Joe Craver.

Freshman President Election Ruled Invalid

Student Put On Probation By Men's Council; Coed Is Campused In Women's Trial

A student was put on probation for the rest of the school year on a campus code charge Thursday night before the men's Honor Council.

He was convicted of "ungentlemanly conduct" in having scuffled with a policeman while drunk one night. Police accused him of resisting arrest and trying to take the policeman's pistol away from him.

This was the first "open" honor council trial since a constitutional amendment, providing for such trials, was passed by a 2-1 student body vote Tuesday. No names or identifying facts may be used by reporters covering the trials.

The student pled guilty to drunkenness and scuffling with an officer, and not guilty to resisting arrest and trying to take the officer's sidearm.

The defendant said he had drunk about two-thirds of a fifth of vodka in a very short time on the night of the incident. He and a friend (who testified as material witness) were walking across campus, "talking very loud and acting very drunk", according to a Chapel Hill policeman. The defendant was said to be shouting in a foreign language.

Two unheeded warnings by a campus officer to return to their dormitories were followed by the officer and town policemen stopping the defendant and his friend, according to testimony.

The officer and policemen reported the defendant struck the policeman, wrestled with him, and then attempted to remove his pistol. He was subdued, taken to the police station and put in jail.

The defendant said he didn't remember anything about the reputed scuffling or resisting arrest. He was released on bail to Dean William G. Long the next day.

The material witness, who had been with the defendant, said he didn't think the defendant understood the policeman's demands, and that he could not be held responsible for his actions. He said the defendant did not start scuffling until after the policeman attempted to force him into his car.

The defendant said he pled not guilty on two counts, because he "didn't feel I was being placed under arrest."

The Honor Council's verdict, read by Chairman Walter Dellinger, sentenced the student to one full semester of definite probation plus the remainder of this semester.

* * *

A Junior co-ed was convicted for violation of the Campus Code, Thursday night, in the first "open trial" held by the Women's Honor Council.

The defendant pleaded guilty to a charge of having returned to her dormitory more than an hour after the weekend curfew time of 1:00 a.m. She was sentenced to Social Probation, commonly known as campusment, for ten days.

In her statement before the council, the defendant said she had been to a football game in the afternoon, had gone to a fraternity combo party, and had then gone to her date's apartment where two other couples were present.

After having a "snack" and turning on the stereo, the girl said, she and her date fell asleep. They awoke an hour after curfew and went immediately to her dormitory.

According to statements presented by the Attorney General Staff investigator, the defendant's housemother, dorm president, and dorm vice-president were waiting for her when she returned.

They had discovered her missing after having a room-check for unregistered guests.

In a statement read by the Assistant Attonery General, the defendant's house-mother said that the girl had been drinking. When the council questioned the defendant about the statement, the girl said that she had had a little bit to drink but that she was in complete control of her faculties and was not drunk.

The defendant's date was called as a material witness and gave his account of the incident. His statement closely followed that of the defendant. After being questioned as to what time he had left the party, how much he had been drinking, and who else had been at the apartment, he was dismissed by the council.

The council again questioned the defendant as to how much she had been drinking, what effect it might have had upon her falling asleep and how she had been turned in to the council. The chairman of the council then asked the defendant if she felt she had had a fair trial. The defendant said she had and was dismissed.

The council eliberated for several minutes, recalled the defendant for further questioning, and reached a verdict.

The council deliberated for seven as charged and sentenced to ten days campusment. She asked for sentence to be delayed until after the week-end, because she had already made plans, and her request was granted.

PARKING

Arthur Beaumont, chief campus security officer, served notice to residents of Craige and Ehringhaus that the one hour parking regulations in the areas next to these dorms will be enforced.

Beginning Monday, around-the-clock "police inspection" will be in effect, Beaumont said.

Beaumont also warned that parking in the traffic lanes in the Bell Tower parking lot is illegal. Beaumont lamented the fact that 150 to 200 empty spaces are available each day, yet people continue to park in the traffic lanes. He said tickets will be issued to all offenders.

O'Quinn Did Not Attend Meeting, Ruled Not In Race

In an 8 to 3 vote Thursday afternoon, the Elections Board supported an appeal by Student Party Chairman Robin Britt and ruled the Freshman Class Presidential election "invalid". A re-election has been called for Nov. 20th.

Britt appealed the election on grounds that Sandy O'Quinn, whose name appeared on the ballot, was not a legal candidate. He stated that although O'Quinn submitted a petition as an independent candidate, he should have been disqualified by the Elections Board when he failed to attend a compulsory meeting of all candidates.

Mike Chanin, University Party chairman, opposed the Student Party appeal. He held that O'Quinn was marked as present at the Election Board compulsory meeting and therefore was a legal candidate. Chanin said there is no provision in the election laws that substantiates calling for a run-off under these circumstances.

Presenting a signed statement in which O'Quinn said that he was not present at the compulsory meeting, Britt held that O'Quinn received enough votes to keep either legal candidate from getting a majority. O'Quinn received 46 votes; the election was decided by 29 votes.

O'Quinn said that he thought he had been disqualified as a candidate. He felt that his failure to submit a report of campaign expenitures was a further disqualification.

Elections Board chairman Polly Hastings, pointed out that there was no way for the board to know that O'Quinn did not attend the compulsory meeting. O'Quinn's name was answered to as present twice, and he was marked present in the roll book.

Chanin said yesterday that the UP would definitely not appeal the ruling of the Board to the Constitutional Council. He said that the UP felt that the decision of the Board was fair and that the UP has opposed the SP appeal in order to "make sure that the Board realized the importance of making sure that there was in fact, a discrepancy on the ballot." Chanin said that the UP agreed that O'Quinn should technically have not been a candidate.

Earl Johnson, who led the balloting, said, "I am interested in winning only by a fair decision and I would have felt that I was in a difficult position being elected in a contested race."

'Bad Check' Bill To Come Before SL In Next Session

By HARRY DeLUNG
And JOEL BUCKLEY

Student Legislature is given the power to establish "offenses against the student body" which shall be tried by the honor councils in a bill introduced by Ford Rowan (SP) Thursday night.

It will be considered next week.

Passing "bad checks" is made an "offense" according to the bill, and will be punishable by honor council action. The bill establishes a new minimum sentence for the men's council called "verbal reprimand."

A "verbal reprimand" does not go on the student's permanent record, and has been used by the women's council for many years.

Rowan told the DTH that the bill was necessary to prevent merchants from discontinuing the cashing of students' checks. He explained that the recent state court reforms eliminates the Justice of the Peace, who prosecuted "bad check" offenders. "Without this safeguard," Rowan said, "merchants will hesitate to cash student checks since many stores get 20 and 30 'bad checks' a week."

He added, "This is the student government's opportunity to assume responsibility for this before the administration is forced to."

Legislature passed a bill establishing an interclass council which was introduced by Bob Spearman (UP-SP) and Scott Summers SP). A constitution for the council will be drawn up by this year's class presidents and students who worked on the project last year. The deadline for this constitution is March 1, 1963.

The class council will be composed of the president of each class and another class officer to be appointed by the president. Spearman said the bill should improve the efficiency of class government.

Greater appointment power was given to the summer school student government president in a bill passed by the body. Dave Williams (SP), who introduced the action last week, said the bill would give greater opportunity to summer school students to participate in student government.

He added that it would help to prevent constitutional oversights such as last summer's illegal appointments.

The controversial "student government bus bill" was held in the finance committee. The bill, introduced by Gordon Appell (SP), would appropriate $4,650 to purchase a bus to be used by the student body.

Continued study on the use of tape recorders in the men's and women's councils has postponed consideration of an appropriation to buy two recorders for the council.

The Publications Board will consider an appropriation of $951.66 to the Yackety-Yack. Legislature will probably act on this bill next week.

The designation of a $100 appropriation made last spring sending a student to the Foreign Student Leadership Project Conference in December was referred to the finance committee.

Resident Artist, Athletics Discussed Before Trustees

"The main area of concern for the Honor System this year has been the problem of communication between the Honor Councils and the rest of the University," Men's Honor Council Chairman Walter Dellinger told the Visiting Committee of the Board of Trustees yesterday.

"After considering the problem," Dellinger said, "the conclusion was reached that the sucess of the Honor System could best be served by making the proceedings of the Councils known to the entire student body through depersonalized accounts of all hearings, published in the student newspaper with no names mentioned."

Dellinger's report was one of eight given to the Visiting Committee of the Trustees by student leaders at a noon luncheon at the Carolina Inn, presided over by student body president Inman Allen.

Tar Heel co-editor Chuck Wrye presented a statement on athletics in which he said, "While feeling that the benefits of representative intercollegiate participation are many and varied . . . we generally favor doing away wtih the temptation for further scandals and for the ugly face of professionalism as it appears in amateur athletics." Attacking "any tournament, any event or system which fosters and nourishes corruption," Wrye said,.

"We would like to express an endorsement of what we consider to be a necessary and thoughtful approach to the continued existance of properly oriented participation in intercollegiate athletics."

Of the 12 members of the Visiterally favor doing away with the attendance at the meeting. They included Hill Yarborough, chairman; Mrs. E. M. Anderson, Judge H. L. Riddle; Thomas B. Upchurch, Mrs. J. B. Kittrell, and Thomas O. Moore. As each report was read, members of the committe asked questions of the representative group of campus leaders.

Other reports were given by Fred Wedler and Larry McDevitt, on academics; by Bob Spearman on a proposal for a student co-op; and by Inman Allen, on fraternity problems. Reports on social facilities and transportation facilities were not given due to a lack of time. Judy Clark, Ann Lupton, and Tony Harrington attending the meeting as observers.

In a report on the artist-in-residence proposal, Gil Stallings and Mike Lawler stated that "The University community must attempt to awaken and develop in the individual the capacity for original, creative, and independent thinking." After outlining the steps that have been taken to bring about the artist-in-residence program, the report added that "This opportunity is one of the most valuable educational aspects of this University."

Following its meeting here each year, the Visiting Committee reports to the full Board of Trustees on the areas of student concern expressed by campus leaders.

Catholic Education Topic Of Lectures

"The Role of Catholic Education in American Democracy" and an explanation of the function of the Carnegie Foundation Study of Catholic Education in American Life were the topics of the tenth in Gaston lectures held here this week.

Professor William H. Conley, Director of the Carnegie Foundation Study of Catholic Education in American Life, was introduced by Dr. William Cartwright, chairman of the Department of Education at Duke University.

Conley showed by statistics that Catholic schools are numerically the most important of the American private schools. In 1960 Catholic schools were educating one-eighth of total student enrollment.

"Any institution that is responsible for the education of one-eighth the students must not be ignored," he stated.

The Carnegie study has a two-fold plan. It will attempt to show the American public a profile of Catholic primary and elementary education. Included in the study will be an accurate picture of the objective of Catholic education.

A depth study in isolating particular problems in Catholic education is the second part of the research.

Concerning private or Catholic schools in American democray, Conley stated, "In an pluralistic society such as we have today, a multiple school system is a necessity. A monopolistic education system is not democratic."

"In a democratic society parents have a right to choose the type of education for their children," Conley said. He added that since parents have the obligation to educate their children, they must have the right to fulfill this obligation.

A discussion period was held after the address.

Candidate Won Job, But Lost Her Skirt

The other day a pretty blonde girl came into the office and announced in a plaintive voice, "I've lost my skirts."

Of course everyone looked up, expectantly, hopefully, predictably; but alas, the situation seemed to have been remedied: the pretty blonde girl had on blouse, sweater, and skirt. She really had nothing to complain about.

The plot thickens: "I lost a green one in Y-Court and a blue one in the Pine Room."

This raised some eyebrows. We all know about the strange goings-on in Y-Court, but we honestly didn't think that the Pine Room was getting like that! Is nothing sacred?

The logical question, of course, was "How?"

"I was out campaigning," the pretty blonde explained.

Aha, we all thought, politics is a dirty racket and the price of success is high, and here, obviously, is a girl who has lost her skirts in Big Time Politics.

Her name, she told us, is Bonnie Hoyle and she was running for secretary of the junior class. She got the office, but we don't know about the skirt.

"We tacked up the skirts with lettering on them, because we thought that would attract more attention," she said.

"Yes," we confirmed, "skirts even without lettering often attract attention."

Bonnie Hoyle, size 10, said that she had put the skirts up — on the walls at Y-Court and the Pine Room — before 11 p.m. Wednesday, and they were both gone at 9 a.m. Thursday. "I've lost my skirts," she wailed.

Someone pointed out that the skirts were not really lost simply because Bonnie Hoyle didn't know where they were; somebody knew where they were, but that somebody wasn't telling.

Someone else pointed out to size 10 Bonnie Hoyle that obviously a boy had taken them — no girl, even one who would rather steal the skirts than buy duplicates — would have gone to the trouble of scaling the ivy. Ergo, the culprit was male, and also ergo, no number of "LOST" items in the Daily Tar Heel would convince the boy that he really ought not to have those green and blue skirts up on the walls of his dorm room.

"What am I going to do?" said Bonnie Hoyle.

We suggested that she think of a likely story to tell her mother; also that she drop out of politics before it did further damage to her wardrobe or her political career.

Moral: If you're going to play at politics, you've got to accept public exposure.

Leading Pianist To Play Nov. 13

Pianist Grant Johannesen, who will appear here Nov. 13 at Memorial Hall, sponsored by the Chapel Hill Concert Series, is distinctive among present-day keyboard artists.

He is one of that handful of major pianists who is not of the "bright young talent" group under thirty-five nor a member of the "grand old man of music" school over fifty years of age.

Critics are especially aware of the existence of Johannesen, who has caused them ot remark in print on this strange state of musical maturity. In reviewing a recent Johannesen performance in New York, the HERALD-TRIBUNE, obviously relieved at not having to cope with still another "bright young talent," applauded his "talent, training, a mature mind and mature feelings evident everywhere in harmonious operation."

Johannesen has studied in France with Robert Casadesus and Nadia Boulanger and made his New York debut in 1944.

Johannesen recently returned from his first season as an artist in residence of the famed Aspen Music Festival, and is at work on two recordings. He is scheduled to perform the complete Beethoven Concerto Cycle with the Salt Lake Symphony in two cities.

Next week's concert will be free to students with UNC ID cards.

Campus Unity: A False Issue

One of the most familiar lamentations about student life concerns the so-called "dormitory-fraternity split" and the lack of unity in the student body. Countless solutions are suggested and tried, but none seem to substantially alleviate the "problem." Campus-wide social affairs, dormitory-fraternity-sorority sporting events and other traditional answers have a beneficial function, but unity cannot, and perhaps should not, be achieved in an institution of this size.

Unity is essentially a false issue; no one can unite nine thousand into one homogeneous group. The problem is an individual problem, and the solution lies with individual students and their attitudes toward the educational process.

One can very roughly divide Carolina students into four admittedly-unsatisfactory categories, none of which are on speaking terms with the others. The eight or ten especially prestigious fraternities; the second-line, less-prestigious fraternities; the average North Carolina-native dormitory man; and the artsy-craftsy intellectual-Harry's types represent the basic breakdown. There are more than a few people in each of these groups who have a great deal to offer and friendship with whom can be a rewarding and broadening experience. And yet communications between students in different groups is almost non-existent. The pressure is all in the other direction and pushes students toward a stifling, almost incestuous intellectual inbreeding and circumvention of their contacts.

Fraternities to a large extent are contemptuous of the rural-dormitory type. The latter, in turn, tend to be resentful of and bitter toward fraternity men. Even the "in-group" fraternities and the less-prestigious "out-group" fraternities are somewhat divided. Almost the entire campus, both dorms and fraternities, distrust and shun the so-called "Harry's clique" and the other creative students in the performing arts, as well as painters, writers, and student journalists. (One sweet sorority girl said she once went down to Harry's "to look at all the funny people.") The creative students, to be fair, tend (in self-defense, perhaps) to cut themselves off from the others here and one wonders how they can comment upon a society with which they fail to communicate.

The end result is that most students go through four years here knowing only students who are essentially "just like themselves." The answer does not lie in campus-wide social events and the like. Neither is it being proposed here that the whole Chi-O House take a field trip down to Harry's or that the residents of the Deke House and Stacy Dorm rush to Y-Court and embrace with tears of joy like Russian and American soldiers at the end of World War II. What is being timidly suggested is that more students should realize that the confrontation of diversity is the essence of an education. Because of the range of social backgrounds, attitudes, and personalities in Chapel Hill, four years at this University can be the most broadening and stimulating experience of a student's life. This educational process can take place, however, only if the student overcomes his fear of those who are different and seeks friends among all segments of the student body.

NCAA-AAU Confusion

The continuing feud between the National Collegiate Athletic Association and the Amateur Athletic Union should be of vital concern to every person even remotely interested in the future of athletics in this country. The issues are broad and the effects of any forthcoming agreement are going to be far-reaching.

Although the NCAA, in effect, trains and turns out the great majority of Olympic-bound athletes, the AAU is the only body in the U. S. which can certify our athletes for Olympic competition. And this situation may play havoc with any future representation of the U. S. in international sports competition.

The AAU continues to demand absolute "amateurism," and in doing so seems to lose its head about what in fact constitutes a bridging of the gap between the true amateur and one who "plays for pay." But, clumsy though they be, the AAU apparently means well, it's just that they don't function too smoothly. And this real inability to get things under control has, in no small way, brought about a revolt within the ranks of amateur athletes in many sports.

Although track has long been the area of greatest concern, the latest AAU stand, that no individual who attends college on an athletic scholarship is an amateur—and therefore is not eligible for international amateur competition—will cripple U. S. representation in events running from basketball to crew, and will alienate individuals ranging from Jerry Lucas to the drunkest Tar Heel fan.

If such a ruling were to be put into effect, the 1963 Pan American Games and the 1964 Olympic Games would play host to a pathetically token United States contingent. (CW)

Church Responsible For 'Ole Miss' Mob

By The Mississippi Methodist Advocate

Today, in trying to lay the blame on everything and everybody for the riot at Ole Miss, which wounded 166 Federal marshals, killed two people and wrought havoc on the campus of a great university, everyone is being blamed. The Mississippi Methodist Advocate was accused of having blood on its hand for inciting the riot.

Who really is to blame? All of us are guilty! We in the church are to blame because we allowed such a force of hate to build up in our state. We have known for eight years that there were pressure groups who boasted that if the people did not conform and cooperate with them, they would use social, political and economic pressures. In the name of patriotism, the groups thrived until they ha dcontrol of our social, political, and law-making forces. They worked through so-called anticommunism campaigns to get our citizens to distrust the Church, the United States government and the humanitarian agencies of the United Nations.

We knew these forces were building up but we dared not say or do anything about it; too many good people were involved, church members, leaders in society. Public opinion, which had been carefully built up through the medium of press, radio, and television, convinced the people of Mississippi that they were absolutely right. If what they learned through the seminars collided with the teaching of Christ and the church, then they were convinced that church and Christian teachings were taboo. Economic pressure was applied to church literature while hate literature had a field day.

Yes, we protested. We protested the coming into our state (at the tax-payers expense) of certain individuals who, in the name of patriotism, went into our schools and colleges sowing seeds of suspicion against the church; because we protested, we were called communists. We protected enactment of a law aimed at The Methodist Church in Mississippi and were called subversive. We protested enactment of discriminatory voting laws and were called racists and told the church had no business being concerned with political matters. We protested the events which ultimately led to the rioting at Ole Miss and we were told the shed-blood was on our hands.

The Bible teaches that "whatsoever a man sows, that shall he also reap." This has been amply demonstrated on the campus of Ole Miss. The flames of sectionalism were fanned: The prejudices and fears of misinformed people were appealed to; the passions of youth seeking a cause were aroused; open defiance and disdain for due process of law sowed seeds of anarchy which resulted in violence.

Yes, the church is partly responsible for what happened at Ole Miss. Because we were not more vocal and outspoken; because we were not true to our Christian Convictions, we aided anarchy and the type of events upon which communism feeds. By choosing to do nothing, we have permitted political pressure groups to chart our course and have allowed the voice of moderation and goodwill to be completely ignored.

Christ lost his life because of a build up of hate and evil forces which led to mob violence. The Church will lose her life whatever she does now. The crucial questions are whether she loses her life for Christ's sake and finds it in this hour of crisis or whether she really loses her life in pious platitudes and innocuous activity in a day which demands courageous witness.

Corvette Owner Was Gentleman

To The Editors:

In order to finish fairly something that I started and to tell the whole tale, I am forced to modify my last letter. I complained about the owner of a Corvette in such a manner as to purposely picture him as a cocky, rich kid with blatant disregard for human life. However, on the evening of the day that my letter appeared, this gentleman (and I use this word in its literal meaning) came to my room, quite embarrassed, to apologize for his speeding and to promise that he would, in fact, slow down from now on. Which causes me to point my finger at myself. I've been driving for about six years now, and there certainly have been times when I have been less than careful. Maybe I wouldn't have put a big dent in my father's car by way of a little pole sticking out of the concrete at the Durham ABC parking lot if I hadn't been in such a hurry to get to the South Carolina game. I do try to stay away from pedestrians, but if I'm less than 100% careful at any time that I'm behind the wheel then I'm not careful enough.

I have also been conforming to the status quo when I walk on that road. Sure, everybody does it, but that's no excuse for me. To make me look worse, there is a more-or-less dirt sidewalk. I haven't been using it because I don't like to get my shoes dusty, but I should start using it and maybe circulate a petition to get it paved. So, in the meantime, to add to my plea to all drivers, here's a thought for the pedestrians. You do risk getting hit when you walk in the road. It won't feel every good to be able to say from a hospital bed or heaven, (or the other place), "You were driving too fast."

New Left Member Ends Membership

To The Editors:

I have been moderator of the Disarmament Seminar sponsored by the New Left, and also on the ex- with the members of the New Left I think the New Left deserves commendation for sponsoring this discussion and I hope that the seminar will continue; however, I am today resigning from the New Left, and would like to state publicly my reasons for doing so.

I have enjoyed my association withthe members of the New Left executive committee and sincerely wish them success in their program of promoting discussion of vital issues. Theirs is not an easy task, epecially when they are burdened with unfounded charges, suspicion, hysterical accusations. My main purpose is to promote discussion of disarmement and to examine ways in which an individual who is opposed to the armaments race can make his protest effective. I feel that my aims will be better served if I am associated with a group whose primary concern is the abolition of nuclear armaments and the promotion of world peace, instead of a discussion group whose aim is the discussion of many topics.

I would be interested in meeting persons with similar views with the aim of establishing a group similar to the Peace Centers that are in existence in other cities and at other universities. I can be contacted after six PM at 942-4370 or at my apartment, 210 Spring Lane.

Corn & Big Wind Ah! Dubyu Dubyu

The identification, a week or so scholarship has led him astray. Perhalves of a schizoid personality seems to me to ignore certain established anthropological facts. I have only the highest respect for the scholarly acumen and the professional competence of Mr. C. K. Bush, but I feel that in this instance the will-o-the-wisp of Freudian scholarship has eld him astray. Perhaps an examination of The Golden Bough or some similar work might have set his feet upon a different path.

Recent research for the Guggenheim Foundation, by Drs. Barnaby Googe and Ulpian Fulwell, into the religious rites of the Leehrat Indians provides us with another explanation. The Leehrat Indians, the original inhabitants of Chapel Hill, had two principal deities. One was Ohsee, the Goddess of Corn, and the other was the God of the Hurricane (or the "Big Wind" as the Leehrats expressed it), Dubyu-Dubyu. The Leehrats worshipped both of them with remarkable similar rites. A single hymn was often chanted to them at the festival of the Summer's Ending. In part, it reads:

Protect us from the Big Wind!
Send us no more windy messages,
Oh, Dubyu-Dubyu!
Send us fresh corn,
Oh mighty Ohsee!
That last batch was mouldy.
(Translation mine)

The various articles in the Tar Heel which elicited Mr. Bush's conjecture also attracted my attention. After close investigation I discarded my original belief that both O. C. and W. W. were variants of a popular Phoenician solar myth. I am now convinced that even a cursory examination of the writings in question would reveal their relationship to the Corn and Wind rituals.

Thus, we find that these articles stem not from the vapors of one disordered brain, but from the activities of a cult which has continued in Chapel Hill until the present day. There can be little doubht that the votaries of Ohsee and Dubyu-Dubyu still celebrate their pagan festivals on the shores of Hogan's Lake.

Of the obvious parallels between the names of the two deities and the signatures of the articles I need say nothing, except to remind Mr. Bush that the customary southern pronounciation of W.W. is "Dubyu-Dubyu." And the Leehrats were, after all, southern Indians.

Man Should Not Retreat To Cave

To The Editors:

The state benevolently offers you a fallout shelter from the nuclear crisis which is an escape mechanism prepared for the many who would shrink their world into a narrow sphere of self protection, though the chances are that you may have to fight your neighbor for the very air in the hole, even if they are federally ventilated. The alternative would be for you as an individual to maintain those principles which could carry man from his twentieth century cave.

Let us not retreat to our caves as our prehistoric ancestors did. Rather, while man has not yet split himself with the atom, stand firm in our unanimous truth that man is able if he would but rely upon his noblest nature under his God to ascend into a relationship with other men which would be barren of the main self annihilating force, which mass war is.

Have we lost our connection with ourselves to the extent that we forget that totally in this sphere of life each man is finally dependent upon the welfare of all for his own success?

Your life, as mine, is in the balance of each of our energies. Let us stand poised not with threats of mass unguided power, but with [illegible]vidual, undivided attention to those concepts which lie submerged in the recesses of our consciences. Action on these, your own noblest motives can not go unfulfilled eternally.

I humbly beg your pardon if this tiny essay envades your intimate, personal privacies, but I hope the unwanted guests we all must face are no more ferocious than my sparce presumption of your time.

Students Unready For Diplomacy

From The New York Times

Most American college students interested in diplomatic careers are too ignorant of their country to tell its story abroad. This is the warning sounded by R. Smith Simpson, a retired Foreign Service veteran, after an extended study of Foreign Service candidates.

Mr. Simpson calls the great majority of college graduates "wholly unprepared for diplomatic work." He says they are handicapped by "an abysmal ignorance of so elementary a subject as the geography of the United Statees, deficient in a knowledge of even contemporary American culture" and "pitfully uninformed" on basic questions of the society in which they live.

The critical report was prepared for the November issue of The Foreign Service Journal, monthly publication of the nonprofit, nongovernmental Foreign Service Association.

Mr. Simpson joined the Foreign Service in 1944 after holding Government positions in the National Recovery Administration and the War Shipping Administration. He held diplomatic posts in Brussels, Athens, Mexico Ctiy and Bombay and retired last spring after a year's work as Deputy Examiner for the Foreign Service.

In reviewing the deficiencies of college students intent on entering the Foreign Service, he said that "few could even place accurately the principal rivers" of the United States and "few could name the principal seaports."

The report said that college graduates usually could "only guess at the population, labor force and gross national product of their country," and many did not know what constituted the gross national product.

Mr. Simpson stressed that United States representatives abroad are often asked cultural questions, sometimes with the implication that "America is very materialistic." Most of the candidates he interviewed appeared ill-equipped to dispel that impression.

"Many could not name a single (American) painter, a single composer, a single philosopher, other than contemporary," the report says.

While most candidates could name a few poets and generally produce the names of Hemmingway and Faulkner among novelists, the report declares that "under questioning this familiarity proved to be shallow; it did not survive such discussion."

Lack of information about such social problems as juvenile delinquency, the causes of a high divorce rate, the issue of civil rights "raise doubts of our fitness for leadership" among foreigners, Mr. Simpson warns.

He called it "baffling" that few of the young people who thought they wanted to enter the Foreign Service as a career had given any thought to the meaning of diplomacy or "had any idea what it was." He found deficiencies both in the students' own preparation and in the universities' efforts.

"Our universities appear to be hypnotized by the machinery and formulation of foreign policy: consideration of its execution is wellnigh nonexistent," he said.

He charged that "American education is letting us down," adding that "an educational system that turns out graduates lacking the simplest geographical and sociological knowledge about their country is not an adequate educational system."

"Universities that graduate men and women with only a smattering of knowledge of their nation's history, its governmental structure and political system and its cultural evolution, as well as of the international political system, do not merit the name of universities," he declared.

Mr. Simpson conceded, however, that the quality of candidates interviewed by him may have been lower than the average of their classmates. He said that the State Department and Foreign Service may no longer be able to attract "their share of the cream of college graduates."

He cited as a partial reason for this that the Foreign Service was no longer "the principal avenue for dedication to constructive work abroad" since nongovernmental and industrial overseas programs have multiplied.

The glamor of other professions, particularly science and technology, has also reduced the number of outstanding applicants for diplomatic careers, the report added. It urged the State Department to abandon the "dragnet" approach to recruiting and to outline instead more precisely the educational preparation and personal qualifications, aptitudes and skills required.

Mr. Simpson reported that, in comparison with recruiters for other Federal agencies, a State Department representative who recently visited collge campuses was described by students as timid, evasive and inadequately informed on the current crises facing the United States.

Duke Ambassadors Harlequins To Play Sunday Afternoon

Graham Memorial will present the "Harlequins" and the "Duke Ambassadors Combo" Sunday afternoon from 2:00 to 4:00.

If weather permits, the concert will be held on the lawn in front of GM, but in case of bad weather, GM has reserved Carroll Hall.

The Harlequins "swing like mad as well as achieve a beautiful blend on the ballads," according to the Harcap Co., producers of the group's first recordings.

The Duke Ambassadors Combo is a smaller group formed out of the band of the same name, which has performed here several times.

According to a G.M. Entertainment Committee spokesman, the concert, which will be free and open to the public, will mark the first time the groups have played together for the benefit of a Carolina audience.

Communist Division Widens Over Policy

VIENNA (UPI)—The rift dividing international communism widened Friday in complicated infighting involving the Kremlin, Albania, Communist China, Yugoslavia, Italy and Fidel Castro.

The main protagonists were Premier Nikita S. Khrushchev and Chinese Communist chief Mao Tze-tung, now reported farther apart than ever in the ideological struggle that has divided the two Communist giants for years.

The main dispute revolved around Khrushchev's policy of "peaceful co-existence" as opposed to Mao's theories that war between communism and capitalism not only is inevitable but desirable in belief the numerical strength of China would win out.

Radio Peiping Friday began the second week of what on the surface was a "hate America" campaign but which included sharp barbs at the Soviet Union and implied that Khrushchev's decision to withdraw missiles from Cuba amounted to a new Munich.

Albania, aligned with China in the dispute, added new fuel Friday when Radio Tirana broadcast a speech by top Albanian politburo leader Hysni Kapo attacking Khrushchev, Yugoslav President Tito Italian Communist party leader Palmire Togliatti for their "anti-Marxist" attitude.

Widened Targets

nIformed observers here said Kapo's speech, made two days ago, appeared to mean the Albanian Stalinists had widened their targets among the Communist bloc nations and that other Communist leaders may come under attack.

Obervers said the Kapo speech was partly just another shot fired in the complicated in-fighting, but the Chinese Communists apparently were using the Albanians as a sort of advance guard in the Khrushchev-Mao feud.

Kapo said Togliatti, whose party is the second largest in Italy, is bound hand and foot to Khrushchev and "the Italian Communists obediently carry out what Khrushchev dictates in Moscow." He added that Khrushchev is leading an "anti-Marxist life and .. . fighting against Marxism-Leninism."

Kapo said Khrushchev's cooperation with Tito is a "danger to the whole socialist camp" and that Tito has fomented the differences between Communist China and the Soviet Union.

Court Denies Cancer Suit

PITTSBURGH (UPI)—A federal court jury Friday absolved the Liggett & Myers Tobacco Co. of blame for the lung cancer contracted by a Pittsburgh carpenter who said he got the disease from smoking Chesterfield cigarettes.

The panel of eight women and four men deliberated 11 hours before reaching a decision in the court of Judge John L. Miller. The $1,250,000 damage suit against the firm was brought by Otto Pritchard, 64. The test case, Pritchard's second against the company, had attracted national attention.

Earlier Judge Miller had dismissed Pritchard's suit for $1 million in punitive damages. The case continued with the damages reduced to $213,000.

The jury received the case Thursday but failed to reach a decision and was locked up for the night. Deliberations resumed Friday morning and the verdict was announced at 3:15 p.m. EST.

James P. McArdle, counsel for Pritchard, termed the verdict "a divided victory."

"We have established for the world that smoking is the cause odf cancer," McArdle said.

William Eckert, an attorney for Liggett & Myers, said he had "the greatest confidence in the American public that comprises our juries."

"This is an excellent example of the integrity of the American people," he added.

Pritchard, who underwent surgery in 1953 for removal of his right lung, was not in the courtroom when the verdict was announced. His original suit against the company in 1960 ended when Judge Miller directed the jury to return a verdict of acquittal. He was granted a new trial by the Third Circuit Court of Appeals.

McArdle, who has not yet decided whether to appeal, said Pritchard "assumed a risk by smoking."

NEW SCHOLARSHIPS

Two national scholarships for senior college girls are offered for 1963-1964 by the Katharine Gibbs Secretarial School. These awards were established in 1955 as a memorial to Mrs. Katharine M. Gibbs, founder and first president of the school.

Each scholarship consists of full tuition ($935) for the secretarial training course, plus an additional cash award of $500, totaling $1,435. Winners may select any one of the four Gibbs schools for their training—Boston, New York, Monclair, or Providence.

Winners are chosen by the Scholarship Committee on the basis of college academic record, personal and character qualifications, financial need, and potential for success in business.

Paintings Upstairs Showing New Artists

A six-week art show by Ray French of Indiana, Patricia deGorgoza of Detroit, and George Kachergis of Chapel Hill, opened at the Paintings Upstairs Gallery in Chapel Hill this week.

Owner Mrs. James Haslem stressed that the new works of these artists will be run continually during the show and that additional offerings from the regular gallery collection would go on display daily. The only commercial art gallery in the Triangle area, Paintings Upstairs has begun a new program to bring quality art to this region. Original works are offered at reasonable prices, most being between $10 and $50. The works of 25 to 30 artists, both from this region and from across the country, are being sold regularly through Paintings Upstairs.

French, a member of the art faculty of DePauw University in Indiana, is showing etchings in the current exhibit. Kachergis, a member of the art faculty at UNC, has oil paintings on display. Watercolors by Miss deGorgorza are also on display. Her works have been shown throughout the United States and Europe and are owned by the Louvre, the Victoria and Albert Museum in London, and the Boston Museum of Fine Arts.

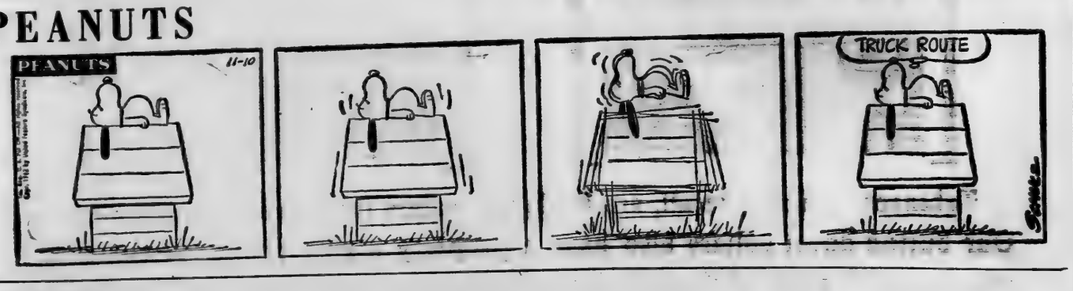
Pall Mall Presents~
GIRL WATCHER'S GUIDE

HIGH-FLYING GYM-DANDY

CAMPUS TYPE IV

Few sights in all the world of girl watching are as breathtaking as the unexpected observation of a Gym-Dandy in midair maneuver. Plato might well have had the Gym-Dandy in mind when he wrote, "When a beautiful soul harmonizes with a beautiful form, and the two are cast in one mould, that will be the fairest of sights to him who has the eye to contemplate the vision."

Although the Gym-Dandy is a joy to behold even while tightening the laces of her sneakers, she must be seen in action to be fully appreciated. The same thing is true of a Pall Mall. It's a long, firm cigarette in a handsome package, but it must be tasted to be fully appreciated. Try Pall Mall and see.



Pall Mall's natural mildness is so good to your taste!

So smooth, so satisfying, so downright smokeable!

Frosh Face Duke Monday In Bid For 7th Victory

Monday is a big day for Coach Bob DeVoogt's freshman soccer team.

On that day, the Tar Baby yearlings will travel to Durham to meet Duke and a win will insure the frosh of the high point of success—an undefeated season.

So far this year DeVoogt's booters have swept past six opponents and all but one were undefeated at game time.

The Tar Babies have beaten Virginia twice, Guilford, Appalachian State, Warren Wilson and Duke for their 6-0 record.

The Duke win was a close 4-3 affair on Fetzer Field and the return engagement may be a tough hurdle for the frosh.

Linemen Drew Murphy and Mac Skelly have been a profilic goal-scoring pair in leading the frosh offensive attack.

The two have accounted for 16 of the 28 UNC goals with Murhpy getting 9.

Murphy has scored nine goals while Skelly is close behind with seven. The two have accounted for 16 of the 28 Carolina scores

'Horse Of Year' May Not Start

LAUREL, Md. (UPI) — Kelso, horse of the year in 1960 and 1961, may not start Monday in the $125,000 Washington D. C. International if the turf is "soft," trainer Carl Hanford indicated Friday.

Rain was forecast for this evening and into the night, making it a strong possibility that Kelso would remain in the barn, leaving Carry Back and Beau Purple to carry American hopes in the global classic.

Ohio State, Purdue and Auburn—a classy trio of football teams—bowed last week as a rash of upsets swept the nation.

After losing Big Ten games to Wisconsin and Purdue, Iowa's Hawkeyes turned on the Ohio State Buckeyes and swamped them, 28-14. Illinois ended a 15-game losing streak by surprising a solid Purdue team and Florida stunned Auburn's previously undefeated Tigers.

Prediction-wise it wasn't a bad week. This column missed on the three upsets and on losses by LSU, Maryland and Tulane. Last week's record was 17-6-1 (.739), bringing the season mark to .713.

The final four weeks of the football season usually bring a lot of surprises. Frustrated teams which have lost a number of close contests suddenly jell and knock off a two or three-touchdown favorite. Today's games will not be without upsets.

North Carolina's Tar Heels should have little trouble with Virginia. The Cavaliers may not play dead as they have in the past, but the Tars are ready for the easiest game on their schedule. NORTH CAROLINA 34, VIRGINIA 14.

The Big Atlantic Coast Conference battle will be over at Durham today. Maryland has Dick Shiner, the ACC's top passer. The Blue Devils are quarterbacked by Walt Rappold, the number five passer, and Gil Garner, number eight. Both teams are hoping to rebound from last week's losses. Duke will. DUKE 21, MARYLAND 14.

A few weeks back I said that Wake Forest would eventually win a game, but Virginia Tech showed a lot of power defeating Tulane last week. It looks like a long season for the Deacs. VIRGINIA TECH 22, WAKE FOREST 14.

North Carolina State, the hard-luck team of the ACC, is due to win one. They've been losing close games since they topped UNC back in September. STATE 14, SOUTH CAROLINA 10.

Clemson has the easiest assignment in the conference. Furman, even at home, shouldn't come close. CLEMSON 28, FURMAN 6.

Outside the ACC, I'll start things off with a bang. George Mira and Miami will play at Alabama today. Away from sunny Florida the Hurricane usually isn't tough, but in the upset of the week: MIAMI 16, ALABAMA 14.

In the midwest, the nation's top team, Northwestern, travels to Wisconsin. Indiana almost cut down the Wildcats last week. Wisconsin, in another upset. WISCONSIN 28, NORTHWESTERN 14.

The top game in the southeast finds Rice playing at Arkansas. The Owls tied Texas two weeks ago and also tied LSU early in the season. But the Razorbacks can handle them. ARKANSAS 22, RICE 8.

Upset-minded Stanford hosts Southern Cal in the west coast's feature. The Indians have ambushed enough good teams for one season. SOUTHERN CAL 24, STANFORD 14.

Around the nation:

ARMY 28, OKLAHOMA STATE 13. Dietzel's bowl talk gets a little louder.

NAVY 34, SYRACUSE 20. The Notre Dame loss didn't slow down the Middies.

PENN STATE 27, WEST VIRGINIA 7. Being the king pin of the Southern Conference doesn't mean much.

MICHIGAN 21, ILLINOIS 7. Bump Elliott's Wolverines over Pete Elliott's Illini.

OHIO STATE 28, INDIANA 14. The Buckeyes will have to finish strong to have a good record.

MINNESOTA 21, IOWA 17. After manhandling Michigan State, the Gophers could be unstoppable.

MICHIGAN STATE 22, PURDUE 21. These two teams can really play close games. The Spartans get revenge for a 7-6 loss last season.

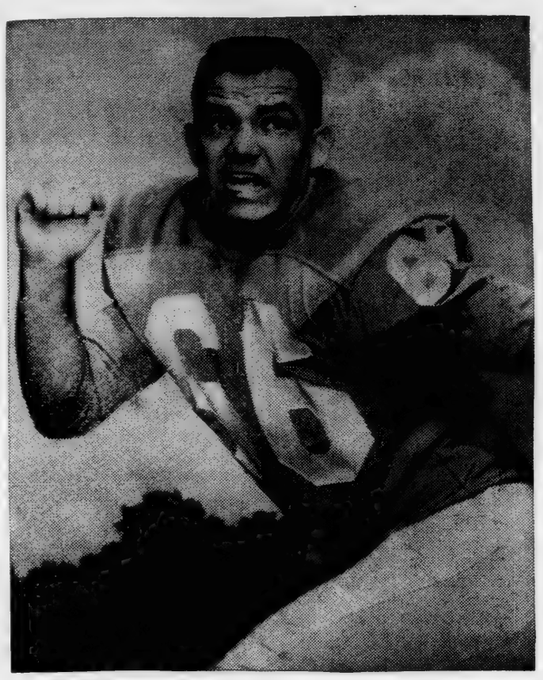
NOTRE DAME 28, PITT 7. The Irish warm up for North Carolina's Tar Heels.

GEORGIA TECH 28, FLORIDA STATE 7. The Engineers are pointing to Alabama next week.

FLORIDA 21, GEORGIA 15, The Gators are heading for a Gator Bowl bid.

LSU 17, TCU 7. Keeping the Bayou Bengals out of a bowl game will be difficult.

UCLA 21, AIR FORCE 6. West Coast football is the best it's been in years.



AUBURN 21, MISSISSIPPI STATE 10. No longer unbeaten, the Tigers can settle down.

TEXAS 28, BAYLOR 7. But the unbeaten Longhorns might soon meet their match.

WASHINGTON 21, CALIFORNIA 9. Cal doesn't have the material.

MISSOURI 27, COLORADO 0. But the score could be twice that.

Aerial Artists Clash In Conference Tilt

Jim Hickey's men will be seeking their fifth straight win over a UVA team at 2 p.m. in Scott Stadium. The Chapel Hillians rule the favorite in the 67th game of the series which dates back to 1892. UNC leads, 36-27-3.

Weather permitting, the contest is expected to be a passing duel between Carolina's Junior Edge and Virginia's Gary Cuozzo.

Edge, spotting his favorite target Bob Lacey 32 times, is seventh in the nation with 73 completions in 124 attempts. His passing has totaled 858 yards.

Cuozzo is third in the ACC and 12th in the nation with 63 completions in 112 tosses. His passing yardage is 697. He needs only 12 more completions to break the record set by Arnold Dempsey in 1958.

Lacey's 32 pass receptions have accumulated 474 yards for the Tar Heels, and the UNC magician has scored four touchdowns.

The Tar Heels will have two first-team changes when they take the field today. Speedster Ronnie Jackson, second nationally in kick-off returns, was injured last week against Clemson and won't be able to play. Ron Tuthill will take his place.

Senior Duff Greene, a starter last year, has replaced sophomore Clint Eudy as first-team right guard. Greene has played mostly on defense in the first seven games, but now will operate both ways.

Carolina's ground game is sparked by Ken Willard, who has acquired the nickname, The Bull, for his rushing efforts. The native Virginian, a 217-pound sophomore fullback, has rushed for 307 yards —a 4.5 average per carry.

If the Tar Heels continue to play Virginia as they have in the past, the scrubs might see plenty of action in the second half. In 1958, the score was 42-0. Jim Hickey's first team in 1959 romped, 41-0. In 1960 the Cavaliers finally scored, but lost, 35-8. Last year it was another whitewashing, 24-0.

So, the Cavaliers would like to break that four-game losing streak against the Tar Heels. For a change, UVA goes into a Carolina game with a winning record.

Bill Elias's men have a 4-2 mark over-all and 1-1 in the ACC. They defeated William and Mary, VMI, Wake Forest and Davidson. Virginia Tech and South Carolina topped the Virginians. South Carolina's win was convincing, 40-6, last week.

The Tar Heels, after falling to N. C. State, Ohio State, Michigan State, and Maryland, came back with wins over South Carolina and Wake Forest. Last week, they lost to Clemson 17-6, giving them a 2-5 mark.

SAE's Run Past Kappa Sigs; Will Play At Virginia Today

By STUART BALL

In a battle of the giants of the Fraternity Blue tag-football league Thursday Sigma Alpha Epsilon emerged as the undisputed champion and assumes the role of the team to beat in the playoffs.

Combining a superlative defense with an excellent offense, the SAE's walloped highly-respected Kappa Sigma 27-0.

The contest was never really in doubt as the SAE's scored the first two times they got the ball and held a 14-0 half-time lead. In the second half the story was much the same as the SAE's came up with crucial defensive plays when they were needed.

Fourth Shutout

In the final tabulation Bob Segrest accounted for two touchdowns with Keith Stoneman, and Jim Dunston adding one each. Jim Commander was responsible for all three SAE extra points. The 27-0 shutout was the fourth time this year they held the opposition scoreless and their offensive point total has now risen to 216 for an average of 54 points per game.

Today the SAE's are carrying the Carolina banner to Charlottesville for a resumption of a rivalry discontinued two years ago because of scheduling difficulties.

The rivalry was that of the UNC Fraternity League champ versus the UVa champ and this year's contest will pit our SAE's against UVa's St. Anthony Hall team. As last year's champs the Phi Delts were invited to be the UNC representatives, but they declined saying that the SAE's would present a stronger team.

In other Fraternity League Playoffs ATO, Phi Delt, and Sigma Nu all advanced to the quarter-finals by topping DKE, Sigma Chi, and Chi Phi respectively.

The ATO-DKE affair was the closest with the final score finding ATO 12-7. Willie Seymore and Sam Simpson scored for ATO, and Frank Fletcher accounted for the DKE TD.

Phi Delt rolled over Sigma Chi 39-12 with Bob Reagan and Erky Duff scoring twice each. Walt Ratchford and Tom Cummings also broke into the scoring column for Phi Delt as did Lee Sherrill and Hammond Ravers for Sigma Chi.

Sigma Nu was a 13-0 winner over Chi Phi with Mike Traynor putting on a one man show. He scored both Sigma Nu touchdowns and also accounted for the PAT.

EAGLE SHIRTMAKERS PROUDLY ANNOUNCES
A DACRON*/COTTON OXFORD
THAT WILL NOT PILL!

OH, given time a short-necked man with a heavy beard could pill any oxford cloth, they're that soft. But until just recently even Little Lord Fauntleroy could have pilled a DACRON/cotton oxford cloth shirt with one curl tied behind him. Which is why we didn't put out any of them. ★ Sure you know what pilled means; it's when the fabric gets roughed up into little pills. ★ Well, Du Pont has a brand new type DACRON that resists pilling. It came out about a year ago, but we waited until Greenwood Mills, the weavers who make our cotton oxfords produced a DACRON/cotton oxford they were proud of; a really luxuriant lofted oxford. And that brings us up to now. We are making Eagle Shirts of this new material in both a Tabsnap®collar and a button-down collar. At about $8.50.

★ Tabsnaps, you may recall, are Eagle tab collars that need no collar buttons. Our button-down collars also have a property highly prized by the toney cognoscenti: a sort of sloppy bulge. We used to call this "flare" until we noticed everybody else was too. Besides, it really isn't a flare, it's a sloppy bulge, but it's ours and we like it. ★ So if you want a drip-dry oxford shirt that won't pill perhaps you'd better drop a note to Miss Afflerbach (she says forget the footnote) and ask her where in your town you can find Eagle Shirts. This is because many fine stores prefer to put their own labels in our shirts; very flattering, but tough on Eagle eyed shoppers. Write her care of Eagle Shirtmakers, Quakertown, Pa.

*Du Pont's trademark for its polyester fiber. That wouldn't be a bad name for an Italian fashion consultant. Say, do you suppose we could get Miss Afflerbach to change her name to Toni Cognoscenti and . . . . .

Under A Gray November Sky, World's First Lady Buried

HYDE PARK, N. Y. (UPI) — Anna Eleanor Roosevelt, the shy and self-imagined "ugly duckling" orphan who in womanhood found true beauty through service to humanity, rested in death Saturdy night beside her husband in the rose garden they had tended together in life.

Under a patchwork November sky, the "first lady of the world" was buried Saturday afternoon longside the grave of Franklin Delano Roosevelt, 32nd President of the United States. They had been parted, until now, by Franklin Roosevelt's wartime death in office in 1945.

President Kennedy and former presidents Eisenhowed and Truman headed a group of distinguished mourners who came to the ancestral Roosevelt estate, country home of the late President's family since 1819.

MRS. ELEANOR ROOSEVELT

The 78-year-old Mrs. Roosevelt, neice of President Theodore Roosevelt, died Wednesday after a battle of more than two years with anemia and tubreculosis.

After a heavy early - morning rain, the sky began clearing shortly before the funeral service started at 2:10 p.m. in the quaint 115-year-old stucco St. James Episcopal Church.

A gentle breeze ruffled the huge pine trees overlooking the grave and fluttring the bright flowers in the 40 wreaths set on stands behind a great white oblong headstone bearing the names of both Franklin Delano and Anna Eleanor Roosevelt.

The stone was still wet and glistening when the Rev. Dr. Gordon L. Kidd, for 16 years Mrs. Roosevelt's rector at St. James, delivered a graveside eulogy saying tht the world has suffered an irreparable loss:

"The entire world becomes one family orphaned by her passing. Her deep concern for the welfare of all people, her understanding of their problems, and her efforts in their behalf gained this most remarkable woman a permanent place in the hearts of all devoted to the advncing of the cause of freedom and peace with justice for all peoples.

"Her great sympathy for the homeless and the refugee made the underprivileged and the downtrodden her special concern.

"Never have I known her to raise her voice in anger against any jibes and unfair stories that one heard from time to time."

The Kennedys, Eisenhowers, and Trumans were guests at lunch at Mrs. Roosevelt's Val-Kill cottage, which is down a winding country lane across town from the Roosevelt estate. The estate now is the Franklin D. Roosevelt memorial site, a public property but closed to the public today.

The Rev. Dr. Gordon L. Kidd, Mrs. Roosevelt's rector for 16 years at St. James, read the 20-minute funeral service from the Protestant Episcopal Book of Common Prayer.

Inspection Plan Backed By USSR

MOSCOW (UPI) — The Soviet Union Saturday gave strong backing to unmanned, automatic seismic stations as an alternative to on-site inspection in helping to police an underground nuclear test ban.

Three Soviet scientists said in the government newspaper Izvestia that "there are unquestionable difficulties in distinguishing atomic blasts and earthquakes." But they added:

"Today we confidently declare not only that detection of underground tests is possible but this task can be solved by simpler means than proposed by experts at the 1958 Geneva Conference."

Earlier the Communist Party newspaper Pravda supported the proposal for automatic seismic stations.

The scientists were Mikhail Sadovsky of the Academy of Sciences and physicist-mathematician V. Keilis-Borok and N. Kendersaky. They said "It suffices to use the national seismic services both of the atomic powers and the neutral states.

"The reinforcement of national means by automatic seismic stations will ensure full reliability of the detection of underground tests without any on-site inspections."

Pravda came out in support of a proposed mechanical "black box" control system elaborated at a recent "Pugwash" conference of Soviet and Western scientists that would avoid human inspection on both sides.

The "pugwash" conferences, which take their name from the town in Nova Scotia where they were first held, are informal meetings of scientists from East and West.

Both the Soviet Union and the United States are agreed that if nuclear tests are banned in the atmosphere, in outer space and under water, an effective control of possible violations can be made with existing detection means.

They do not agree, however, on how to detect and control underground explosions.

The West has repeatedly expressed fears that small underground tests could be carried out clendestinely and that it would be difficult, if not impossible, to differentiate between earthquakes and nuclear seismic disturbances.

The United States proposed a system of manned control stations and yearly inspections on both sides to police possible underground tests. The Soviet Union rejected this as tantamount to espionage.

At a recent closed "Pugwash" conference in England, the suggestion emerged that automatic detectors, sealed by an international authority, could be placed in various parts of the Soviet Union and the United States.

At given periods, these "black boxes" would be dug up and unsealed by the same international authority and the instruments studied to see if there were any sign of unusual underground "explosions."

A Pravda article Saturday favored the proposal as deserving "the most serious attention." This followed Soviet Premier Nikita S. Khrushchev's statement last Wednesday that it is now time to conclude a nuclear test ban treaty and his announcement that the current series of Nuclear tests will end Nov. 20.

17 Students Will Attend Baptist Meet

The UNC Baptist Student Union will select a maximum of seventeen foreign students from this campus to participate in the sixth annual International Student Retreat at Williamsburg, Virginia. The retreat, which will be held November 22-25, is sponsored by the Student Department of the Southern Baptist Convention and the North Carolina and Virginia State Baptist Student Unions.

Any foreign student at UNC who would like to attend this retreat should obtain an application from Rev. James Cansler of the Baptist Student Union at 151 E. Rosemary St. Applications plus fees should be returned to him no later than Nov. 14. Priority will be given those who apply earliest.

The purposes of the retreat are to provide international fellowshoip and understanding and a wholesome Thanksgiving holiday for the participants. Also, the retreat is an introduction to the Christian faith through speakers and group discussions. There will also be tours of historic Jamestown and Williamsburg, Va.

Seventy-two international students and ten students from the United States will represent North Carolina colleges at the retreat. In addition, international and U. S. students enrolled in colleges in Virginia, Maryland, and the District of Columbia will be present.

The cost of the retreat is $10.50. This sum includes transportation, meals, room, and insurance. The insurance covers sickness and accident from time of departure until the return to campus.

Students will travel to and from the retreat in buses, which will leave Thursday morning, Nov. 22, from Chapel Hill. They will return Sunday morning.

Indian Pass Threatened By Sabotage

NEW DELHI (UPI) — Peiping Communists are increasing their sabotage and subversive efforts in the threatened northeastern area of India while Peiping keeps up steady military pressure on the gateway to the rich Assam plains, it was reported here.

No major fighting was reported anywhere along the 1,500 - mile border but an Indian Defense Ministry spokesman said Indian troops repulsed two Chinese Communist attacks near Walong, at the extreme eastern end of the line near Burma. He said the Indians suffered no casualties.

The spokesman reported enemy shelling near Walong and in the Towang area at the intersection of the borders of India, Bhutan and Tibet-scene of a major assault Oct. 20. Indian and Chinese troops now hold positions around Jang village, five miles to the east.

The spokesman said the situation was unchanged in the Ladaka area where Friday he said the Chinese were moving tanks toward the vital supply air base of Chusul. Chusul is one of India's most important defensive points in the Ladakh area of Kashmir.

Debate Slated Tuesday On Communism

Do students have a right to know if there are "communists" on their campus?

The many sides of this question will be debated Tuesday night when Carey McWilliams Jr. and Dr. Russell Kirk argue the topic of academic freedom in Carroll Hall at 8 p.m.

The two educators, lecturers, and political authorities are being presented in a symposium on "Radicalism and the College Campus." The N.S.A. campus committee, the Carolina Forum, and the YM-YWCA Public Affairs Committee are sponsoring the program.

Dr. Kirk is a distinguished author, well-known for his works on academic freedom, and the role of the university. A staff-member of William Buckley's "National Review," he is an articulate conservative spokesman. He has been a National Advisor to N.S.A. for several years.

Carey McWilliams Jr. has done many analyses of student government, and a searching study of campus political parties. A longtime advocate of "complete" academic freedom, he has spoken on the subject at the 13th, 14th, and 15th National Student Congresses.

A panel discussion on Tuesday afternoon will deal with Radical Student groups in Chapel Hill. It will be held at 3 p.m. in Carroll Hall.

Four North Carolinians will discuss the role, responsibility, and rights of past and present student movements. Tentatively, the North Carolina speakers are:

Mr. Herbert Bradshaw, associate editor of the Durham Herald. The Herald gave front-page coverage to the recent claims of "communist" activity at UNC, and had reporters in Chapel Hill.

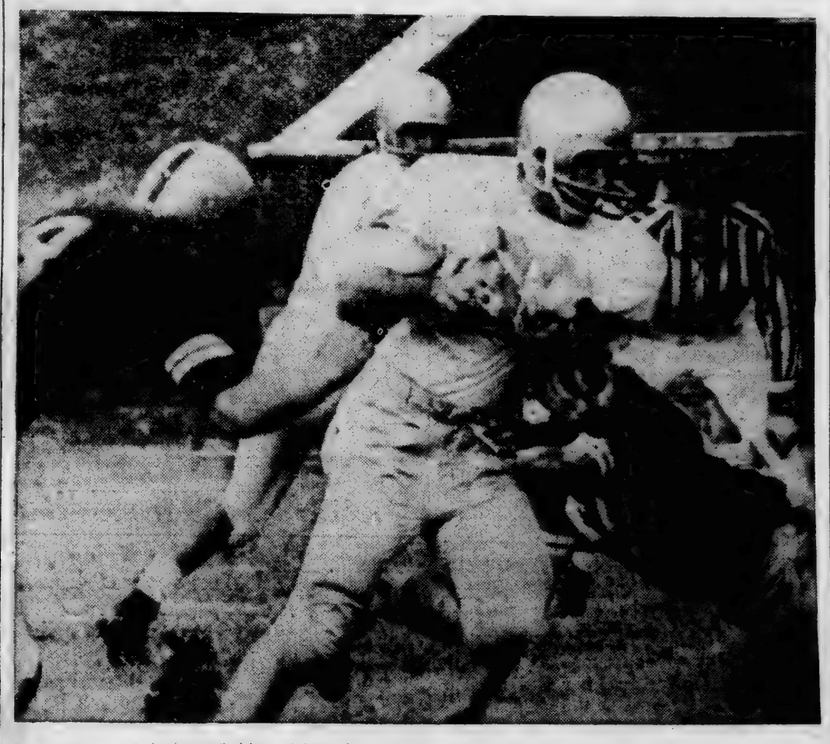
Al Lowenstein, assistant professor of social studies at N.C. State College and a former editor of the DTH. He is the author of "Brutal Mandate," and a well-known speaker in Chapel Hill.

Dr. Earle Wallace, assistant professor of political science at UNC. His "Politics USA," co-edited with UNC's Dr. Andrew Scott, refers to an American Legion "investigation" of "communist activities." The Legion has recently proposed an investigation at UNC.

Mr. W. W. Taylor, a Raleigh lawyer and past member of the State General Assembly, who has "strong views" on the role of student organizations.

The evening program is the first major debate to be held here since Fulton Lewis III debated Mike Harrington on the film "Operation Abolition" in 1961. That debate drew an overflow crowd to Carroll Hall.

5 Students Study UVa Council Plan



Five UNC students and two deans traveled to the University of Virginia Friday for honor system discussions.

Dean of Student Affairs Charles Henderson and Dean of Men William Long attended the talks in Charlottesville with UVA's dean of men and five honor committee members.

UNC students were Buzzy Stubbs, Inman Allen, Mike Lawler, Whitney Durand and Jim Clotfelter.

Under the Virginia system any student convicted of lying, cheating or stealing is automatically expelled permanently from school. There is no avenue of appeal.

Reds Near Completion Of Missile Withdrawal

UNC's Jim Eason Rams Virginia Line In Tar Heels' Tough 11-7 Comeback Victory

All Arms Going By Monday

WASHINGTON (UPI)—The Soviet Union apparently neared the end of its missile withdrawal from Cuba Saturday. A fourth Russian ship carrying rockets away from Cuba was inspected by a U.S. Navy destroyer early Saturday morning.

So far, six Soviet vessels have been "inspected" by Navy warships and four of them appeared to be carrying missiles.

Vasily V. Kuznotsov, the special Soviet negotiator on Cuba now in New York, has informed the United States that all of the Russian missiles—which he put at 42—would be on their way out of the Caribbean by Monday.

The ship inspected at dawn Saturday was the Soviet freighter Anosov. An "alongside inspection" of its cargo was made by the destroyer Barry, which intercepted the vessel Friday night and tailed it throughout the dark hours until daylight.

One Complication

There was one complication with the Anosov. It bluntly refused the Barry's request that it uncover all of the missiles lashed to the deck. To do so, it said, would be against the instructions of the Soviet government.

But the Pentagon later indicated that the freighter had complied ufficiently to satisfy the terms of the limited inspection. It said the surveillance had been completed "without incident."

Newsmen who flew over the Anosov in a Navy patrol plane reported its deck was covered with military equipment, including 12 missile-erecting cranes, eight trucks, and eight large oblong objects which appeard to be missiles.

Covered with canvas, each of the rockets appeared to be 60 to 70 feet long and a dozen feet in diameter. They closely resembled the American Thor, which has a range of some 500 miles and can carry a nuclear warhead. The United States has Thor bases in Turkey.

Final removal of all of the missiles would end the major part of the military threat posed by their placement in Cuba. It appeared the next steps in the Cuban crisis might turn into a political chess game that may take weeks to resolve.

Next Move

There were some indications the next move will come Monday, the deadline promised by Kuznotsov for completion of the missile withdrawal.

In New York, Carlos Lechuga, Cuba's ambassador to the United Nations, told a reporter that despite a week of intensive diplomatic activity there, "nothing of importance probably will happen before next Monday." He did not elaborate.

Presbyterian Church Opens New Building

The new sanctuary of the Presbyterian Church will be opened for the first service today. The service at 11 a.m. will be led by the Rev. Vance Barron, pastor of the congregation, and the campus pastors, the Rev. Harry E. Smith and the Rev. H. Thomas Frank.

This building replaces the structure which was razed by fire in the early morning of February 20, 1958. The building was adequately insured, and could have been restored without cost to the Congregation. They decided, however, to construct a new and larger sanctuary in order that there might be adequate seating for students to worship with the members of the church. The new sanctuary provides seating for 700.

The building, which is the fourth to stand on this site, has cost approximately $460,000. Students of the University of North Carolina contributed substantially in two building campaigns which were held in 1959 and 1962.

Formal dedication services will be held on Sunday, November 18. Dr. Donald G. Miller, president of Pittsburgh Theological Seminary, will preach the dedicatory sermon.

Exiles Say Cuba Still Has Power

MIAMI (UPI)—The Fidel Castro regime, despite removal of Soviet surface missile installations, still is capable of attacking the United States with an island-wide battery of hidden underground missiles, a Cuban exile group said Saturday.

The Cuban Student Revolutionary Directorate (DRE) released a report which, in effect, contradicts the apparent official United States view on Castro's missile stockpile.

Dismantling and removal of the 40-odd Soviet missiles spotted on the ground by U. S. reconnaissance planes reduces Castro's rocket power but does not eliminate it, according to the DRE report.

Catro has at least 10 Soviet-built missile installations on the northern coast of all six of Cuba's provinces, the report said.

A DRE agent, identified only as "Angel," who just returned here from a lengthy mission in Cuba and who was instrumental in preparing the report, gave "eyewitness" information on five specific missile installations in two provinces, Matanzas and Las Villas.

But the Cuban exile organization report also said there are five more installations — some of them built in natural caves — in Pinar del Rio, Havana, Camaguey and Oriente provinces.

The Pinar del Rio base was said to be near Soroa, the area visited by Soviet Deputy Premier Anastas Mikoyan and Premier Castro Thursday, according to Havana radio broadcasts which said they toured "farm cooperatives."

Agent "Angel" said there are at least two bases in Matanzas. One, he said, is possibly the most important installation in Cuba. It is about 62 miles east of Havana at a point on the north coast where the Yumuri River empties into the sea, he added.

A Cuban army captain on duty there claimed the missiles could reach New York, he said. "The Americans are in for a big surprise if they try to invade us," he quoted the captain as saying.

The missiles were installed there immediately after completion of the base in October, 1961, in a construction job that was begun in February, 1960, with a budgetary allocation of $1 million.

Trustees Hear Reports On Student Government

A visiting committee of the Board of Trustees heard nine reports this week on various phases of student government work and areas of interest.

The reports, which consisted of student statements to the committee and statements on "areas of student concern" were presented by several student leaders during a noon luncheon Friday at the Carolina Inn.

Gil Stallings and Mike Lawler reported on student work toward getting an artist or writer to reside in Chapel Hill and work with students. They urged that the University community "awaken to develop in the individual the capacity for original, creative and independent thinking."

An artist, they said, would supplement the appearances on campus by the usual outside speakers that appear here regularly.

Walter Dellinger, reporting on the honor system, said that the problems of the system had come in two areas, communication with the student and procedures of the councils. He noted that the open trials amendment should alleviate the first problem. The use of tape recorders to aid in the record keeping procedures is also being studied, he said.

Dellinger asked that the Trustees continue to put their trust in a student system of honor and self-discipline.

Chuck Wrye, in a report on athletics, urged the abolition of any elements that might lead to "professionalism" or possible scandals.

Academic Affairs chairman Fred Wedler said that his group attempted to advance scholarship by both freshman and upperclassmen through publicity, seminars, and revision of the advisor system.

The full reports on academics, student co-op, fraternities, social facilities, and transportation are as follows:

REPORT ON ACADEMICS

Admissions — Recognizing that the state university's first duty is to its citizens, we would propose that the Trustees consider the following policies for the future:

We disagree with the philosophy that the University should continue to expand physically to accommodate ALL qualified state applicants as the population increases. Rather, the state should channel finances over the coming years toward (1) increasing teachers' salaries and recognizing excellence in teaching and research at the University, and (2) subsidizing accredited junior colleges of the state.

We foresee that academic excellence may be maintained and enhanced by holding the number of entering students constant, and also maintaining the present out-of-state -student ratio of 15 per cent. This would allow the natural population expansion to guarantee the University an increasing quality of entering freshmen and channel the less qualified students into diversified smaller institutions.

FACULTY ADVANCEMENT & TENURE — Regarding the basis of faculty academic advancement, we recognize the value and necessity of scholarly research and publication for teaching background and University - faculty reputation. However, the primary benefits from the student point of view lies in the interest generated in the classroom and in the professor's personal contact with his students. It might be added, that this problem has recently been recognized by college presidents and faculties, as well as students.

Thus, we recommend a re-evaluation of the basis of advancement with emphasis on teachership as opposed to strong consideration of rewarding research and publication.

Concerning the system of tenure we feel that we can only urge closer consideration of continued competence in teaching as a basis for retaining tenure. Furthermore, it is felt that financial provisions must be made to attract and hold faculty members who would not be content with mediocrity in teaching once tenure is achieved.

PART-TIME INSTRUCTORS — We, as students, feel that there is a definite contribution to be made by part-time instructors. However, we would like to suggest, once again, the using of such instructors only where it is academically sound and not merely using them because of economic expediency. It is felt that closer screening of prospective instructors should be conducted in several departments involving large scale use of instructors, especially in the freshmen sections of mathematics, English, and foreign languages. We also hope that continued effort will be made to reduce the percentage of part-time instructors on the faculty.

GRADERS—Many students feel that graders are unqualified to make judgment on papers and quizzes. We feel that the policy of allowing students to appeal to teachers those papers marked by graders should be continued. We also urge continuance of the policy requiring the teacher to grade all final examinations. Finally, we ask that a system for selection of graders be instituted to insure qualified, competent graders for all classes using them.

COOPERATIVE PROPOSAL — For many years all Carolina students have suffered from high prices in downtown Chapel Hill. These prices have put a particularly severe strain on the financial resources of students who are paying for their education through scholarships, loans, and part-time jobs.

To help alleviate this problem, the Student Services Discount Club was started this fall. Membership is $5.00; members are entitled to a 10 per cent discount on merchandise at various downtown stores.

To deal with this problem on a wider basis, a group of students has been investigating the possibility of establishing a student cooperative store which would stock staple items such as clothes and toilet articles. It has been proposed that capital from the Student Services Discount Club be used to establish the cooperative. The private owners of the discount club have agreed.

The coop would be run by a private board, elected by cooperative members, and it would be incorporated under North Carolina law. It would operate off the UNC campus.

The students interested in this idea have met with the founders of the Student Services Discount Club, and they have up a charter for the proposed cooperative. This charter is now being examined by the state Attorney-General.

If plans for this cooperative

Smoking And Cancer; Fingernails Safer

A casual relationship between smoking and the incidence of lung cancer may never be proven, indeed, it may not even exist, but those who indulge in that nervous habit would do well to give serious consideration to the possibilities of their switching to chewing gum or gnawing fingernails.

For the evidence, or at least hypotheses, continue to grow in a manner which would suggest that if smoking does not alone cause cancer, it is none-the-less very closely related to the occurrence of cancer. And there are those who will staunchly maintain that on the basis of information now available, limited though it may be, we can say outright that smoking causes cancer.

So now the smoker must suffer even more. He no longer merely smells like a week-old ash tray, or has to hide yellow nicotine-stained fingers; he no longer merely clouds up the room with foul odors, or scars up floors with burns; he now must bear the agony of potential cancer.

And a recent court decision draws further attention to the evils of such a shallow vice. A man in Pittsburgh had attempted to obtain $213,000 from Liggett & Myers by contending they were, as manufacturers of the brand which he smoked, responsible for his lung cancer, which had necessitated the removal of his right lung.

The federal court jury, after two-day deliberations, declared that although smoking was the "cause or one of the causes of cancer in his right lung," Liggett & Myers was not responsible for payment of any damages.

The jury ruled more specifically that Liggett & Myers had done nothing to "induce the defendant to purchase the cigarettes." Well, considering the millions of dollars spent annually to "induce" consumers to purchase particular brands, we fail to see how the jury could make the statement they did. However, we do agree with the spirit of their ruling, which would seem to be that the responsibility for any incidence of cancer can not be cast upon any manufacturer. For, as they stated, the defendant "assumed the risk of injury by his smoking of Chesterfield cigarettes."

It is significant and heartening that the papers which carried the news of the Pritchard vs. Liggett & Myers case also carried the announcement of the first meeting of the Surgeon General's advisory committee on smoking and health. The decisions as to the relationship of smoking and cancer will not be left entirely to non-scientific juries or to prejudiced non-smokers. (CW)

UNC: Bigger Or Better?

The University is big and getting bigger. With 9,500 students UNC has one of the South's largest enrollments—and 1970 projected enrollment will be many thousands more.

Statewide discussion has been hot in recent months concerning the possibility of a fourth branch of the University of North Carolina at Charlotte—and further talk about the establishment of a maze of strong junior colleges across the state.

State political leaders and the people have several choices before them. They can allow the junior colleges to limp along in their present state, and continue to pack students into the major state institutions such as Carolina—or they can improve the junior colleges, establish more four-year schools such as Charlotte wants, and keep down enrollment to reasonable levels at Carolina and State College.

* * *

The visiting committee of the Board of Trustees heard a student opinion on this topic Friday afternoon. Larry McDevitt told the trustees, "We disagree with the philosophy that the University should continue to expand physically to accommodate all qualified state students as the population increases."

The state should spend its money, he said, on increasing faculty salaries and recognizing research excellence, and on subsidizing accredited junior colleges.

* * *

This, we feel, is a legitimate student concern. The University cannot expand indefinitely, and should not do so, even under the pressure of increasing applications for admission.

Carolina's administration has done a remarkable job, particularly in recent years, in retaining quality with quantity. But in a relatively poor state like North Carolina, in a state university, quality cannot always be coexistant with quantity—one must be chosen to the de-emphasis of the other.

The University can grow and yet improve, but it will be difficult. And the growth in enrollment must be gradual—and must be subordinated to the growth in quality education. (JC)

Let's Twist Again, Yeah, Twist Again

"Less twissit agin lahk we did lahns summer, ooooo, lass twisst agin lahk we did lass yeer." Yeah, yeah, Baby!

The other night, me and my girl went out to this really really swell place—a kind of a hut, and man, the place was jumpin.

Now, I've been around, I mean, I was elected superlative of my high school, and I've been up to New York, and I've been to a lot of swell parties; but let me tell you, I ain't never been to a party like this one was.

Let me tell you about it: There were lot of pretty nice guys there, escorting a lot of really swell girls. And man could they dance. They didn't do that old fashioned stuff, I mean like the jitterbug and slow stuff. These couples could really swirl.

It seems that it was kinda like a game that you played with one another. I mean that they didn't dance together, but kinda drifted apart—shuffling their feet, rolling their heads, and twitchin their rear ends all round—smooth, man, really smooth, and kinda jumpy too.

The guy would start out racing the girl but not touching her, and then, while jumping from heel to toe (like somebody was pinching him over and over, real fast), he would turn sideways and start shrugging his shoulders. Then spontaneously, fantastically, he'd lift one foot off the floor and shake it about, kinda like he was slapin his knee with one hand, while poking at the girl with the other. And all in time with the beat of the music.

And the girl, well, she was not to be outdone. She commenced with this heel-toe stuff, only a little faster, and bent real low. She too turned sideways, and then all-the-way-around, so that she wasn't facin her partner, but rather, kinda looking off into the distance. She was concertratin, I could tell that. She looked so serious, you'd a thought she was in a contest.

And she must of been thinkin real hard, cause before you knew it, she had drifted off from her date. I mean there were a couple of people in between them, shakin and wigglin real hard. Then, all of a sudden, they wiggled back together—he looked at her, she looked at him, and they smiled. Just a slight grin at first, but then a big happy giggle. They were lookin sharp, and they knew it. Man, it was kinda transcendental, I mean it was really something to see them communicate. A real dance of the soul.

So, I tried it. Least-wise, me and my date tried it.

She looked at me, I looked at her, and we smiled. Then the fun began. I started that heel toe stuff, and so did she. Then I started swinging my arms. I lost my balance, started to fall, and caught some other guy's date in the mouth with my elbow. I started to apoligize, but heard my girl scream, and lurched over three people to get there just in time to see her bounce three times on her fanny, right in time with the music. Man, was I ever proud of her.

Why Are Students Responsible For Fellows?

Honor Code Like Gestapo State?

Thursday night WUNC-FM had a panel discussion about the Honor System on "Carolina Roundtable." Questions were requested from listeners, and I, being a listener, asked this question: "Would the panel please answer why a student is responsible for the Gestapo-like spying on and reporting of another student's actions as required in the Honor Code?"

This question is more clearly stated as "Would the panel please answer why one is responsible for another person's actions?"

The first version of the question caused the members of the panel to start when the painful word "Gestapo-like" pierced their minds. My having used this word may have diverted their attention from the question the sense of which is expressed by my revised question above. Or was it that none of the panel could think of a reason why one is responsible for another's actions?

A Gestapo system of policing acquires much of its information through reports received from citizens which are classed as dangerous to the state—such as children informing on their parents.

How do the Honor Councils get most of their information about violations? A member of the radio panel said that some reports come from professors but most come from students.

I never heard anyone of the panel definitely state: "A person is responsible for another's actions because . . ."

In the guilt instilling ritual which freshmen are forced to go through before officially becoming a student, no one ever said to me, "You are responsible for other students' actions because . . ." I did hear, "You are obligated to report on the cheating of other students." But I never heard why. I was told to scribble my name on a piece of paper, entitled "Honor Code," or I would not be officially registered; so, I scribbled. Today my math professor gave me the choice of scribbling some words at the end of a quiz or having the grade left unrecorded; reluctantly, I scribbled.

To the person who relies on cheating, I say, "Cheating will cost you, you fool." The heaviest cost is not paid in guilt pangs by Honor Code bromides, or in being rapped on the knuckles by an Honor Council for being naughty. The fool who cheats pays out of his very self for his stupidity.

On my paper the words "Pledge" or "I have neither given nor received aid on this paper" are unnecessary; I need only place my signature on this paper to designate it as mine. Do you?

Policeman Was Aiding Citizenry

To the Editors:

I have a few things to say to the author of "Out of the Frying Pan," published in the November 3 edition of your newspaper. The first thing I wish to say to this individual who was apparently sired by man, born of woman, but who is one of the monstrosities of the human race is this: Horns are blown by fools like thee, but only God can make a tree.

Secondly, the author states that his host (or was it hostess?) had invited him to a "Scotch luau or folk song fest with flasks." Is he aware that folk songs of simple, artless character, handed down among the common people? There could be no people so common as those encountered by the officers of the Orange County Sheriff's Department about 2:00 a.m. on Sunday, October 27, when they answered a call from a "citizen" that the peace and quiet of their neighborhood had flagrantly been put in a state of utter choas by an obstreperous group of "humans" with horns.

The author of this article states "We deserved, at the vary least, to be treated as free citizens of a free society . . ." Before he expects to be treated as a "citizen" perhaps he should ask himself if he is a "citizen"—is he an inhabitant of this town, entitled to its privileges and franchises, by virture of having contributed something "worthwhile" to the welfare of the community. Certainly the uncouth, boisterous, barbarous, intoxicated speciman of humanity found sitting on a stool in the middle of a dark room, in the early hours of the morning, blasting away on a horn could not possibly be considered contributing anything "worthwhile" to a community nor to himself.

A law enforcement officer is sworn to uphold and enforce the laws of society. Unfortunately, in our society there are those "humans" who have no respect for the law, society, nor themselves. It is sometimes necesary for law enforcement officers to adopt a Spartacus attitude to protect the law abiding citizens from the possibility of becoming enslaved by the misfits— the mere "humans"—of a society, and to prevent their encroachment on the peace and quiet of the "citizens of the community. So, deputy sheriffs, just as "poets and philosophers," are generally capable of adapting to the work at hand, and applying their skill, knowledge, and inspirations to the tide and time of man. I might remind the esteemed author here, that man is born with "basic rights." Our laws are designed so as to deprive him of some of these rights when he so flagrantly disregards the rights of others. It is the duty of every law enforcement officer to insure the preservation of law and order for all, by whatever manner deemed necessary for the protection and well-being of the citizenry. He might bear this in mind before he expects to be "warned" or "informed" that he is jeopardizing the safety and welfare of others.

As a final word, it is suggested that this individual forget about the monstrocities caused by thalidomide—laws have been enacted to prevent them—and concentrate on the monstrocities created by "human" behavior of "humans" who have not yet learned that "Man cannot live by bread alone," but must temper the bread with the milk of human kindness and consideration of his fellow man.

Nixon Comments 'Low Foul Play'

To the Editors:

Mr. Clotfelter's remarks concerning Richard M. Nixon constitute the worse abuse of editorial freedom in my four years at the University. Your remarks rival those of Hitler when he defiled the Jews.

Certainly you have condescended to the lowest form of asininity and foul play possible. If you haven't the maturity to run a newspaper, why not step down and let someone take over. You have disgraced the University and the entire academic community. For shame, Mr. Clotfelter.

Faulkner Saw The Intensity Of Oxford

In the Manchester (Eng.) Guardian Weekly

Reporters flying in from Washington, San Francisco, Britain, Sweden, Japan and all the rest of those faraway sophisticated places came down in the feudal world of Oxford, Mississippi, like city slickers suddenly awakening in a civil war museum. Blinking in hardboiled bewilderment before the local violence, the unsleeping segregation, and the incredible reactions of even the university authorities to the enrollment of one able-minded young Negro at Ole Miss, the world's press sought enlightenment the usual way of visitors in strange places—from local guides.

Luckily for them there was already a full shelf of guidebooks to the present crisis provided with knowing anticipation by Oxford's most famous son, the late William Faulkner. Not that Oxford herself realized it or she would not still be stumbling about in search of her identity. Some of the locals in fact rather resent Faulkner's accurate plotting of their town. An assistant in the nearest Oxford has to a bookshop was typical of them when she showed an icy disapproval at the mention of his name. "I have better things to do with my time than read that man's looks," she said, like someone fearing to open a volume in case she found herself in it. Perhaps she would do.

Certainly the Faulkner fan on arrival in Oxford finds that mythical town of Jefferson on the county seat of Yoknapatawpha County is not so mythical after all, but is there before his eyes. The town square, the courthouse, and the ole men telling stories in front of it—the scene so long familiar from "Intruder in the Dust," "The Sound and the Fury," and the rest of the Yoknapatawpha saga—is all there, except for the ole "get" Meredith just as they boasted jail which is being rebuilt. So far so good for Faulkner the guidebook writer. But what the recent crisis has really done for him is to provide a justification of his life here—the kind of justification few writers ever enjoy. It is similar to that famous moment when Einstein received practical support for his theory of relativity. What has followed James Meredith's attempt to take a college education at Ole Miss has equally well proved Faulkner's theory of what goes on inside the heart of Oxford.

How many Gowries have we seen in action boasting that they would of lynching Lucas Beauchamp in "Intruder in the Dust." Phil Stone, the local lawyer who was the model for Gavin Stevens, talked just like an ageing Stevens in claiming the South would never accept a decision imposed on it by the North. And, like Stevens, he seemed content to sit and philosophise unless driven to action. And Flem Snopes, Faulkner's arch-villian manipulating people and prejudices for his own advancement — we saw many lesser versions of him the other week, particularly among the politicians. The sense of the Civil War pervaded the town more than ever as troops came through tear-gas like Northern troops through the mist in "The Unvanquished," but this time to prevent a possible lynching as bad as the one in "Dry September."

A thousand and one recent incidents were straight out of Faulkner, but as reporters, as well as troops, began to bend under the strain after only a few days the question asked itself as to how Faulkner had managed to live a lifetime here. The local answer would be that normal Oxford life is as peaceful as anywhere else and that Faulkner falsified it for dramatic effect. But a great writer, with his X-ray insight, sees through to a people's potential at all times and understands what they are fully capable of. Faulkner knew that Oxford could erupt, as it did recently, because he saw it always at this intensive level. How then could he live with it for so long? The obvious answer lay in his excessive drinking and in his hunting—two forms of escapism. But also for the first time it was possible to understand why he softened in later life. At the peak of his power there had been no compromise. The curse of slavery merely left the whites declining and the Negroes enduring. But in his later years he tried to bring the two sides together, like a man broken at last by the strain who must find hope and even more or he will go mad. Thus he had, for example a white boy, a Negro boy, and an old maid standing up for justice in Oxford—sorry, Jefferson—when the mob wished to lynch Lucas. Not even the mellowing Faulkner suggested a large number of saviours. Jefferson's honour was saved by the few. Perhaps with Faulkner for guide we can see Oxford being saved the same way.

At least, a group of local ministers, shocked by the violence, announced a day of penitence and, best tribute of all, received some threatening telephone calls in reply. Few students desert Meredith's classes and one student who bizarrely asked him for his autograph mumbled, "He's not a nigger; he's a coloured man." If that were not Faulknerian enough a third of the professors at Ole Miss have issued a statement in rolling Faulknerian rhetoric backing the law, which is more courageous than it may seem in faraway Europe.

Perhaps then even the mellow Faulkner will eventually be justified by events in Oxford. But just now it is easier to marvel at the imaginative power that enabled him to see the Jefferson of today under the placid surface of a little town that looks like so many others in the Deep South. It has taken a mob, two deaths, and countless injuries for us to understand fully his achievement. The crisis is a triumph for literature. No wonder Oxford has not given him his due, this civic psychiatrist. The Negro woman who used to sew leather elbow patches on his jackets directed me to his unmarked grave, and he lies there unsung, so unlike such local symbols as the man who was the first "white" settler in the county.

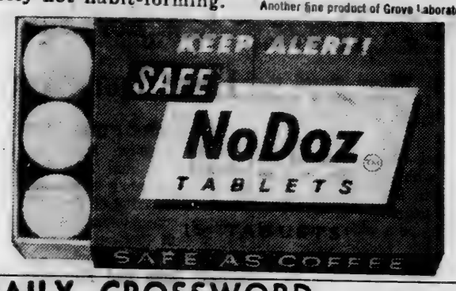
"Ole Miss" Girls

One fact which the Tar Heel did not over-emphasize about the situation at "Ole Miss" is its unique collection of beautiful girls. It really seems that the state has a monopoly on the most delectable fairer sex.

When DTH reporters returned with amazing tales of glamorous gals all over the campus, we thought perhaps it was merely a case of a change of scenery which made for welcome relief.

However, when some of our staff went to UVA to talk on the riots, among those present for the discussion was one beautiful coed. The initial reaction was that campuses all over the country put our girls to shame. But upon further investigation, it was revealed that the one beautiful coed was indeed from Mississippi.



How they grow 'em down there, we don't know, but they sure do got 'em. (CW)

REPORT ON FRATERNITIES —Considering the extensive housing and board facilities which fraternities provide for the University, and considering the active leadership and numerous contributions of fraternity men in campus life, the continued value of existence of fraternity chapters at this University is unquestionable. There are, however, certain conditions with which individual fraternities and the Inter-Fraternity Council are greatly concerned. These matters of concern are primarily in the area of relations with the Town of Chapel Hill.

It is proposed by the town government that the following housing requirements go into effect by April, 1964: first, that each house must provide three (3) off-street parking spaces for every ten (10) members living in the house; secondly, that any house undergoing a renovation process involving a cost equal to, or greater, than sixty per cent (60%) of the present value of the physical plant, must provide one (1) off-street parking space for each member living in the fraternity house. It is the feeling that these restrictions, if implemented by the town government, will be unnecessary, yet, more important, unbearable, physical and financial requirements for the fraternities to meet.

Although the I.F.C. will vigorously oppose these measures, it is felt that the Board of Trustees would be most effective in influencing action necessary for the continued contribution of many fraternity chapters. We would urge any immediate action the Board of Trustees may take with respect to these problems.

—Inman Allen

STUDENT SOCIAL FACILITIES—For a number of years, student leaders, in response to the attitude of a large portion of the student body, have been considering the problem of adequate social facilities for University students. The problem, as all students see it, is providing a structure, at minimum expense, wherein alcoholic beverages may be consumed and where maintenance and depreciation costs could be kept at a minimum.

The changing culture of the college campus has dictated the end of the large, formal dance, on any type of regular basis, and has suggested the need of facilities where students may gather for "combo" and small band-type gatherings that are within walking distance of the campus. At present no such facilities are available.

Student Government has several suggestions concerning this type of facility, but would like to make this group aware of its intentions and, perhaps, responsive to its needs. We feel this kind of social facility is a necessity if this University is going to meet the social needs and challenges of its increasing student body.

—Mike Lawler

CAMPUS TRANSPORTATION —With the completion of the new men's dormitories at the University, there has arisen a problem of transportation to and from these dwelling places. To many, the distance from the campus to these dorms seems to place an unreasonable burden upon the students, and their location is a definite inconvenience to the students concerned.

During the course of a day, many students find it necessary to return to their dorm in-between classes. Presently this is indeed difficult, if not impossible, because of the distance and time involved.

Student Government is now actively investigating possible means of alleviating the transportation problem. A student committee is presently looking into the possibilities of bus costs, maintenance, schedules, and over-all operation of an efficient system which would be lasting in value.

If the University expands its physical plant, the transportation problem will become more acute; therefore, student leaders feel that now is the time to initiate a program of providing transportation for students to far parts of the campus, and we are sure this will be a valuable investment for the welfare of the University in its future growth.

GLOOM AT THE TOP

Oh, sure, you've been busy, what with going to classes, doing your homework, catching night crawlers, getting married—but can't you pause for just a moment and give thought to that dear, dedicated, lonely man in the big white house on the hill? I refer, of course, to the Prexy.

(It is interesting to note here that college presidents are always called "Prexy." Similarly, trustees are called "Trixie." Associate professors are called "Axy-Pixy." Bursars are called "Foxy-Woxy." Students are called "Algae.")

But I digress. We were speaking of the Prexy, a personage at once august and pathetic. Why pathetic? Well sir, consider how Prexy spends his days. He is busy, busy, busy. He talks to deans, he talks to professors, he talks to trusteees, he talks to alumni. In fact, he talks to everybody except the one group who could lift his heart and rally his spirits. I mean, of course, the appealingest, endearingest, winsomest group in the entire college—you, the students.

It is the Prexy's sad fate to be forever a stranger to your laughing, golden selves. He can only gaze wistfully out the window of his big white house on the hill and watch you at your games and sports and yearn with all his tormented heart to bask in your warmth. But how? It would hardly be fitting for Prexy to appear one day at the Union, clad in an old rowing blazer, and cry gaily, "Heigh-ho, chaps! Who's for sculling?"

No, friends, Prexy can't get to you. It is up to you to get to him. Call on him at home. Just drop in unannounced. He will naturally be a little shy at first, so you must put him at his ease. Shout, "Howdy-doody, sir! I have come to bring a little sunshine into your drear and blighted life!" Then yank his necktie out of his vest and scamper goatlike around him until he is laughing merrily along with you.

Then hand him a package and say, "A little gift for you, sir."

"For me?" he will say, lowering his lids. "You shouldn't have."

"Yes, I should," you will say, "because this package is a carton of Marlboro Cigarettes, and whenever I think of Marlboro, I think of you."

"Why, hey?" he will say curiously.

"Because Marlboros have taste, and so do you," you will reply.

"Aw, go on," he will say, blushing furiously.

"It's true," you will say. "Moreover, Marlboro has a filter, and so do you."

"In my swimming pool, you mean," he will say.

"Yes," you will say. "Moreover, Marlboro has a soft pack, and so do you."

"My limp leather brief case, you mean," he will say.

"Yes," you will say. "Moreover, the Marlboro box has a flip-top, and so do you."

"But I don't have a flip-top," he will say.

"But you will," you will say. "Just light a Marlboro, and taste that tasty taste, and you will surely flip your top."

Well sir, you will have many a good chuckle about that, you may be sure. Then you will say, "Goodbye, sir, I will return soon again to brighten your lorn and desperate life."

"Please do," he will say. "But next time, if you can possibly manage it, try not to come at four in the morning."

UNC Comes From Behind To Defeat Virginia

Duke Nips Terps To Stay In Lead

DURHAM, N. C. (UPI) — Duke broke up two Maryand touchdown drives with last-ditch pass interceptions Saturday and virtually sewed up the Atlantic Coast Conference crown with a 10-7 victory over the Terrapins.

Maryland and Duke went into the game undefeated in ACC play and the Blue Devils, with only Wake Forest and North Carolina left on the schedule, now are heavy favorites to repeat as the conference champion.

The victory gave Duke a 4-0 conference record, against a 4-1 mark for Maryland.

Duke's points came on a field goal by halfback Bill Reynolds and a touchdown plunge by fullback Mike Curtis. Maryland got its only score in the opening seconds of the fourth period with a five-yard sprint by quarterback Dick Shiner.

The Maryland attack looked brilliant at times in the first half, only to bog down in touchdown territory on pass interceptions.

Duke Starts Slow

On the contrary, the Blue Devils started off with a sluggish offense but found themselves in the second half when they put up a defense that stymied the Terrapins and scored their only touchdown of the game.

Duke will be a heavy favorite to defeat Wake Forest next week and will be the pick over North Carolina the following Saturday.

Maryland plays a potent Clemson team next week that has only been beaten by Duke in ACC play.

The next week the Terps meet unimpressive Virginia.

The first half was a story of goal line troubles that badgered both teams, but mostly Maryland.

Twice the Terps drove to scoring position. Twice quarterback Dick Shiner's passes were intercepted, once by Duke halfback Mark Leggett on the goal line and again by center Paul Bengal on the three.

After the second interception, the Blue Devils used passes by quarterback Walt Rappold and runs by fullback Mike Curtis and halfback Jay Wilkerson to drive to the Maryland 15, from where halfback Bill Reynolds missed a field goal try. After an exchange of fumbles and a 15-yard penalty, Reynolds kicked his field goal from 38 yards out.

Touchdown Drive

Duke's touchdown drive in the third period was the product of smashing line cracks by halfbacks Mark Leggett and Billy Futtrell and two line plunges by Curtis, who finally bull-dozed over from the one.

Maryland's lone touchdown was ground out with line bucks by fullback Len Chiaverini, halfbacks Tom Brown and Kenneth Smith and a single pass by Shiner, who hit Brown for 12 yards.

Virginia End Dennis Andrews Grabs Long Pass

Tuthill's Run Gives Tar Heels 11-7 Win

By JOEL BULKLEY

CHARLOTTESVILLE, Va. — Sophomore halfback Ron Tuthill sprinted over from the seven-yard line to cap an early fourth period scoring drive yesterday and give Carolina's Tar Heels an 11-7 come-from-behind victory over the Cavaliers of Virginia on the rain-soaked meadows of Scott Stadium.

Some 15,000 spectators watched with awe as driving fullback Ken Willard personally moved the ball 26 yards in 10 plays, 6 of which were in succession to set up the touchdown, which netted Carolina its 3rd win of the season and evened their ACC record at 3-3.

Trailing 7-3 late in the 3rd period. The Tar Heles began to move when a Virginia punt was downed on the Carolina 28-yard line.

Gary Black gained 8 yards on an off-tackle run. Eddie Kesler dashed to the midfield stripe giving UNC first down when the quarter ended.

Here Willard took over and sloshed his way through the mud to the UVA 34-yard line in 6 plays. Tuthill, the 5-10, 175-pound left halfback from Rockingham, gained six yards on a key fourth and one situation. Willard moved the ball to the 23, after Black again scooted off tackle for 6 more and first down.

Quarterback Junior Edge hit end Bob Lacey with a bootleg pass on the nine-yard line. Tuthill again added the necessary first down before scoring on a wide seven yard sweep off left tackle. The run ended a 17-play, 72-yard march to paydirt.

Junior Edge scored a 2 point conversion making the score 11-7.

Co-captain Joe Craver set up Carolina's first scoring effort when he recovered a fumble on the UVA 23-yard line.

Edge had punted to left halfback Bob Freeman who bobbled the ball and then was swamped under by the Tar Heel line, allowing the slippery pigskin to fall to the ground on the 23-yard line.

On a third and nine play, Edge connected with halfback Roger Smith on a 15-yard pass play. Giving Carolina a first down and goal to go on the seven.

A holding penalty on the next play moved the ball back to the 24 where three plays later, versatile Bob Lacey booted Carolina's first field goal of the year, a 24-yarder to put Carolina ahead 3-0.

A spirited Virginia team went ahead in the opening minutes of the third quarter when it marshed 65 yards in 6 plays.

Lacey kicked off into the end zone to open the period.

Freeman, a 5-11, 182-pound senior from Richmond returned it to the 35. UVA signal caller Gary Cuozzo uncorked a 25-yard aerial to end Dennis Andrews, who landed on the UNC 36.

Fullbcak Ted Rzempoluch bulled his way to the 28-yard line. On the next play Freeman escaped three Tar Heel defenders and scampered the distance for a touchdown. Cuozzo kicked the extra point.

Cross Country Championship Here Tomorrow

By CURRY KIRKPATRICK

North Carolina seeks its third straight title and fifth in league history tomorrow afternoon when the tenth running of the ACC cross country championship is held on Finley Golf Course.

The Tar Heels, who last year nipped Duke and Maryland in a tough three-team battle at the Virginia course, are favored again tomorrow. But Coach Dale Ranson says, "Our boys will be running in a tough field. Every team has at least one good runner. The situation is most unpredictable."

Ranson has good reason to be wary.

Although his harriers won the State Championship meet last Monday, they were beaten by Duke in a regular-season race.

The Blue Devils, undefeated in their dual meets (including the one-point victory over Carolina), will be out to avenge the State Championship loss at Raleigh.

Van Dyck Unbeaten

In that race, Carolina was first with 26 points to Duke's 41. However, Louis Van Dyck, the Duke's fine number one man, came in first and continued undefeated. Van Dyck is the individual favorite tomorrow.

Chief competition for Van Dyck will probably come from Carolina's barefoot boy with speed, Larry Henry. Henry, unbeaten in six dual meets, trailed Van Dyck both times they met.

Van Dyck's supporting cast includes Dave Blumfeldt and Frank Campbell while Henry is a stablemate of Charlie Little, Jerry Stuver and Bob Bennett.

Stuver ran second in last Fall's meet while Blumfeldt finished eighth and Little tenth.

Maryland Strong

Maryland is a strong contender again. The Terps return two men who finished among the top ten in last year's meet. John Garten and Tom Krueger came in fourth and seventh, respectively.

Other top runners will be Clemson's Dave Moorhead, State's Jerry Fincher and Richard Edwards. South Carolina's Ken Smith, Wake Forest's John Carter and Virginia's crack soph, Walt Caldwell.

Infirmary

Fay Hensley, Annie Jay, Kay Fletcher, Imajene Kennedy, Marylin Hogsed, Michael Flanagan, Joel Hardman, Donald Draplik, James Henry, Robert Bush, Monroe Ridenhour, Roland Tuttle, Peter Goldburg, John Siwik and George McCormick.

Clemson Runs Past Furman

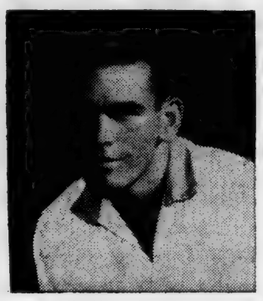
GREENVILLE, S. C. (UPI) — Clemson spotted Furman, its longtime cousin, a first quarter field goal and roared back with two touchdowns in each of the three remaining periods here Saturday for a 44-3 victory.

Furman, which hasn't beaten the Atlantic Coast Conference Tigers since 1936, put up a stern fight the first half. The outmanned Baptist team moved the ball on the opening kick-off far enough for Brownie Cordell, its paunchy kicking specialist, to register a 30-yard field goal.

Clemson immediately settled down in the second period to establishing its superiority. The rest of the game clearly belonged to the Tigers, who had running touchdowns on distances of one-yard by quarterback Jim Parker and halfback Hal Davis, two-yards by halfback Billy Miller, three-yards by fullback Charlie Dumas, and ve-yards by quarterback JJoe Anderson.

Scotch Foursome Slated Today

The Golf Scotch Foursome will be held today at Finley Golf Course. This event will consist of six couples (a girl from the WAA Golf Club with a boy from the UNC golf team) competing against each other. Each couple will play one ball through the course, and the low-scoring pair will receive a trophy.



Boys participating in the foursome will be: Pete Green, Skip Tucker, Mike Dore, John Baer, Abe Andes, and John Baldwin. The girls from the WAA Golf Club will be: Margaret Mellender, Ully Macy, Gana Robert, Faryl Sims, Jean Sorci, and Ann Vick.

UNC At Maryland In Soccer Contest

By MARTIN KRUMING

Carolina's varsity soccer squad will face its stiffest competition of the season when the Tar Heels tackle the Maryland Terrapins at College Park tomorrow afternoon.

Paced by 13-goal scorer Jimmy Reston, the Tar Heels will be seeking their first win from the Terps since the ACC soccer league was formed in 1955.

CO-CAPTAIN BOB KEPNER

UNC bowed to the College Park invaders 4-1 last season.

Carlos Martin, the shifty center forward who riddled Carolina's defenses last fall, was lost due to graduation. Instead the Maryland attack will be spearheaded by Oyten Tertemis, a speedy inside left who tallied twice.

So far this season Maryland and Carolina have faced only two common foes.

The Terrapins whitewashed State College 11-0 and turned back a stubborn UVA squad 3-2 in double overtime.

Carolina, on the other hand, defeated State 9-1 and squeeked past Virginia 2-1 scoring the final goal with only 55 seconds remaining in the game.

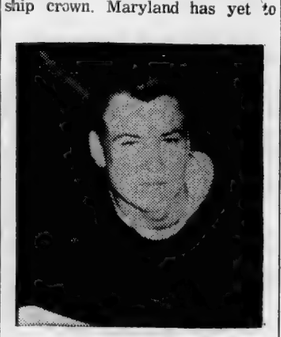
In a match not counted in ACC official standings, the Tar Heels jolted State 6-1 last Wednesday in Raleigh.

UNC is 7-1

Going into Monday's game UNC has compiled a 7-1 record, including a preliminary scrimmage victory over Ft. Lee, Va., 1-0. Wins have come over Davidson (7-3), Pfeiffer (4-1) and Belmont Abby (6-1).

In its second match of the season Carolina bowed to Navy 4-0 at Annapolis. While the Midshipmen scored three times in the first frame, the Tar Heels held them scoreless through the second and third periods.

Earlier this fall Navy defeated Westchester State Teachers College, 2-1. Westchester was the top ranked team in the nation last season.



Maryland has stepped outside the ACC only twice in compiling its 6-0 slate. The terps have defeated Penn State and Georgetown.

Last Thursday the Terps stunned a strong Duke squad 3-1 in Durham. Up until that point the Blue Devils had lost only to Navy, 4-0.

Team To Beat

As the 1962 record stands right now, head coach Marvin Allen definitely feels that Maryland is the team to beat in the ACC.

With impressive wins over State and Duke, the boys from College Park appear determined to walk off with another championship crown. Maryland has yet to lose the conference soccer title.

CO-CAPTAIN BILL SNYDER

Up until now the Tar Heels have played an impressive brand of soccer. Their attack is patterned after a short pass and give-and-go offense. The defense has tight-end up considerably since the beginning of the fall and the fullback line of co-captain Bill Snyder, Charlie Battle and Steve Painter appear as solid as any in the ACC.

After the Maryland game, the Tar Heels will close out their 1962 campaign against Duke in Durham on Nov. 16.

Namath Paces Alabama Rout

TUSCALOOSA, Ala. (UPI)—Brilliant sophomore quarterback Joe Namath, running and passing with a nerve that far overshadowed Miami ace George Mira, rallied unbeaten Alabama to 23 points within seven minutes Saturday for a 36-3 victory over the Hurricanes.

Penned up deep in their own territory for virtually the entire first half, second-ranked Alabama came back from a three-point deficit to overwhelm Miami, with Namath putting on almost a one-man offensive show.

South Carolina Stops State; Hapless Wake Gets Creamed

COLUMBIA, S. C. (UPI)—Elusive halfback Billy Gambrell scooped a lateral from quarterback Dan Reeves and dashed 64 yards through the North Carolina State secondary here Saturday to wake up a sleepy Gamecock offense that buried the Wolfpack 17-6.

Reeves, one of the youngset college quarterbacks in the nation at 18, added a second touchdown late in the fourth period that gave South Carolina its second Atlantic Coast Conference victory of the season.

State's touted defense held the offensive-minded Gamecocks to only one pentration in the first half, but Gambrell's long run in the third qurter seemed to bring the Gamecocks to life.

With four minutes gone in the fourth period, halfback Dean Findley licked a 42-yard field goal that put South Carolina ahead 10-0.

North Carolina State roared right back on the pasing arm of junior quarterback Jim Rossi, who tagged left end Bob Faircloth for three aerials to set up State's only touchdown.

Rossi hit right halfback Joe Scarpati on the three-yard line on frist and goal, and Scarpati went in untouched. A Rossi pass attempt for two points was incomplete.

BLACKSBURG, Va. (UPI)—Sophomore quarterback Bob Schweichert dazzled winless Wake Forest with a 96-yard touchdown run and passed and ran for three more touchdowns to lead Virginia Tech to a 37-8 win Saturday.

Schweickert, unable to play in Tech's firt four games this year shattered Wake Forest's defense and capped his surefocted running and passing attack with the school record run from scrimmage. The previous Tech record was a 77-yard run.

Wake Forest had threatened at the Tech four during the third quarter but ran out of steam and Tech took over. Schweickhert dodged a flock of defenders to go all the way with the pass from center.

Trustees Defeat Plan For Athletic Committees

McWilliams, Kirk To Debate Academic Freedom Tonight

Carey McWilliams Jr. and Dr. Russell Kirk will speak tonight in the first debate program here in over a year.

The topic is "How Much Freedom in Academic Freedom?"

Tonight at 8 in Carroll Hall, the campus committee of the National Student Association (NSA), the Carolina Forum, and the YM-YWCA Public Affairs Committee are sponsoring the program. It is part of a one-day symposium on "Radicalism on the College Campus."

McWilliams is a government professor at Oberlin College in Ohio. He has written about student governments and campus politics, and has often spoken on Academic Freedom at the National Student Congress.

Dr. Kirk is an educator, and the editor of "The University Bookman." He is on the staff of the conservative "National Review," a National Advisor to the NSA.

The rights and responsibilities of student movements and organizations will be discussed by the two. A question session from the audience will follow the debate.

DTH staff-members posed several questions which they anticipate will be asked. "Do social fraternities have any more rights than student political organizations?"

"Should the administration be able to force an organization to reveal its membership?"

"How have the courts ruled when colleges have supressed student newspapers or student organizations?"

Professor W. Y. Wang of the UNC history department will introduce Dr. Kirk. Mr. McWilliams will be introduced by Sid Waldman, an instructor in the UNC political science department.

Harry DeLung, NSA Coordinator will moderate the debate.

Dr. Russell Kirk

Discussion Slated On Radicalism

"Radical Student Movements in Chapel Hill" will be discussed by a four-man panel in Carroll Hall at 3 this afternoon.

Those speaking will be Mr. Herbert Bradshaw, associate editor of the Durham Herald; Mr. Al Lowenstein, asst. professor of law at N. C. State; and Mr. W. W. Taylor, Raleigh lawyer.

The panel is part of the one-day symposium on "Radicalism on the College Campus" sponsored by the National Student Association Committee, the Carolina Forum, and the YM-YWCA Public Affairs Committee.

Mr. Lowenstein, who graduated from Carolina in 1948, will speak about the role and responsibility of dissenting student movements that have existed at UNC.

Mr. Taylor has said that he plans to express "strong sentiments" in regard to radical organizations on this campus, and the role of the administration in dealing with them.

Mr. Bradshaw's newspaper has taken an active concern in the possible presence of "subversive" elements at UNC. He will cite the finding of reporters who came to Chapel Hill, and express his views on the university's role in dealing with these groups of students.

Johannesen Plays At 8 In Memorial

Graham Memorial and the Chapel Hill Concert Series will host pianist Grant Johannesen in a concert tonight at 8 in Memorial Hall.

UNC students with ID cards will be admitted free to the balcony.

The New York Times has called Johannesen "a major pianist." He has been hailed in Europe with the highest acclaim and has received several awards from foreign musical festivals.

The New York Herald Tribune has said that Johannesen is not "another bright young talent." It applauded his "mature mind, mature feelings, training, and talent" expressed in every selection.

Critics are excited over the possibility that he may be "a successor to the aging concert stars." In this respect the Detroit Free Press called him "a musician of the age of genius."

Johannesen recently returned from his first season as an artist in residence of the famed Aspen Music Festival. He will perform the complete Beethoven Concerto Cycle with the Salt Lake Symphony in two cities later in the year.

His performance here will include compositions by Mozart, Beethoven, Debussy, Schumann, Faure, and Milhaus.

Johannesen studied in France with Robert Casadesus and Nadia Boulanger before his 1944 debut in New York. Since then he has become one of the world's leading pianists. His firm mastery of technique and feeling for dynamics were called sensational by the Atlanta Constitution.

He takes deep interest in the programming of his concerts and sometimes achieves unusual effects as a result of this care. Recently in a concert in a Spanish Majorca monastery, his finale coincided with the midnight bells. He was playing the conclusion to a prelude which ends in three low D's, played very slowly. The effect was striking.

Johannesen's ending here will probably not be as dramatic, but it is unlikely that he will disappoint his audience.

Dixie Classic Rejuvenation Is Unlikely

RALEIGH (UPI) — The Consolidated University of North Carolina Board of Trustees Monday defeated an attempt to set up a special committee on athletic programs at the state-supported schools.

The proposal, submitted by Buck Harris of Raleigh at the 100-member board's fall meeting, was defeated on a voice vote during adoption of a new administrative code for the University.

Adopton of the code climaxed five years of work by a committee headed by Judge Rudolph I. Mintz.

Most of the discussion on the code centered around the section dealing with the visiting committee of the board of trustees. This committee's responsibilities, as set forth in the new code, include studying the adequacy of financial support to the schools, adequacy of buildings and equipment, needs and welfare of faculty members and students, the instructional program, extension services, alumni affairs, the athletic program, business management and "any problems which it, the 21-member committee, deems important to the welfare of each institution.

Harris' objections to the section written were that the committee was too large and its responsibilities too great. He attempted to gain trustee approval of a motion which would have set up three committees, one for athletics, one for student affairs, and one for faculty affairs.

One of Harris' opponents, Tom Moore of Winston-Salem, said the trustees had tried the multi-committee system in the past and it had failed to work.

Billy Harrison of Rocky Mount supported Harris in a debate that brought up the action taken by the chancellor of N. C. State College at Raleigh in cancelling the annual basketball tournament, the Dixie Classic.

The classic, which pitted the four Atlantic Coast Conference basketball teams in North Carolina against four teams invited from out of state, was cancelled in 1960 after several basketball scandals involving bribery of players.

The point was made during the discussions that neither the trustees nor their athletic advisory committee were consulted about the move. Consolidated University of North Carolina President William C. Friday answered the implied rebuke with the statement that the advisory committee "is not part of the process in making decisions of this kind."

Nehru Discloses Appeal To U.S.

NEW DELHI (UPI)—Prime Minister Jawaharlal Nehru disclosed Monday he has appealed to the United States for military aircraft and arms-making machinery to bolster India's defenses against Chinese Communist aggressions.

He also told a group of visiting newsmen that he recently received firm assurances from Moscow that the Soviet Union would deliver ordered supersonic MIG21 jet-fighters on schedule and would go through with plans to establish a MIG-manufacturing plant in India.

Nehru said that while he is seeking additional military equipment from the United States, India has no plans at present for asking the American military assistance group to establish a training and technical unit here.

A U. S. Embassy spokesman later confirmed that India's requests for more military aid in the undeclared war with China was under consideration. He said that discussions are under way between the embassy and the Indian Defense Ministry and that a request for Canadian-made Caribou Transports has been relayed to Washington for action.

Attacks Repulsed

While Nehru met for an hour with the visiting American and other foreign newsmen, a Defense Ministry spokesman reported at the regular evening briefing that Indian forces hurled back two Red Chinese probing attacks on the eastern front during the weekend. He indicated considerable patrol activities by both Indians and Chinese continued in the Northeast Frontier Agency (NEFA) bordering on Red-occupied Tibet.

The spokesman said there was no change in the situation on the western front where both sides have been reported building up men and material near Chusul, the vital Indian air supply post in Ladakh.

Peiping Radio broadcasts said "invading" Indian troops continued heavy artillery bombardment of Red positions near Walong in the NEFA Saturday. It charged also that "aircraft of Indian aggressor troops" have stepped up flights over the Chinese positions and that Indian air drops to troops have increased steadily.

The Chinese Communist Radio said the actions "appear to indicate intensified preparations for new attacks . . ." Similar charges have been made by Peiping in the past as the basis for so-called Chinese "defensive" assaults along the border.

Europe Can Be Defended, NATO Commander Exclaims

PARIS — Allied Supreme Commander Gen. Lauris A. Norstad said confidently Monday that "NATO Europe ca nbe defended" and that he has ordermed Allied forces in Central Europe to adopt a mobile forward defense strategy.

But he warned that Allied forces still are "critically short in many ways" and suffer from "deficiences of serious proportion." He said they still are short of certain major units, many existing units are short in combat and service supplies, there are deficiencies in available supplies and there is a general lag in furnishing modern equipment.

Norstand addressed the opening session of the eighth annual conference of North Atlantic Treaty Organization NATO parliamentarians here. He was to have retired as supreme commander on Oct. 3 but stayed on at NATO's specific request because of the Cuban crisis.

Norstand summed up: "What is the position of our forces? How well can we meet the obligations of our assigned missions? The answer, very briefly, is that our force, looked at in the political and military context of today is a significant one, it is a force to be reckoned with on the land, on the sea and in the air."

Norstad did not spell out the shortage of major units to which he referred. But in a taped radio interview Sunday he said NATO forces in Central Europe currently total about 25 divisions, compared with his target of 30.

J.F.K. Stands Firm On Bomber Removal

WASHINGTON (UPI) — President Kennedy stood firm Monday on his insistence that Soviet IL28 bombers must be removed from Cuba now that the Russian missiles have been withdrawn.

Kennedy and his chief military, intelligence and diplomatic advisers met for an hour and 45 minutes to review latest developments in the Cuban crisis.

They heard a report on current Soviet-American negotiations from Adlai Stevenson, U.S. ambassador to the United Nations, and John J. McCloy, head of a three-man "coordinating committee" that is dealing with the Russians for removal of "offensive" weapons from Cuba.

Forty-two missiles now have been taken out of Cuba and are on their way back to Russia. The IL28s, a medium-range bomber capable of carrying nuclear weapons, still remain.

Press Secretary Pierre Salinger said the government's position in removal of Soviet weapons from Chicago, including the bombers, had not changed.

The Soviets, in the talks with the Americans at the United Nations, have tried to "downgrade" the IL28s from the offensive weapon category into which Kennedy had placed them. They also have claimed the bombers are now part of the Cuban Air Force.

But the United States has made the removal of the naval blockade conditional on the pullback of the bombers.

Qualified officials said Kennedy has been informed that the Russians appear to be acting on good faith in taking out the missiles. But the administration's concern was said to be deepening over the unpredictable behavior of Cuban Premier Fidel Castro.

No Word

Most U.S. officials working on the Cuban crisis are inclined to give credence to Moscow's difficulty with Castro. There still is no word here on what progress—if any—has been made in the talks between the Cuban leader and Soviet First Deputy Premier Anastas I. Mikoyan.

Mikoyan has been in Cuba 10 days. But for two days now, the Cuban press has ignored his presence.

Officials here have noted that despite Castro's obstructions, the Russians appear to have complied with Kennedy's primary objective —the removal of the missiles. They also point out that Moscow readily submitted to U.S. inspection of her ships on the open sea.

For this reason, officials believe there may be a temporary suspension of the naval blockade as soon as there is concrete evidence the last missiles and the bombers have been returned to the Soviet Union.

It is expected that the minimum result of the Mikoyan trip to Cuba will be Castro's agreement to send back the Soviet aircraft which have not yet been uncrated.

But failing Castro's acceptance of international on-the-spot supervision, the United States is expected to continue its aerial surveillance of the island indefinitely. This would be to make certain there is no new attempt—THIS TIME BY Cuba—to secretly build launching pads for any missiles the Castro regime may have concealed.

Jensen Named Treasurer In Frosh Count

At least part of the turmoil that results from a Carolina student body election was settled yesterday.

Paula Hastings, chairman of the Election Board, announced that a recount has been taken on the many contested positions and that only one change has resulted.

Paul Jensen was declared freshman class treasurer, instead of John Sheldon, by a vote of 496 to 490.

Complete serenity should result after the disputed freshman class presidential election is re-held next Tuesday.

It was protested because of an illegal candidate on the ballot. Jack Harrell (SP) will run against Earl Johnson (UP).

Junior Class interviews will be held today and tomorrow from 2-4 p.m. in the Grail Room of G.M.

Students Ask Power Over Resolutions

A recent poll conducted by the Communications Committee shows that 62 per cent of the students asked want the student body, not the Legislature, to decide the question of whether or not the Legislature should consider resolutions that are not directly relevant to UNC.

The official results of the poll are: (1) for letting the Student Legislature decide the question—55 (24 per cent); (2) for an open vote of all students to decide the question—143 (62 per cent); (3) indifferent, misunderstood the question, or very vehement reaction against Student Government, Legislature, polls, etc.—32 (14 per cent).

In regard to this question, a bill has been introduced into the Legislature by Arthur Hays (SP) which, if passed by the Legislature, will submit the proposed constitutional amendment to the students to be voted on in an open referendum. In effect, the question to be considered is whether the student body or the Legislature itself should lay down the guide lines for legislation.

Athletic Committees And The Dixie Classic

Yesterday, in Raleigh, the Board of Trustees of the Consolidated University refused to be duped into setting up a special committee to handle athletic programs at the state-supported schools in North Carolina.

The proposed athletic committee smacked of vested interests, and was apparently, though not openly, a manifestation of some inner rumblings among the Board of Trustees which find their focal point in the abolition of the Dixie Classic.

The rejection of the proposed committee for handling athletics was certainly not the main order of business, and was in fact but one segment of a proposal to divide the present 21-member visiting committee into three separate committees concerning themselves with athletics, student affairs, and faculty affairs.

The Consolidated Board of Trustees met to consider some proposals which, hopefully, will pave the way for future expansion of higher education throughout the state.

However, at this time we would address ourselves to the proposed establishment of the athletic committee and a bit of conjecture as to why the proposal was made and why its defeat was a good thing.

Although not openly presented as such, we feel certain that the movement to bring about the establishment of the committee on athletics centered directly around hopes for a re-establishment of the popular Dixie Classic—that basketball tournament which once brought thousands of dollars to participating teams and Raleigh merchants.

It is no secret that basketball fans throughout the state and vested interests throughout the capitol city continue to mourn the loss of such a lucrative sporting event. And it is inevitable that the moaning will take a more active form, such as the establishment of committees and some behind-the-scenes hustling which might attempt to sway the powers that be.

But the decision to abolish the Classic was a proper and just decision. It came as the direct result of deplorable situations. It came as an attempt to eliminate lucrative stomping grounds for big-time gambling and the bribes, the threats, and the thugs that go with it.

The decision was made by individuals who, no doubt, enjoyed the Classic as much as any Tar Heel fan, but who recognized the need for the preservation of properly oriented and honorably conducted amateur athletic events. The Dixie Classic, with bribed players, "thrown" games, and nation-wide betting, had certainly begun to leave the concept of "amateur athletics" far behind.

No, we do not need a committee to handle the athletic programs at the state-supported schools, just as we do not need the Dixie Classic. (CW)

How Much Freedom

The term "academic freedom" is almost infamous in its overuse. It is used by one political group as the ultimate justification for all educational deviationists, and by another group as an all-encompassing evil plot of the Communists.

Tonight's debate on "How Much Freedom In Academic Freedom?" with Dr. Russell Kirk and Carey McWilliams Jr., will attempt to brush away some of the surface prejudices surrounding academic freedom. The afternoon discussion on "Radicalism on the College Campus" will deal with more concrete problems concerning academic freedom an civil liberties.

One of the calmest and most intelligent writers and speakers in the "conservative" political world, Dr. Kirk will present the view that academic freedom is not an absolute, His view is that professors cannot be allowed to inculcate radical doctrines into their audiences — that such a view of academic freedom violates the search of education for the truth. Propaganda, in his view, has no place in an academic community.

McWilliams, son of the editor of Nation magazine, sees the discussion in different terms. His view will be that no teacher can be judged a bad teacher on the basis of his political affiliations; that the best avenue toward truth is to permit all opinions to flourish, and the true ones will prosper; that to stamp out "radical" views would do more harm in its crippling of controversy and hence, debate, than to let the views and their spokesmen alone.

These are guesses as to what some of the points of debate will be. In any case the talks should be lively and interesting, and should hit close to home. (JC)

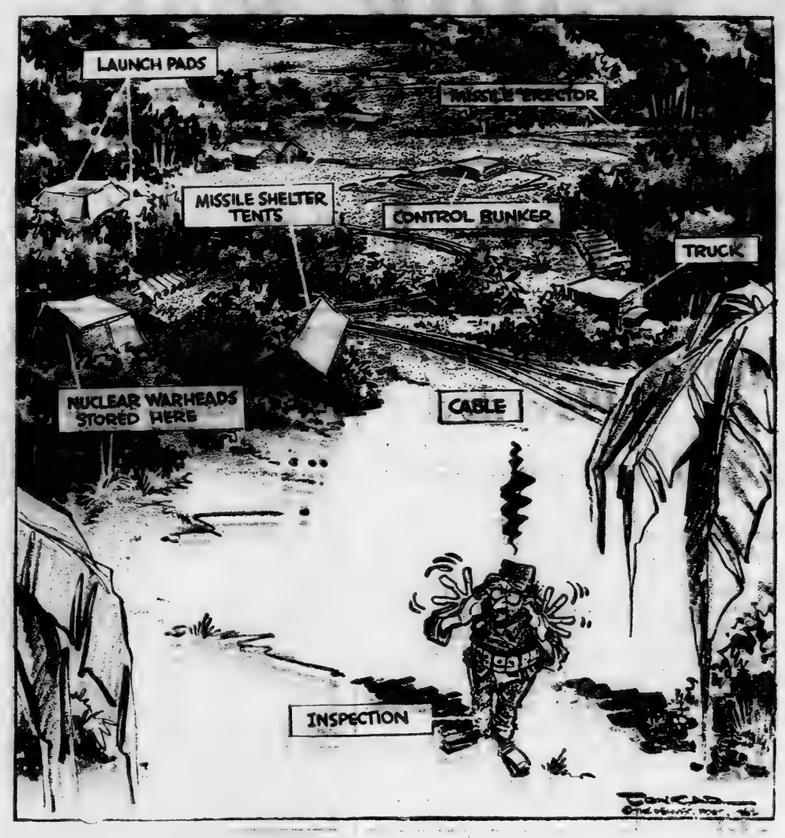
Unleash?



Headline in U. S. News and World Report:

"With Mao Attacking India — Time to Unleash Chiang?"

(In smaller type:) "Troubles inside Red China are beckoning to Chiang Kai-Shek. He thinks the moment has come to strike the mainland."

. . . Sounds like Chiang has got just about the biggest army in the world, just raring to gobble up poor little Communist China. It's also reassuring that the great Nationalist Chinese leader has decided after much deliberation, that the "moment" has come for an invasion—although it seems we've heard that somewhere before . . . Clotfelter Edits Are 'Brainwash'

To the Editors:

First let us take this opportunity to commend Mr. Pittman and Mr. Litsinger on their well spoken, openminded article of Nov. 9.

It is, indeed, a pleasant surprise to know that someone on this campus has not been brainwashed by the editorial opinions of late. However, Mr. Pittman and Mr. Litsinger, let's not place ourselves in such a precarious position. For, you see, if Mr. Clotfelter finds that our dissentions are jeopardizing his ability to swing all opinions "to the left," he may embark on a slander campaign against us, also. That is how his political sect operates.

Make everyone dissatisfied not only with his fellows and his environment, but also with himself. Once this has been achieved, they move in and further their policy of extremism. In this manner they pollute the minds of future leaders with warped political filth. They render useless and obsolete the very motive of our Founding Fathers.

We may also find good reason to support the idea "no silver spoon—no good leader." You see, in their perverted ideologies, they believe that only the elite party secretariat is capable of governing. They profess to adhere to proletariat rule, however, it too easily seen that is not their belief.

If Mr. Clotfelter wants to receive total acceptance of his ideas (if you would call them such) why doesn't he become a "pseudo-Marxist," i.e., a present-day Communist? Then dissention would materialize only with fear of death.

Is it any wonder that the American Legion felt compelled to speak?

Nixon Editorials Demand Apology

To The Editors:

Although we reconize the right of an editor to express his political opinions, we must object to the manner in which you chose to show your preference in the California gubernatorial race. We refer to your editorial of November 6, entitled "Pray for Brown."

The dictionary defines libel as "any written or printed statement . . . not made in the public interest, tending to expose a person to public ridicule or contempt or to injure his reputation in any way." Your opening phrase,"One of the lowest characters who ever crawled up (sic) out of the gutter to run for public office . . ," in our opinion, clearly constitutes libel according to the above definition.

As co-editor of "The Daily Tar Heel," Mister Clotfelter should be aware of the responsibilities of his position and therefore should refrain from such irresponsible statements. We believe that the reader of "The Daily Tar Heel" deserves an apology for the statement or at least a retraction of it.

We sincerely hope that Mister Clotfelter will substitute constructive criticism for name-calling and libelous exaggerations in his future editorials.

Jaypees Not Out Under Ct. Reform

To The Editors:

In an article appearing in Saturday's Tar Heel concerning the pending bill to constitute passing of bad checks an honor code offense it is stated "Roman . . . explained that the recent state court reforms eliminates (sic) the Justice of the Peace, who prosecuted 'bad check' offenders. 'Without this safeguard . . . merchants will hesitate to cash student checks . . .'" The court reform amendment does not abolish the office of Justice of the Peace; it empowers the General Assembly to do so by establishing District Courts and providing for the appointment of Magistrates who will supercede the present Justices of the Peace. Until the General Assembly does in fact implement the power thus given them the present court system, including Justices of the Peace, remains in full force and effect. I feel sure the General Assembly, when it does implement the amendment, will have the foresight to transfer the jurisdiction of the present Justices of the Peace to the Magistrates provided for in the amendment.

Carrier Current Must Be Revived

To The Editors:

So WUNC is concerned about building student public relations. Benedict Burr was quite right when he remarked that no one (on campus) ever listened to it. However, beautiful (?) sweethearts aren't going to help them much when the simple fact is that WUNC broadcasts on FM, and how many students here probably have FM radios?

Last year an attempt was made to bring the station to the dorms through 'carrier current' which could be picked up on an AM receiver, but the few transmitters that were placed in dorm basements soon gave out. WUNC must revive carrier current, go on the AM band, or be content with reaching primarily residents of the State who have FM receivers.

Death Of A Devil

With so many graver military crisises at hand, it might be overlooked in the rush that the the Stennis subcommittee on "muzzling of the military" has filed its report.

Chairman Stennis and five other senators—Symington, Jackson, Saltonstall, Smith of Maine, and Bartlett of Alaska—conclude after millions of words of testimony that there's no evidence military men were "muzzled" by appeasers or furtive advocates of "no win." They did find "ineptness, inconsistency, caprice, arbitrary judgment, and even irresponsibility" in Pentagon censorship of military speeches—in short, just the sort of venial faults that plague any big bureaucracy and could have been predicted.

There was one dissenter — Sen. Strom Thurmond, whose speeches touched off the investigation. Senator Thurmond still believes there are nefarious "no win" influences abroad in the Pentagon with "paralytic effect on cold war alertness and awareness." He said no in 157 brief pages.

Actually, the public lost its enthusiasm for the "muzzling" investigation when former Gen. Edwin A. Walker was hauled to Washington in his ten-gallon hat and put on an unprecedented display of confusion and ineptness. And the impression gained at that time has been in no way alleviated by his performance in the late unpleasantness at Oxford, Miss.

So, along with the "merchants of death," "the money power," the protocols of the Elders of Zion, and other famed devil-theories, the "muzzling of the military" has gone its way into oblivion.

Students Must Find Ends For Education

By RUSSELL KIRK
In The Student Government Bulletin Of N. S. A.

(Eds' Note: Mr. Kirk, a widely known conservative thinker, will speak here tonight at 8 p.m. in Carroll Hall in a debate on "Radicalism and the College Campus." He is a regular writer for the NATIONAL REVIEW and the author of several books.)

In the definition of the late C. E. M. Joad, "decadence" is the loss of an object. When a man succumbs to decadence, he loses himself — for want of an end or aim — in paltry pleasures; when an institution sinks into decadence, forgetting its purposes, it occupies its time with meaningless growth and busy-ness. So it is nowadays with what, fondly, we call the higher learning in America.

The grimmest symptom of our educational decadence is the embarassing fact that our "higher" education, on the average campus, is not high at all. In a time that cries out for elevated leadership, the men responsible for most of our universities and colleges continue to mumble the slogans of what Brooks Adams called "the degradation of the democratic dogma." Since neither the administrators nor the general public—including students' parents — show any tendency to mend their ways, just conceivably the better students may begin to do something toward the restoration of learning.

Need we to annumerate the dreary catalogue of our afflictions in "higher" learning? Perhaps a few specimens may suffice.

An instructor in English, able and energetic, writes to me that he has just abandoned college teaching for journalism, thoroughly disheartened by the American campus. "I had to face thirty bored faces who didn't know quite what to make of college," he tells me, "except that they were there. . . . I find fewer and fewer students who know what the purpose of education is, much less desire it; the faculty is equally confused as to their own rationale; and the administration regards the whole educative function as an impertinance."

Or consider some of the remarks of Dr. Jacques Barzun, Provost of Columbia University, who mentions that out of a class of 170 first-year graduate students in history at Columbia, a good many did not know the difference between B.C. and A.D.—or much else. Though sometimes talkative enough, these students — Professor Barzun writes — have "no knowledge that is precise and firm, no ability to do intellectual work with thoroughness and dispatch. Though here are college graduates, many of them cannot read accurately or write clearly, cannot do fractions or percentages without travail and doubt, cannot utter their thoughts with fluency and force, can rarely show a handwriting that would pass for adult, let alone legible, cannot trust themselves to use the foreign language they have studied over eight years, and can no more range conversationally over a modest gamut of intellectual topics than they can address their peers consecutively on one of the subjects they have studied."

And Mr. Christopher Jenks, associate editor of the New Republic, though trying to allow some cheerfulness to break in, notes in last October's number of Harper's that of the undergraduates on American campuses, one per cent desire seriously scholarly or scientific training; two per cent want a more general intellectual education; five per cent desire an introduction to upper-middle-brow culture and upper-middle-class conviviality"; twenty per cent want some technical training; twenty per cent seek merely certification as ambitious and respectable potential employees; while more than half of the students haven't the foggiest notion of what they're after in college.

With Democritus, one might as well laugh as cry. When more than half the students already in college don't know why they're enrolled and never take degrees, what real reason have we for pouring billions of dollars from the federal treasury—as is proposed in Congress just now—into bricks and mortar for new classrooms? When four out of every five Californian high-school graduates already go on to some form of "higher" schooling, what purpose is there in mere quantitative growth? Real learning in America asks not for more students, but for fewer—and better. We ought to pay some attention to the words of Dr. Douglas Knight, president of Lawrence College:

"We can insist, as a matter of national policy, that the privilege of education at any level is an earned right in our society and not an automatic one. We can recognize that the education must fit the man, and that we debase both if we allow the indifferent and uncaring student to meddle with a demanding education."

Well, what are the causes of educational decadence? I suggest three:

First, the attitude of the average student, who enters college for the fun and games, or as if he were applying to a matrimonial bureau, or from a vague feeling that somehow a degree will enable him to earn more money—and cares nothing for mind or conscience:

Second, the attitude of the average parent of the average student, who —himself only a high-school graduate, if that—desires the college degree for his children as a status-symbol: one of the nastier sorts of snobbery;

Third, the attitude of a great many college presidents, deans, and trustees, not to mention alumni-association officers, who confound numbers with success and look upon a college as if it were an industrial production-line, its profit dependent upon turning out an increasing number of units annually. Power and magnitude are everything to such gentlemen; and they feel only contempt for Mark Hopkins and his log.

From these sham-concepts of higher education, we can emancipate ourselves only by resorting the ancient ends of the higher learning: and in that work of recovery, the better students can have a large part. Like all other sorts of liberal learning, higher education is an intellectual means to an ethical end: its object is the Socratic goal of the good man, who has fortified his virtue through right reason. At college and university levels, the intellectual means rightly is more easily discerned than the ethical end; yet the goal of the truly human person should remain.

In this time of troubles, when most of the nations have fallen into what Burke called "the antagonist world of madness and despair," the genuinely ethical end and the genuinely intellectual means are more urgently needed than they have been for centuries; but in this American Republic we waste our great resources in educational fripperies and foibles and snobberies and silly unvocational vocationalisms. Far more than additional bricks and mortar for the Ivy Tower, far more than an abstract and impossible ideal of "equality of opportunity" through getting everybody into college, we need what the late Gordon Chalmers called "the education of governors." Higher education, Dr. Chalmers wrote, has two aspects: the republic, and the person. I happen to agree with him that these two are inseparable, and that they are real aims of education, and that we Americans have forgotten about them.

We have forgotten about the person. For a primary aim of the higher learning is the cultivation of the private reason, for the person's own sake: the development of wisdom. Instead, we offer curricula in trailer-camp management.

We have forgotten about the republic, the commonwealth. For order and justice and freedom can endure in such a civilization as ours only if the better minds of the rising generation are acquainted with the moral and political and artistic springs of culture. Instead, we offer Social Stu. 101.

Now this recovery of educational norms would be positively impeded by an undiscriminating financial largess to every empire-building educational administrator, to gratify every college-sweater-hungry parent. Rather than expanding our "educational plant" regardless of intellectual consequences, we need to maintain a campus life of reflection. Gordon Chalmers was a pupil, at Harvard, of Irving Babbitt, whose little book "Literature and the American College," published more than half a century ago, remains the best criticism of our educational confusion. As Babbitt wrote:

"Our college and universities could render no greater service than to oppose to the worship of energy and the frantic eagerness for action an atmosphere of leisure and reflection. It would seem that they might recognize the claims of the contemplative life without encouraging a cloistered seclusion or falling into the monastic abuses of the past. . . . The tendency of an industrial democracy that took joy in work alone would be to live in a perpetual devil's sabbath of whirling machinery, and call it progress. Progress, thus understood, will prove only a way of retrograding toward barbarism. . . . The present situation especially is not one that will be saved—if it is to be saved at all—by what we have called humanitarian hustling. . . . If we ourselves ventured on an exhortation to the American people, it would rather be that of Demosthenes to the Athenians: 'In God's name, I beg of you to think.' Of action we shall have plenty in any case; but it is only by a more humane reflection that we can escape the penalties sure to be exacted from any country that tries to dispense in its national life with the principle of leisure."

Baptist Student Union Sets Work Party Saturday At 1

The UNC Baptist Student Union will sponsor a student work party for the benefit of its LISTEN program this Saturday from 1-6 p.m.

Students will do a variety of jobs at the request of and in the homes of townspeople. Work for which they will be available includes everything from baby sitting to window washing. The money they earn will be contributed to the BSU LISTEN fund.

Townspeople who have work to offer and any UNC student who wishes to participate in the work party should call the Baptist Student Union at 942-4266 for further information.

LISTEN, which stands for Love Impels Sacrifice Towards Every Need, is a North Carolina Baptist Student Union program which helps support North Carolina college students who do summer work with the natives of selected under-developed countries. These students work either under the direct auspices of the State Baptist Student Union or through such programs as Crossroads Africa. Next summer several students will do work in countries in Latin America.

The LISTEN fund also provides material assistance to the people of selected underdeveloped countries.

DR. WILLIAM W. CORT

Cort Awarded Reed Prize

The Walter Reed Award for meritorious achievement in tropical medicine has gone this year to Dr. William Walter Cort, a research professor and consultant in Parasitology at UNC.

The medal and citation were presented at the annual meeting of the American Society of Tropical Medicine and Hygiene, held this month in Atlanta, Ga.

In awarding the medal, Dr. Justin Andrews of the United States Public Health Service cited the early work done by Dr. Cort on hookworm disease and ascariasis, an infectious, parisite-caused disease. He also pointed to Dr. Cort's long service as a teacher of parasitology in Johns Hopkins' School of Hygiene and Public Health and at UNC.

UNC Wins Fifth Cross Country Title

Larry Henry Takes Individual Honors

By ED DUPREE

Barefooted Larry Henry led North Carolina to its fifth Atlantic Coast Conference cross country championship yesterday on Finley Golf Course.

Henry, a second-year med student from Horse Shoe, N. C., outdistanced Duke's Dick Van Dyck and 67 other ACC harriers to become the sixth individual champion from UNC. He covered the four miles in 20 minutes, 43.6 seconds.

Five Tar Heels finished in the top 11, giving Coach Dale Ranson's runners 31 points and an easy win. Duke and Maryland tied for second with 51 points.

Wake Forest finished fourth with 119 points, followed by Clemson (164), Virginia (170), South Carolina (181) and North Carolina State (215).

Van Dyck followed Henry by 1.4 seconds and took second place. Maryland's John Garten was third, two seconds back of Van Dyck, and his Terp teammate Tom Krueger was fourth.

Charlie Little and Jerry Stuver of UNC took fifth and sixth, respectively. Rounding out the top ten were Frank Campbell, Duke; Jerry Smith, UNC; John Weisiger, Duke; and Alan Rose, South Carolina.

North Carolina's number five man, Bob Bennett, took 11th, followed by Virginia's top finisher Walt Caldwell.

E. J. Drown of Clemson led his team, finishing 17th, John Carter paced Wake Forest, taking 21st, and Jerry Fincher of N. C. State finished 31st—the first Wolfpack runner to cross the finish line.

The Tar Heels finished the regular season with a 6-1 ACC record, losing only a 27-28 squeaker to Duke. Then they gained revenge by edging Duke in the state championship meet. Yesterday's victory gave Ranson's men a 2-1 victory in the three contests against the Blue Devils.

Carolina won its first ACC championship in 1956, and triumphed again in 1957. After two Duke championships, the Tar Heels won the title in 1960 and 1961, making this year's victory their third straight.

Jim Beatty, now one of the greatest distance runners in the world, was the first Tar Heel to win the individual championship. He did it in 1954, 1955 and 1956. Wayne Bishop was the champ in 1958 and Rett Everett in 1960.

Non-UNC winners have been Billy Latham of South Carolina in 1957, Jerry Nourse and Cary Weisiger of Duke—1959 co-champs—and Nourse again last year.

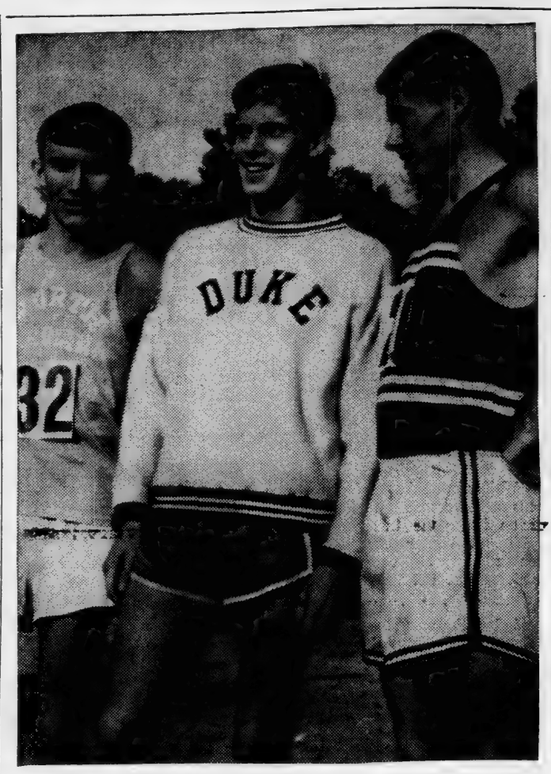
Henry didn't compete last year because he was concentrating on studies in his first year of med school. He ran unattached, though, and gained experience which paid off.

Little, who finished 10th last year as a sophomore, moved up to fifth. Stuver, UNC co-captain, was second in 1961, but his sixth-place finish was heartening, as he had to recover from a severe leg injury received during the summer.

Other runners who finished high last year were John Garten of Maryland, fourth in 1961 and third this time; Carmine Lunetta of UNC, sixth in 1961 and 18th yesterday; Tom Krueger of Maryland, seventh last year and fourth this time; and Dave Blumfeldt of Duke who dropped from eighth to 14th.

For Coach Ranson, this was his 51st championship in indoor and outdoor track and cross country. He came to UNC as cross country and assistant track coach in 1925 when Bob Fetzer was head track coach, and has been coaching Tar Heel athletes since.

The top 50:



1. Henry (NC), 2. Van Dyck (D), 3. Garten (M), 4. Kruger (M), 5. Little (NC), 6. Stuver (NC), 7. Campbell (D), 8. J. Smith (NC), 9. Weisiger (D), 10. Rose (SC).

11. Bennett (NC), 12. Caldwell (V), 13. Prettyman (M), 14. Blumfeldt (D), 15. D. Smith (M), 16. Thomas (M), 17. Drown (CL), 18. Lunetta (NC), 19. Waite (D), 20. Moorhead (CL).

21. Carter (WF), 22. Turner (WF), 23. Adams (WF), 24. Wann (M), 25. Via (WF), 26. K. Smith (SC), 27. Saslaw (M), 28. Taylor (WF), 29. Konapasek (M), 30. Dorsett (WF).

31. Fincher (NCS), 32. Graham (NC), 33. Allan (V), 34. Edwards (NCS), 35. Whichard (NC), 36. McRae (WF), 37. Gentry (D), 38. J. Evans (CL), 39. Garth (V), 40. Brinson (D).

41. Simmons (V), 42. Junger (WF), 43. Hooper (CL), 44. Owens (SC), 45. Johnson (V), 46. Treece (CL), 47, Green (NCS), 48. Gray (D), 49. Addison (SC), 50. Stampley (NCS).

Ranson Commends Team And Henry

By ED DUPREE

"It was a splendid team performance." Dale Ranson has probably said this many times in his 38 years as North Carolina cross-country coach, but his words were true, as always.

Five of his Tar Heel harriers, Larry Henry, Charlie Little, Jerry Stuver, Jerry Smith and Bob Bennett, finished in the top 11 in yesterday's Atlantic Coast Conference cross country championships. The Carolina runners won the ACC title for the fifth time in seven years.

"This was a wonderful achievement for Larry Henry," Ranson continued. "You know, this boy started running after he came to school."

Larry Henry was also pleased with his performance. The ACC cross country individual championship medal is small, but only in size. The second-year medical student held it and looked at the golden medal as if it were a three-foot high trophy.

"I've been thinking about this race for a long time," the doctor-to-be said, smiling.

Last year, in his first year of medical school, Larry decided not to participate in cross country and track, officially. He did run, unattached, in Carolina meets, though, and apparently profited from the experience.

In the two meets against Duke this year, Larry was beaten by Dick Van Dyck. Henry usually runs barefooted, but he wore shoes in those two meets, held at Durham and Raleigh.

When asked if he thought he could beat Van Dyck here in Chapel Hill, Larry said, "I knew I had a better chance."

On friendly Finley Golf Course, the new cross country champion ditched his shoes and trotted four miles barefooted. And he won.

"I guess I'm undefeated barefooted," Larry said with another smile and a gleam in his eyes.

Who knows, maybe next year Coach Ranson will have the first barefooted cross country team in the Atlantic Coast Conference?

Terps Continue Soccer Jinx

COLLEGE PARK, Md. — Carolinas' six-game winning streak came to a crashing halt yesterday as Maryland handed the Tar Heel varsity soccer team a 7-0 whitewashing. It marked the 17th year in a row that the Terrapins topped the blue-shirted Carolinians and the seventh straight win for the Terps this year.

Center forward Richard Roe blasted six goals, making his season total 18 while inside left Oyten Tertemis added his 15th score of the year for the winners on their sloppy home field.

Carolina fullbacks Steve Painter, Charlie Battle and Bill Snyder, and goal tender Buddy Siegel turned in fine performances for the Tar Heels as they suffered their second loss of the season and first in the ACC.

Maryland demonstrated a special scoring combination yesterday. Their right wing continually dribbled the ball down the sidelines and then lifted the ball across the field to Roe who would head it into the nets. This play accounted for three Terp goals.

The Maryland defense allowed Carolina only 10 shots all afternoon as they thwarted high-scoring Jim Reston's attempt to equal Carolina's season scoring record. Jim is still three goals shy of the mark of 16 goals with only one more game to go.

The Tar Heels travel to Durham Friday afternoon to end their season with an engagement with the Duke Blue Devils. Maryland downed Duke, 3-1, earlier this month.

The Terps will be seeking their eighth win when they battle Navy on Wednesday. The Midshipmen also conquered North Carolina earlier this year.

Score by quarters:

Tar Baby Soccermen Whip Duke

Carolina's Drew Murphey scored his twelfth goal of the season yesterday as the UNC freshman soccer team climaxed an unbeaten season with a 4-1 victory over Duke.

Carolina led by 2-1 at halftime, and was never in any difficulty during the final period.

Trustees Propose Revamping Programs At WC, N.C. State

At the meeting of the Consolidated University of North Carolina Board of Trustees Monday, a move was proposed to turn Woman's College and State College into The University of North Carolina at Greensboro and at Raleigh.

This move was backed by Consolidated University President William C. Friday, who delivered a speech before the board in which he discussed the proposed changes.

Another issue discussed at the meeting was the Pearsall Study of the possibility of admitting Charlotte College into the University of North Carolina. No decision has been reached by the group, but progress was cited.

In line with these and other problems of the University, a mass meeting has been called in Charlotte by the trustees of UNC, NC State, and WCUNC alumnae to discuss higher education in North Carolina.

The proposed changes in the status of the two branches of the University would have the effect of admitting male undergraduates to Woman's College and of allowing State College to expand into the liberal arts field.

"The proposed statutory definition would have our campuses function, in fact, as one university carrying out university-type activities on a cooperative basis," Friday stated.

"If the statutory provision is made, the undergraduate program in liberal arts, fine arts, and the sciences must be expanded and made accessible to men and women on our three campuses."

Male undergraduates are not currently admitted to Woman's College, and State College cannot currently award the liberal arts degree.

Friday said that in the Greensboro, High Point and Winston Salem areas there will be 3500 high school graduates each year by 1965. Since no community college is contemplated for this area, the University must respond by expanding its undergraduate program on the Greensboro campus to meet the need.

"Finally, if we are to be one University, it will be essential that we have a common name for the three units, such as the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill, the University of North Carolina at Raleigh, and the University of North Carolina at Greensboro," he said.

He said that if the trustees feel that the proposed definition and new name are essential, statutory action must be taken. He feels the General Assembly will have to enact these changes prior to action by the trustees.

President Friday also made it clear that he feels the proposed changes must be made before any expansion of the University to other areas.

This statement was apparently directed straight at the proposal of admitting Charlotte College into the University.

The Pearsall study of Charlotte College was without decision in its report to the trustees meeting. Reporting for the committee, chairman Tom Pearsall said:

"We must determine confidently what the University's responsibilities are in this respect. The principle is clear. The State University must make its resources accessible, must make them effective in the life of the state.

"But there are questions of means, of criteria for determining the best and justifiable locations, of conservations and standards, which still must be answered."

The "higher education" meeting at Charlotte on November 20 will discuss these questions of expansion and consolidation, among others, in an effort to inform friends of the University of the scope and challenge of supporting education in North Carolina.

Facts of higher education in the state, from the public schools through the university system, will be discussed, with emphases on the role of the University of North Carolina.

UNC Chancellor William B. Aycock will be the principal speaker.

Art Theatre Opens With 'Jules & Jim'

Durham's shuttered Rialto Theatre will re-open tonight under the new management of Maggie Dent, former secretary of the YWCA here at UNC. The theatre, which is being run under a strict art-house policy, is believed to be the first such theatre in the South to be patterned on the New York art theatres.

Among tonight's highlights will be the introductory remarks of Walter Spearman, Professor of Journalism and a board member of the Chapel Hill Film Society. There will also be a exhibit of paintings by James Harrill of Lincolnton.

Premiering the 'new' theatre tonight will be a short currently running in New York, "The Dream of Wild Horses" and a feature comedy "Jules and Jim" directed by Francois Truffaut, starring Jeanne Moreau, Henri Serre and Oskar Werner. The feature has been acclaimed by European and American critics who hail Truffaut as a 'major' creative film director. He introduced the French New Wave with "Four Hundred Blows."

Features that will be unique with the Rialto according to Miss Dent, include program notes on the films being shown, continuous exhibitions of paintings by artists in North Carolina and elsewhere; a lobby area replacing the concession stand so that patrons may have coffee and read the latest British and American film periodicals; special programs of imaginatively made films for children on weekends, and presentation of talented performers and creative film makers with their work.

The Rialto will specialize in first-run foreign and independently produced films, artistically made shorts and revivals of old favorites of the Twenties and early Thirties, as well as the pictures considered classics and landmarks of the motion picture. Forthcoming films include Jules Dassin's "Phaedra," starring Melina Mercouri; "Last Year at Marienbad," "La Notte,' "Cleo from 5 to 7," "L'Avventura," "The Island," and "Shoot the Piano Player."

Holman Succeeds Heard As Dean Of Graduate School

FATS, MOMS FEATURED AT GERMANS

The German Club will present Fats Domino and Jackie "Moms" Mabley for the fall concert this Friday.

Fats is considered to be one of the greatest exponents of rock and roll, a type of music which he says evolved from Dixieland jazz fifteen years ago, but which was referred to as "rhythm and blues." Fats has scored success as a live performer and as a recording artist, having sold over ten million records in the last three years alone.

"Moms", a female comedy monologist, has been playing top nightclubs in the nation, her most recent billing being at the Playboy in Chicago. Her humor involves current politics and the comic irony found in inter-racial relations and everyday living. Her husky voice, coupled with a lively and seasoned vocabulary, assures an entertaining performance.

Effective February 1 Next Year

C. Hugh Holman, Kenan Professor of English, was named yesterday as Dean of the Graduate School to succeed Dean Alexander Heard who wil become chancellor of Vanderbilt University effective February 1, 1963.

Chancellor William B. Aycock announced the appointment following approval by the board of trustees' executive committee and President William C. Friday.

Prof. Holman, whose speciality is American Literature, is former acting dean of the College of Arts and sciences at Chapel Hill. He was chairman of the Department of English from 1957 to 1962, and chairman of the Division of Humanities of the University from 1959 to 1962. He was appointed a Kenan Professor of English in 1959. He has been the Chairman of the Board of Governors of the UNC Press since 1960.

In his presentation to the trustees Chancellor Aycock said of Professor Holman:

"Dr. Holman has brilliantly established himself as a teacher, scholar, and administrator. His strong reputation as teacher of undergraduates is, if possible, surpassed by his success as an instructor and director of graduate studies in American literature. His scholarship is prolific and excellent. As of July, 1962, his fifth book is in page proof. His twenty-three book reviews and forty-three learned articles, ranging from notes to essay-length studies, have appeared in scholarly journals and collections. He is recognized throughout the world as an authority on American fiction; Thomas Wolfe is one of his prime studies.

"Dr. Holman's considerable administrative ability, demonstrated before he joined the staff of the University, has been shown again in his numerous duties here. His experience in the offices he has held here assures his knowledge of the local situation. In particular, he has clear comprehension of the first importance of graduate studies to the existence of this institution as a university."

A native of Cross Anchor, S. C., he is 48 years old, received the B.S. degree at Presbyterian College in South Carolina in 1936, where he majored in chemistry. He received the Ph.D. degree in English at Chapel Hill in 1949.

Speaker Eyes Student Role

By BOB JONES

Carey Mc Williams, who debated Dr. Russell Kirk here last night on the topic "How Much Freedom in Academic Freedom?", told something of his past activities in politics and gave some of his views on important campus organizations in an informal interview yesterday in the Carolina Inn.

Mr. McWilliams, curently a Political Science instructor at Oberlin College, began working for the Democratic Party as a high school student in Merced County, California where he did precinct work. At the University of California he received both his undergraduate degree and M.A. in Political Science was active in the Young Democratic State Central Committee and was Campus Coordinator for Stevenson in the 1952 Presidential election. Through his connections with SLATE, a liberal student political action group at Berkley, he was instrumental in organizing the 1960 student demonstrations in San Francisco against HUAC.

At his interview yesterday Mr. Williams stated, in response to a question on the function of student government, that the purpose of student government is two-fold. Its primary goal is to train students to accept civic responsibility. In student government, which is very similar to small town politics, the student is confronted with many of the problems of the American political system. The second point he made was that student government encourages and directs the individual to develop political imagination.

Concerning the usefullness of fraternities as an important part of campus life Mr. McWilliams noted, "Fraternities are valuable in that they are student organizations which are independent of the administration. Also they help maintain a diversity as opposed to the mass society of dormitory life where it is hard for the student to assert his individuality."

Another of his major points concerning fraternities was that they are founded on a formal ethic devoted to a whole series of meals and purposes. This he feels is lacking in American society as a whole. Mc Williams added, "We gain our unity as a society and a culture only in a round-about way by the identification that comes from a common enemy. Even the Russians aren't so bad off in this respect.

On Academic Freedom

Panelists Clash On Question

By JOHN GOINS

"The purpose of a state supported institution is to educate, not to indoctrinate," said W. W. Taylor, Raleigh attorney and a former member of the North Carolina General Assembly in a panel discussion yesterday at Carroll Hall on "Radical Movements in Chapel Hill."

"Students who form an organization should not object to the faculty or administration knowing about that organization," said Mr. Herbert Bradshaw, Associate Editor of the Durham Herald.

Taylor said that the college campus is not a place of refuge. "There is nothing sacred about the term 'academic freedom,' for it's also subject to the rules of society. Academic freedom must operate within reasonable bounds."

Taylor charged administrators with too often forgetting those who pay their salaries, the taxpayers. "The public was shocked when they were told of the Communist influence in UNC," stated Taylor.

Taylor went on to say that since UNC was the property of the North Carolina tax-payers, the university should fulfill the wishes of the public in expelling Communists from Chapel Hil

Lowenstein said that the University should be a place where dissent can flourish.

"The way to stop Communists is to let them have freedom of speech," Lowenstein claimed, "for every time they speak they make enemies."

Lowenstein said that Communists should be alowed to use University buildings for their speeches, citing the case of the Communist who gained free publicity and drew a large crowd by speaking on the street after being refused the use of a University building.

He continued, saying that we are no better than the Communists, who grant freedom of speech to no one but members of the Party, when we say, "Everyone is free to speak at our University except Communists."

Bradshaw quoted Jefferson's statement that "The government governs best that governs least" in saying that University students should be governed not so much by rules but by the standards of "gentlemanly conduct." "There must be a basis of mutual understanding and mutual concern."

Answering the critics of his newspaper's (Durham Herald) coverage of the American Legion's charge of Communist infiltration at UNC, Bradshaw said that it is the responsibility of the press to inform readers on matters of public concern.

Taylor charged the instructors at UNC of encouraging Communism here, and he said that was the reason there was so much Communist activity in Chapel Hill and not at Duke or Wake Forest.

PANEL—"Radical Movements in Chapel Hill" was the topic of this panel discussion sponsored by the UNC National Student Association Committee yesterday afternoon in Carroll Hall. Shown (l. to r.) are: Al Lowenstein, instructor at N. C. State; Harry DeLung, UNC NSA Coordinator; Chuck Wyre, moderator; W. W. Taylor, Raleigh attorney; and Herbert Bradshaw, Associate Editor of the Durham Herald.

Peace Corps Trainees Move Into Last Week Of UNC Stay

Peace Corps trainees on campus are now in their 10th and last week of educational training aimed at preparing them for work in Venezuela. They leave UNC this Saturday for Puerto Rico, where they will spend two weeks studying and undergoing final training before arriving in Caracaus in middle December.

The 33 men and women, ranging in ages from 20 to 58, have been attending classes beginning at 7:30 a.m. and running through 9:30 p. m., with breaks for meals.

"It's hard to average more than five and a half to six hours sleep a night, including some study," said one young man, commenting on the busy day's schedule. "We feel frustrated because we would like to do all we can and we don't have the time," said another young man who has worked as a newspaperman and knows the challenges of deadlines. A vigorous outdoorsman said, "Nobody really expects us to read all the assignments they give us here."

The majority of the trainees feel that the real chance for relieving the day's tension comes during the late afternoon hour from 5 to 6 p.m. when they have a class in physical training. Here they release mental strain in sports, calisthenics, and tumbling with even some judo and rope climbing.

The group in training includes two married couples. One of the wives carried a round pillow with her to classes to catch cat-naps between sessions.

The other wife, Gretchen Warwick, is the youngest member of the group at 20 years. She and her husband, Robert, were married in June and foresee no problems as marital members of the project. "We seem to meet our problems together, and I think, if anything, it's a better way to go through the program," said Robert.

Despite the many class hours, the participants in the group all have high praise for the educational program they have had at the University. "It is beautifully scheduled," said Edmond Major Mietzner, who has worked as a high school teacher. "I don't know how well the Peace Corps was organized with universities in regard to the courses, hours, plans, and purposes of the courses, until I became a member of this program," he said.

The director of this whirlwind project has been UNC Professor of political science Federico G. Gil. Prof. Gil is also the director of the University's Institute of Latin American Studies. His many contracts with newspapermen, educators and scholars, and experts on Latin American affairs have provided the trainees with a round of well-informed visiting lecturers.

The teaching staff for the program has consisted of staff members from 20 departments and schools of the University.

Carter Case And Student Government

"Today, highly organized and responsible student government has become one of the rich heritages of University life at Chapel Hill."

So reported the special Medford committee to the Board of Trustees last spring on its investigation of the trial of Anne Royal Carter. Miss Carter had been suspended from UNC by the Women's Council in May, 1961 for cheating on a quiz.

She is questioning the legal right of the chancellor and faculty (who have received disciplinary authority from the trustees) to delegate that authority to a student council. ("In the discharge of this duty," the trustees said of the faculty's disciplinary authority, "delegation of such authority may be made to established agencies of student government".)

Still yet to be decided the Carter case is a potential threat for the "highly organized and responsible student government" at UNC.

* * *

The Medford committee upheld the actions of the administration, faculty and Women's Council. It said due process had been granted Miss Carter; that all legal requirements had been met; and that the trustees should consider no more individual disciplinary cases.

Since that time the case has swayed back and forth, in and out of court. Miss Carter petitioned the Wake County Superior Court for a review of the case. While that review was pending this summer Chancellor Aycock decided to readmit her as a summer school student, although the Women's Council had not voted to do so.

The Wake court met Sept. 21 and the judge gave Miss Carter a new hearing on the basis that Women's Council records were insufficient to reach a decision. The case was postponed until Nov. 5, and then again, until tomorrow, Nov. 15.

The hearing could be of great importance to the future of student self-discipline, and of student government as a principle. If the chancellor and faculty cannot delegate student self-disciplinary authority to student councils, then is any student governing body legal? If any student suspended by the student councils can successfully appeal to the courts, then of what value are the councils? The results of the long drawn-out Carter case may provide some answers, possibly unpleasant answers. (JC)

Councils 'Assumed' Authority?

In hopes of somewhat clarifying the issues involved in the Anne Royal Carter case, here is the gist of her "Petition for Judicial Review of final administrative decision of the Board of Trustees of the University of North Carolina":

The petitioner, Miss Carter, "prays the Court" to order "such hearings as it shall deem appropriate to guarantee to petitioner that she be in no way deprived of her right to continue her education at the University of North Carolina without due process . . ."

The petitioner holds:

"That the action of the Board of Trustees in adopting the report of the (Medford) committee is contrary to law and the facts as are more fully set forth in the record . . ."

"That the Board of Trustees . . . were under legal obligaton to review the facts in this case . . . but have failed to do so, and said action of the trustees is unconstitutional . . ."

"That any attempted delegation of said authority has been without standards, contrary to law and void and of no effect;"

"That the action of the Women's Honor Council . . . was without legal force and effect for that said Women's Council had not been delegated but simply assumed the authority to act in the matter of the suspension of your applicant;"

"That the student Constitution pursuant to which this action was taken is of no binding force and effect and has not properly and legally or constitutionally conferred any power or authority to the Women's Council to suspend a student properly admitted to the University of North Carolina;"

"That the applicant has been deprived of a constitutional right granted to her under the Fourteenth Amendment of the Constitution of the United States, i.e. the right once admitted to continue as a student unless deprived of said right after hearing commensurate with the requirements of due process . . ."

* * *

Miss Carter asked that her suspension be set aside, and in the court's discretion, have a hearing de novo or further hearings before the court. These are essentially the claims with which the Wake County Superior Court will be dealing Thursday. (JC)

Poor Conduct At Dormitory Meet

To the Editors:

The supposed political rally held at Ehringhaus on Monday night was met with the same juvenile appreciation as has been experienced by other groups attempting to communicate with the many residents. The aim of this meeting was undoubtedly to enlighten prospective voters who had not had a chance to see the candidates in person. It may be expected that a candidate be faced with some opposition while voicing the merits of his party's platform, but is it expected to stand and orate in a pseudo-dignified manner while being barraged with assorted matter from the floors above? (For the edification of those not present, the assorted matter was not rose petals.)

It must be disheartening for a candidate to think that if elected it will be his responsibility to serve those very individuals pelting him with trash. In all probability these people will be those to raise the loudest hue and cry when they feel that their interests have been the least bit neglected by a class officer.

It was presumed until Monday evening that there was also present on this campus an unwritten code concerning the courteous treatment of Carolina coeds under all circumstances. In all there were four coeds present at this affair, and they were also subject to treatment at least diametrically opposed to anything vaguely resembling propriety.

It is true that one of this country's blessings is a right to express political opinion, but there is also extant on this campus a concept of "gentlemanly conduct" which is theoretically to apply to each and every male enrolled here.

One can only hope in statistics, which show that most of the hecklers will not be present next year. Perhaps some shred of decorum will be reserved as an example for future elections.

Candidate Thanks Voters, Winners

To The Editors:

I would like to express my appreciation to any juniors who supported me in this past election. Also I extend congratulations to Woody Harrison who was elected Vice-President of our class. Woody did an excellent job last year as Treasurer of the class and no doubt he and Charlie Shaffer will lead our class to a very successful year.

It was an honor to have participated in such a clean-fought campaign. To me this is a very important part of our life at Carolina—we must learn how to excerise the tremendously important freedom and right to vote and elect our representatives. We must learn to study candidates, their platforms, and the issues involved. We must learn that "politics" is not a nasty word but is an essential part of the great American way of life. We are learning these things here at a great university where we have the opportunity to excerise many, many important freedoms. One of these freedoms is the right to participate in our class functions—Let's get behind our class officers; Let's make this a year to remember and let's give our officers something to work for, not against.

NAACP Needs Fund Support

To the Editors:

Many people in Chapel Hill have voiced deep concern over the situation which prevailed when James Meredith was admitted to the University of Mississippi and have expressed a desire to be of assistance. The organization which bears the major financial responsibility for these cases in the courts is the N.A.A.C.P. Legal Defense and Education Fund. A check made out to NAACP Legal Defense and sent to 10 Columbus Circle, New York 19, N.Y. would be the best way that any of us could help.

Effects Of The Democratic Debacle

"Indeed, Suh! Some Of Mah Kinfolk Are Yankees"

"He Was Just Sitting Out There!"

Jonas & Lake Might Contend For Governor

Attempting to assess the Democratic debacle that occurred in North Carolina on Tuesday—and it was more of a Democratic debacle than a real Republican victory—is sort of like trying to work your way through a maze. There are numerless blind alleys and what seems to be the right way out leads only to an incredible conclusion.

There are signs that point to the beginning of a real two-party system in the State, one sign in the person of Charles R. Jonas that points to a Republican governor, and a thicket of signs indicating that the Democratic Party is in real trouble.

Some of these signs are deceptive, some merely suggestive, and some are contradictory. But, if nothing else, the astonishing Republican successes should dispel any lingering doubt that the Democratic Party is wallowing.

The first Statewide effects will be felt in the 1963 General Assembly, which is practically guaranteed to be lame if not completely paralyzed. The legislators will be operating in a power vacuum, the likes of which have not been seen for more than a quarter of a century. The tendency to drift figures to be irresistible. With the Democratic leadership in embarrassing disarray, the outstanding accomplishment of the 1963 General Assembly promises to be that it will convene on time.

Beyond the 1963 General Assembly, the prospects raised by Tuesday's election are even more forbiding from the Democratic point of view. In little more than a year from now the first open strikes for the governorship will be made, and Dr. I. Beverly Lake remains the only serious Democratic contender. Joe Hunt, the former House speaker who was at least an outside possibility for the Democratic nomination, will never be able to burrow up from the Republican landslide in Guilford. Bert Bennett, the State Democratic chairman and Governor Sanford's choice as his successor, has been crippled by the Party losses on Tuesday. And Dr. Henry Jordan, the former State highway chief who is clean as far as Tuesday's debacle is concerned, is ten years too late. Despite his unsuccessful campaign against Terry Sanford in the 1960 primaries, I. Beverly Lake already has one leg up on the Democratic nomination and there doesn't seem to be anybody around who can keep him from straddling it.

There is, however, somebody around who can keep Dr. Lake from straddling the governorship. That man, obviously, is Charles R. Jonas. Faced with a choice between Lake and Jonas, liberal Democrats — and there are still some around, although remarkably subdued—would flock to Jonas in droves. If the Governorship fell to the Republicans, it would be reasonable to expect other States offices to go too.

Right now the State's Democratic tradition alone makes the prospect of Republican control incredible. But Democrats already are discovering to their dismay that tradition alone is no longer enough.

There is, of course, the possibility that Tuesday's reversals will have a rejuvenating effect on the Democratic Party: that the threadbare cliches will be discarded, the councils cleared of party hacks, and genuine Democrats offered as Democratic candidates. But that in itself would constitute a challenge more formidable than anything the Republicans could offer.

REFLECTIONS

I suspect that if we are to restore ends to our colleges and universities, the task must be accomplished by the students themselves, not by Congressional appropriations. At more than one college, student councils already have petitioned the college administrators for stricter intellectual standards, enforcement of regulations against cheating, and reduction of the cafeteria-style curriculum to some semblance of intellectual order. Too many students and too many professors have come to regard our structure of higher education as little better than a racket: a system whose principal achievements are salaries for instructors and snap-degrees for uneducated graduates. I hope that the principal victims of this racket may make themselves heard, and that soon. These victims are the genuine students who aspire to order and meaning in mind and soul.

To the Editors:

I am glad to see that I had misjudged Mr. Neely. He is right about me. I did not stay long enough to see the picketers go in to hear the discussion, but I did see Chief Beaumont come out to where they were. I wonder seriously what the bulk of the dsicussion could have been. When I left Mr. Levchenko had already delivered his talk, which was quite good in spite of his obvious difficulties with the language. Mr. Madison had also delivered about half of his talk, which I later found was about twice as long as Mr. Levchenko's. And there was an evasive talk. I left when I did because of another engagement that evening and because Mr. Madison did not seem to be contributing anything in his ramblings. I am left with one question after reading Mr. Neely's letter. If the picketers were so ready to picket before they had seen or heard Mr. Levchenko, did they also picket after they heard him?

About Liberals. My dictionary has three pertinent definitions of a liberal. 1) one who is tolerant of views differing from his own. 2) one who favors democratic governments, as opposed to monarchies. 3) one who favors political reforms tending toward a more democratic government. After I had read these definitions, I realized that Mr. Neely had hit a sore spot when he spoke of my liberal cohorts. For those who have not already heard, I am perhaps UNC's most vocal monarchist in the student body. It seems quite a paradox that I should have friends in Student Govt., the New Left, PLC, YAF, YDC YRC, and other left wing organizations. But actually I have nothing against liberals if they are also liberal by the first definition.

Wake Forest Rift With Church Aired

RALEIGH (UPI) — The Executive Committee of the Baptist State Convention recommended today that a group from the Baptist organization and Wake Forest College explore their differences and try to close "a widening breach between the Convention and the college."

The recommendation was contained in a resolution appended to the report of the General Board when the report was introduced on the floor.

The resolution was a result of some last-hour meetings between dissident pastors and members of the Executive Committee. The 20 pastors had threatened to introduce a new slate of trustees for Wake Forest College when the Nominations Committee makes its report Thursday.

Action on the resolution and the General Board report was expected tonight.

The resolution said "the Executive Committee was aware of a widening breach between the school and the Convention and "We have felt some responsibility in this apparent trend and have taken what we have considered to be appropriate steps toward improvement."

The commission said progress has been made during recent months but "we feel further exploration of this matter between the college and the Executive Committee would be fruitful and highly beneficial to the cause of Christ.

The controversy between Wake Forest and the Convention has simmered for years. It boiled anew when the public relations director of Wake Forest published a novel which 20 pastors disagreed with.

Senior Class To Sponsor Teacher Of Month Award

The Senior Class Cabinet met Monday night and discussed several of the projects for the class of "63".

Among those issues considered was the selection of the Faculty Award of the Month. The faculty member will be chosen on the basis of his contribution to the students in and out of the classroom.

The purpose of the award is to recognize excellence in lecturing and in the ability to stimulate the Academic interest of students.

The possibility of having a joint combo party with the Junior class was presented and will be investigated. Plans were begun for Senior Week in the Spring.

President Vinroot congratulated the Cabinet for work on the All-Campus Weekend in October.

Fear, Insecurity Basic In 'Miracle Worker' Role

By PATRICE PERRIN

"Show me what it feels like to walk around in a cemetery when it's dark."

"There's a hole in front of you."

"There's something behind you."

"See something!"

"Be afraid!" said Director Wes Van Tassel to a little blonde girl on the stage.

She was trying out for the role of Helen Keller in "The Miracle Worker." The bright lights were on and her mother and father were watching somewhere out in the audience. So she closed her eyes to make it dark. It wasn't very hard to be scared.

Behind her sat eight other hair-twisting, fingernail-biting, leg-swinging little girls. Each was nervously waiting her turn and imagining how she could be deaf, blind, and mute just a little bit better.

In the audience a few students and parents watched the tryouts. The fathers smoked and the mothers worried.

"Are you sure she's too young?" said an eager mother behind Wes. A very small voice accompanied by big blue eyes peering out of golden curls and four raised fingers announce "I'm only four."

The director smiled, nodded and thanked the mother.

Van Tassel looked for a lot. In the adults he wanted good voice quality and sincerity. He was watched pronunciation. The character of Annie Sullivan was going to be hard to cast.

He needed a "miracle worker" in someone who knew how to bring out the best in a child. She must have depth enough to answer Helen's question "What is a soul?" and strength enough to force understanding on a dark mind.

Wes turned his thoughts to the thirty-five girls who wanted the role of Helen Keller. "Don't be inhibited, and don't ask me what that means", he said with a smile. He had made it all a game for them. They were all good but one would have to be excellent for theatre-in-the round. There would be no stage settings and the audience attention had to be held with acting intensity. He had only until the 14th of December to rehearse.

Twenty little girls waited eagerly.

"All right Susie, you're out in the woods and it's dark . . ."

UNC Renews Grid Rivalry With Irish

By MICKEY BLACKWELL

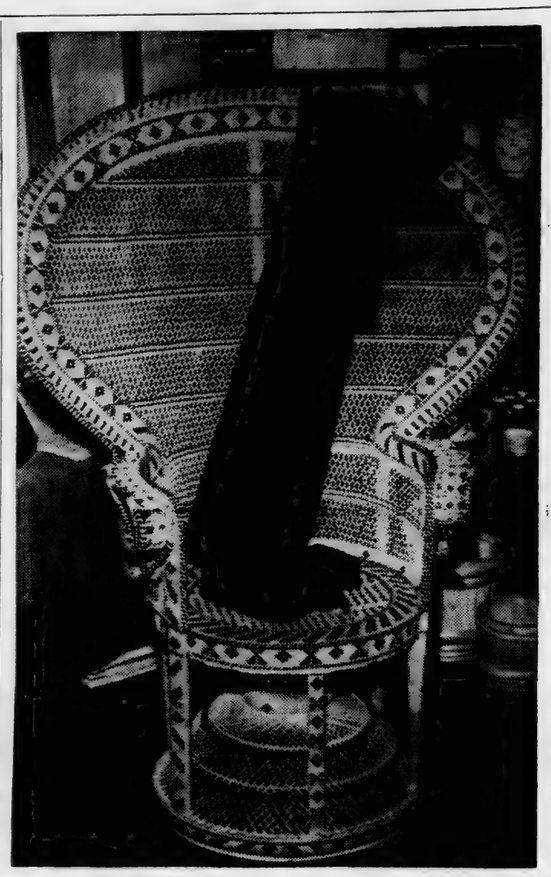
The Fighting Irish of Notre Dame entertain UNC's Tar Heels Saturday at South Bend, Indiana.

The Tar Heels, fresh from their 11-7 win over Virginia and the Irish, jubilant from their 43-22 romp over Pittsburgh, will resume their pigskin series which started in 1949.

Their last meeting was at Chapel Hill in 1960, Carolina won, 12-7.

UNC head scout, Emmett Cheek, who saw the Irish defeat Pitt last Saturday said, "Notre Dame really had a great day and about everything they did turned into a TD."

Notre Dame's most outstanding player is senior quarterback Daryle Lamonica. Cheek observed that Lamonica "had his best day against Pittsburgh. It seemed when they couldn't make any yardage, Lamonica would drop back, pass, and they would have their first down."



Lamonica completed 20 passes out of 34 attempted last week for 243 yards. His favorite target was Jim Kelly, junior right end, who has caught more than 20 passes this year.

Sophomore Don Hogan, a right half is Notre Dame's leading ground-gainer. He has averaged more than four yards per carry.

Cheek compared Notre Dame's running game with Clemson's and its passing game with Maryland's.

Concerning his own team, UNC head football coach Jim Hickey said he was pleased with his team's improvement in the past four games. "Our defense has improved a great deal every week. Our linebackers played well against Virginia, and they are working real hard to be up for the Notre Dame game," Hickey said.

Hickey said that speedy halfback Ronnie Jackson will still not be able to play because of the hip injury he received in the Clemson game.

Cheerleaders Head Rally In Tin Can

Saturday, North Carolina travels to Notre Dame at South Bend, Ind. in quest of its fourth football victory.

Since it is impossible for the student body to follow the team to this game, the Carolina cheerleaders have devised a way for the student body to stay at school, and at the same time cheer the team to that fourth victory.

RADIO-LOOP BROADCAST

Head Cheerleader Hannis Latham announced yesterday that the cheerleaders have arranged with Bell Telephone and Telegraph for a radio-loop broadcast circuit between South Bend and Chapel Hill on Saturday afternoon.

With this set-up, the cheers of the student body are going to be broadcast over a speaker system located behind the Tar Heel bench in the stadium at Notre Dame.

"In order for this to be successful, it is necessary to have a large and concentrated grouping of students here at UNC," said Latham. "We have chosen the Tin-Can as the place from which our broadcast will originate."

Latham: Real Blast

"The cheerleaders have spent a lot of time organizing this event. This is the first time anything of this type has been attempted here at Carolina. With the cooperation of everyone this could turn into a real blast," said Latham.

The cheerleader also announced that a mock football field will be set up showing the progress of the teams, first downs, yard markers and score board.

A play by play broadcast of the game will also be piped into the Tin Can.

Latham, who will accompany the team to South Bend and be in contact with the other cheerleaders here in Chapel Hill, urged support for this rally.

"The Tar Heels can beat Notre Dame but I believe that the importance of the support of the student body cannot be over-emphasized as concerned with the performance of the team. By cheering for the team at the Tin Can, we will be showing that we are supporting them."

Combo Party, Too

Lee Ferrell and The Trojans will play for dancing and listening beginning at 1:30 in the Can.

"Just being a woman and a blanket (and whatever else is necessary to have a good time)," said Latham.

"This is a chance for the entire student body to get together and do some real socializing and at the same time, help get our team on the stick. Incidentally, refreshments will be provided," Latham concluded.

Oklahoma Is Choice Over Tough Mizzou

NEW YORK (UPI) — Missouri was the only team ranked among the nation's top 10 which was not listed as a favorite Tuesday in a rundown of odds on Saturday's leading college football games.

Resurgent Oklahoma, which has ripped off four straight victories after losing two of its first three games, was rated a four-point choice over Missouri, unbeaten but tied once in eight games this year. Missouri is ranked No. 6 nationally, Oklahoma No. 16.

Of the two top contenders for the No. 1 ranking, Southern California was figured to win rather easily and Alabama was seen facing a tough fight.

The Southern Cal Trojans, rated tops in the nation by the UPI board of coaches, were favored by 16 points over Navy in one of the day's top intersectional games. Alabama, ranked No. 2 was picked by only six points over Georgia Tech in one of its toughest tests of the year.

Third-ranked Mississippi is rated 16 points over Tennessee, fourth-ranked Wisconsin 18 over Illinios; fifth-ranked Texas over Texas Christian and Northwestern No. 7 5 over Michigan State.

Tag Football Nearing Close

By STUART BALL

Both Mangum and Manly advanced in the Dormitory Tag-football playoffs Monday by topping Navy and Ruffin respectively. The Mangum victory took them to the quarter-finals and Manly's win assured them a berth in the finals.

Manly, holding the opposition scoreless through its first four games before Joyner finally broke the ice in the second round of the playoffs, had to fight for its life in eaking out a 13-12 win over the Ruffin Hosers.

No Runaway

The score was deadlocked 0-0 at the end of the first half and it was plain that neither team was going to run away with the game.

In the second period Lamar Reid of Ruffin broke through the Manly defense and put the Hosers ahead 6-0 as their extra point kick was no good. The Riverrats came right back, however as Russ McCormick scored a TD and Jeff Swing added what was to be the winning margin on an extra point kick.

Ruffin was not through, though, as it again caught the Manly defense off guard and Phil McKnight scored a six-pointer. With their collective back to the wall, the Riverrates drove down field and Bill Hanna pushed across the winning score with just under four minutes remaining.

The Riverrates will meet the winner of the Alexander Playboy-Mangum Maverick contest for the Dorm championship Wednesday November 14.

In the Mangum-Navy contest the Mavericks had no trouble defeating the Midshipmen as they romped to a 46-0 win. George Shelton led the scoring parade by tallying three touchdowns and extra points Charles Rhyne scored twice and Doug Pearson and P. W. Swing added one each.

The Grad Division now has its finalists by virtue of Law School III's win over Med School I. The 12-0 win by the lawyers made the finals an all Law School affair. Law School I had already clinched a birth by whipping Law II 14-7.

Wake County Court Hears Carter Case Today

Freedom Needed In Universities, Debaters Agree

By JIM CLOTFELTER

Dr. Russell Kirk and Carey McWilliams Jr. Tuesday night agreed academic freedom was indispensable to the university community —but couldn't agree why.

They were debating "How Much Freedom in Academic Freedom?" in Carroll Hall.

"You can't have a genuine University without a considerable degree of academic freedom," Kirk said, but often, "people who say 'academic freedom' actually mean 'academic power'—the power to indoctrinate. They mean academic freedom for themselves only."

Kirk, educator and columnist for the conservative National Review, said "academic freedom" was used as justification for hiring Communists as faculty members, and for faculties which permitted the existence of low academic standards.

Essential Value

An instructor at Oberlin College, McWilliams said his defense of academic freedom was based on its "essential value" and not its "utility."

"We must have more," he said, "than the ethics of mere prudence, more than mere convenience." Academic freedom, he said, is composed of essentially the responsibilities of the educator and the educated.

McWilliams said the idea that one Communist on a University faculty would "corrupt" the student body was "counterfeit logic."

"Any picture of a monolithic Communist world is likely to err," he said.

Liberate

He favored accepting on a faculty even "those whom you might think are wrong, those whose ideas are considered 'unsound'." The "perspective of idol-shattering" should be accepted in the academy, McWilliams said, because the clash between opposite views could best "liberate the imagination."

As to Communists as teachers, McWilliams said "of course it is a risk," but in order to better seek the truth, the university should "let in the darkness"—"admit, 'unsound' ideas."

Kirk said the university "cannot tolerate the Communist as a teacher."

The Communist's methods as teachers "are opposed to academic freedom," Kirk said. He does not openly announce his political views, but "rows with muffled ears," said the educator.

Cannot Tolerate

The Communist's "colleagues cannot tolerate him because he will never tolerate them."

But Kirk said he felt the Communist danger was much smaller than in former years—"although the state is not withering away, the Marxists among us are."

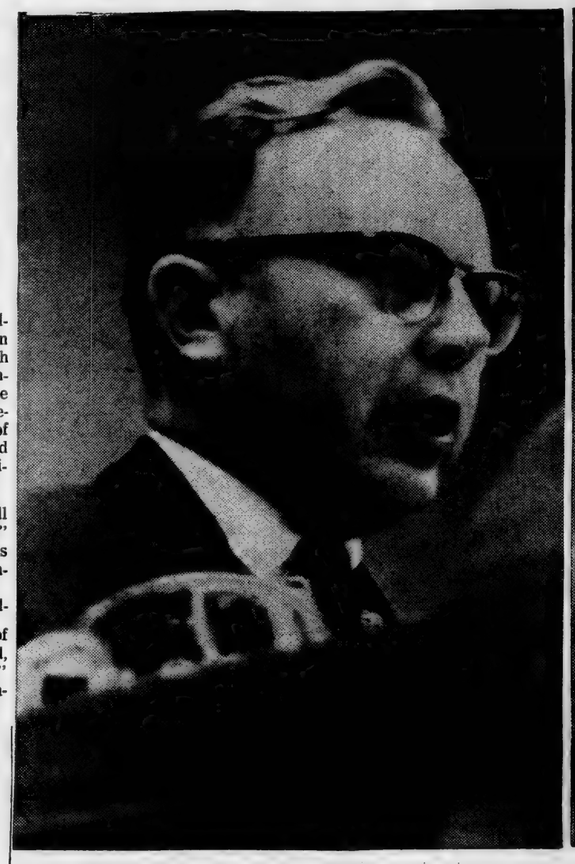
On defense of academic freedom, Kirk said the threat of its limitation came as much "from within the academy as from without."

McWilliams agreed that the "responsibility to retain academic freedom cannot be left with the faculty."

Violations

Both speakers itemized several instances of academic freedom violations to teachers for political reasons. Instances of denial of academic freedom because of differences in thought on psychology and sociology were also cited.

On low-or-high academic standards, Kirk said he sympathized with the professor who recently wrote that U. S. colleges were "turning into playgrounds." The National Review columnist cited several examples where professors had been dismissed for attacking their school's low standards.



"Unenthusiastic students who refuse to question or object . . . invite the professor to become a secular indoctrinator," he said.

McWilliams said "demands always are going to be made" on the U. S. education system, which is "explicitly egalitarian and democratic . . . And, in a sense, those demands must be made in a democracy. This is the 'pound of flesh' exacted by legislatures and other bodies which pay the university's bills."

"The academic city on the hill and the political city on the hill," McWilliams said, "have always been essentially the same in America."

On university textbooks: McWilliams called them the "curse of American education." Kirk agreed, and attacked the "holy textbook."

There were questions and answer after the formal debate.

U.S. Watching Construction Of Fish Port

WASHINGTON (UPI)—The United States will watch closely the Soviet construction of port facilities in Cuba and presumably will take "appropriate measures" should it pose a military threat, the State Department said Wednesday.

Press officer Lincoln White told a news conference he did not know whether work had started on what the Russians have described as a "fishing port" in Havana Bay. But he declared, "Since the U. S. government is anxious to see that such facilities do not present a military threat to the United States or to the hemisphere, we will continue to follow with great inerest any port building activities in Cuba." Asked about rumors that some kind of port is under construction near Banes, in northeast Cuba, White said he had no information other than "speculation." Moscow announced in September its plans to build port facilities in the Havana area to serve both Cuban vessels and Soviet trawlers which fish the Atlantic. Some officials have expressed concern that the port might be used by submarines or other military vssels.

On another subject, White said the State Department knows of no Soviet-Cuban proposals being submitted to the Cuba crisis negotiations at the United Nations, as reported from New York.

"I don't know where these reports come from," White said. "Nobody in this building, the State Department, knows anything about them."

White also reported that the U.S. arms blockade of Cuba is continuing, as are surveillance flights over the island. He did not elaborate.

LBJ Pledges No Agreement To Aid Reds

CHICAGO (UPI) — Vice President Lyndon B. Johnson said Wednesday the United States has not and will never enter into an agreement that will fortify Communist imperialism "against the united action of free men" in the Western Hemisphere.

Johnson also pledged that the United States will not make such a commitment covering any other part of the world.

"The purpose of the United States remained unchanged toward this hemisphere," the vice president told members of the American Petroleum Institute convention.

"We intend that the Americas shall be free of communism, free of those who serve Communist masters, and through the joint efforts of the Alliance for Progress free of the seeds from which communism grows.

"The United States has not—and we will never—enter any commitment by which Communist imperialism shall be fortified against the united action of free men, in this hemisphere or any other."

Johnson's statement appeared designed to pacify critics of President Kennedy's Cuban policy who have expressed fears that negotiations between the United States and Soviet Russia would bar any future invasion of Cuba by non-U.S. forces and permit the island nation to remain as a Communist foothold in the Western Hemisphere.

Speedy Settlement Of Cuban Problem Seen By U Thant

UNITED NATIONS, N. Y. (UPI) —Acting Secretary General Thant, after extending consultations with U.S., Soviet and Cuban envoys, revealed Wednesday that some progress is being made toward a peaceful and speedy settlement of the Cuban crisis.

Cuban and Soviet diplomats put a joint plan before Thant Tuesday for solution of the crisis, but its details remained secret.

Ambassador Adlai E. Stevenson and other U.S. negotiators conferred with Thant an hour and 50 minutes Wednesday morning, but a U.N. spokesman said the acting secretary general was not authorized to transmit details of the Cuban-Soviet proposal to the United States.

High U.S. sources confirmed that they had no knowledge of a Cuban or Soviet settlement plan. Other reliable sources suggested that Soviet Deputy Foreign Minister Vasily V. Kuznetsov and Cuban Ambassador Carlos Lechuga, in their joint visit to Thant Tuesday, might have put forward tentative ideas that had not yet been formalized as a proposal.

Played Up Propaganda

Soviet and Cuban diplomats played to maximum propaganda advantage a U.N. spokesman's statement Tuesday that their envoys had discussed with Thant their joint "specific proposals for settlement of the Cuban problem."

They refused to confirm speculation that the joint proposals were based on Cuban Premier Fidel Castro's five-point demands headed by the evacuation of the U.S. Guantanamo Bay naval base. They also refused to confirm that they contained a proposal—previously rejected by the United States which also spurned Castro's five points—for an inspection of sorts by the Communist-dominated Havana diplomatic corps to assure that Soviet offensive weapons had been removed from the island.

Stevenson was called in by Thant at 10:30 a.m. EST, Wednesday. He left at 12:20, telling newsmen:

"We reviewed the Cuban crisis in all its details. Both sides are placing emphasis on bringing the matter to as early a conclusion as possible."

A few minutes later, a U.N. spokesman announced:

"Ambassador Stevenson and the secretary general reviewed some of the more important aspects of the Cuban problem in the light of recent events."

Cuban Singer Pleads Case Before House

WASHINGTON (UPI)—A Havana born singer told House investigators Wednesday that her Medical Aid for Cuba Committee was purely humanitarian and completely divorced from politics. The entertainer Molitta Del Villar of New York City, testified before a subcommittee of the House Committee on Un-American Activities that the organization she formed last fall "is not and does not intend to be an agency of propaganda."

Subcommittee members and advisors questioned Miss Del Villar closely about other officials of her group and similar organizations. They said some individuals associated with the medical aid movement had pro-Communist backgrounds.

The grey haired, 44-year-old singer, who said she has all but abandoned her career since forming the committee, testified that some $25,000 to $30,000 had been collected to buy medicine for use in Cuba.

She said the medicine was sent to the National Hospital in Havana under provisions of U. S. regulations permitting such shipments. Miss Del Villar said the medical shipments were made as a humanitarian act.

"We have no concern with government," she said. "I have an abysmally ignorant political background."

Honor Council Challenged By Ousted Student

By BILL HOBBS

Former UNC student Anne Carter's appeal of her 1961 suspension by the Women's Council will be heard by the Wake County Superior Court in Raleigh today at 2 p.m.

The case as presented by Miss Carter's lawyer, John Manning of Chapel Hill, challenges both the "due process" of her particular trial and the legal authority of a student disciplinary body to suspend students here.

The Women's Council suspended her on charges of having cheated on a Latin 1 make-up quiz. Her instructor, John Catlin, reported the incident and testified at the Women's Council trial. He said she handed in the answers to the original quiz rather than those to the make-up quiz especially made out for her and taken at a later date.

Miss Carter appealed the case to Chancellor Aycock and President Friday, both of whom denied the appeal. She then appealed to the Executive Committee of the Board of Trustees, which referred the matter back to the UNC administration.

As administration authorities took no further action, the case was appealed to the full Board of Trustees. On February 26, 1962 the full Board passed a resolution establishing a special committee "to make a thorough investigation of this entire matter and hear all interested parties and make its report and recommendations to the full Board of Trustees."

This committee, under the chairmanship of William Medford, conducted an investigation during March, April and May of this year. It recommended that "the Board of Trustees should take no action; that the question of the readmission of Miss Carter to the University at Chapel Hill should be left where it has been placed by the Trustees and where it properly belongs — with the Chancellor and the faculty at Chapel Hill."

Trustees Approve

The committee also recommended that "no individual disciplinary case be referred to or considered by the entire Board of Trustees or any special committee thereof."

The Board of Trustees unanimously approved this report on May 28, 1962.

On June 2, 1962 Miss Carter's attorney filed a "Petition for Judicial Review of Final Administrative Decision of the Board Of Trustees" in Wake County Superior Court.

Another development in the case took place in June when Chancellor Aycock readmitted Miss Carter to school as a summer session student. Under normal procedure she would have been required to appear before or request reinstatement from the Women's Council.

Aycock explained that Miss Carter could not have asked the Women's Council for reinstatement at the time since her lawyer was challenging the legality of the Council in the courts. To have asked the Council for reinstatement would have been admitting that the student disciplinary system was legal.

Not In School

"Under the circumstances, I felt it more advisable to handle the case myself," Aycock said. He added that she had been out of school for two academic semesters — longer than the usual period of suspension.

Miss Carter is not in school this fall. Aycock explained that she was academically ineligible because of her quality point average, but that her suspension was no longer in effect.

Attorney Manning's Petition for Judicial Review in the Wake Superior Court was answered last June by the N. C. Attorney General. The state lawyer maintained that since Miss Carter had been readmitted to summer school, the questions raised in the appeal were "moot and academic."

The state's answer also said that Miss Carter "was suspended after a full and fair hearing according to the Rules and Procedures in force at the University of North Carolina."

"Denied Rights"

Manning's subsequent "Reply to Answer to Petition" denied that Miss Carter had the status of a regular student, "as she is a Summer Session student." It also maintained that she had been "deprived of her constitutional rights to complete the Spring Semester of 1961, to stand for examination for work taken for that semester and be given credit accordingly therefor."

The state attorney general's requests that the court dismiss the case were not granted.

The hearing this afternoon was granted by Superior Court Judge Heman Clark on September 21. Judge Clark criticized the "poor" records of the testimony before

Money Bills Approved By Committee

Three bills to appropriate money for several campus activities were passed favorably out of committee yesterday and will be acted upon by Legislature in its meeting tonight.

The Finance Committee passed the following bills: (1) A bill to supplement the Yackety-Yack budget with $951.60 from the General Surplus to rectify mistakes made in this year's budget (introduced by Jean Yoder for the Yack); (2) A bill to appropriate $210 to the Assistant Attorney General in the Field of Legislation to be used to publish a printed codification of all statutes of student government (introduced by Rufus Edmisten (SP) for Haynes McFadden); (3)

JFK Seeking Sizeable Cut In '63 Taxes

WASHINGTON (UPI) — President Kennedy plans to seek a sizeable tax cut from Congress next year despite the $7.8 billion deficit in the federal budget, authoritative sources said Wednesday.

High-ranking presidential advisers were expected to affirm this publicly in speeches to a fiscal policy conference opening here Wednesday night. Some 150 businessmen, labor leaders, university professors, clergymen and government officials were gathered for the conference, which is sponsored by the President's Committee on Labor-Management Policy.

The conference began with a dinner at which Walter W. Heller, chairman of the Council of Economic Advisers, was the speaker.

Administration planning for tax reduction and reform in 1963 has been intensified in recent weeks even though it was clear to officials that the federal budget this year would be heavily in the red. The $7.8 billion deficit estimated by the Budget Bureau Tuesday contrasted sharply with the $463 million surplus planned by the President last January when he drafted the fiscal 1963 budget. It covers government spending and revenue in the 12 months which began July 1.

Officials pointed out that even as early as August, when Kennedy decided against an immediate tax cut in favor of action in 1963, it appeared that the budget would be in the red.

Administration officials have said that regardless of the budget deficit tax relief for individuals and corporations is a necessary contribution to the long-term growth of the country.

Heller and other officials believe that the present tax structure siphons too much money out of the private spending stream into the Treasury, thereby retarding achievement of full employment.

The Spirit Of Proposal

The educational enterprise, particularly as manifested in the schools of higher education, throughout this state has been growing by leaps and bounds. Not only have the numbers of prospective students been rapidly increasing, but at the same time educational institutions across the state have been expanding their resources and facilities to accommodate the swelling ranks, and to meet the demands posed by those ranks.

But here-to-fore, the expansion and growth have taken place without any definite goals or purposes, beyond a qualitative accommodation of rising student populations, being placed before our state-supported institutions as direction-giving ends.

Certainly, a qualitative accommodation of rapidly increasing numbers of students is a most comprehensive "end" in itself. But the physical expansion of present facilities that is necessary for such an accommodation must be corraled into a definite "system" of higher educational institutions. That is to say, there must be some real "method to the madness" of accommodation.

And the proposal to make some far-reaching alterations on the present setup of the Consolidated University, prior to any addition of other branches, seems to be a necessary initial step in the assurance of of future "method."

Granted, the time is soon to be upon us when additional branches of the University may be the only method, but that time is not yet here. And with the broadening of programs at the University at Raleigh (to the inclusion of undergraduate liberal arts degrees) and in Greensboro (to the admission of male undergraduates), we have the opportunity to see, in better perspective, what the future demands upon metropolitan communities will be.

It may be that Charlotte will still need to be taken into the system of the Consolidated University, it appears almost inevitable eventually; but until the present institutions have their collective feet firmly on solid ground, no amount of helter-skelter expansion will insure qualitative accommodation or prove to be the sought-after "method."

Of course, the collective "planting of feet" is no simple matter. There are some situations to be altered, some facilities to be added, and some directional definitions to be made. But the process is underway, and, for that matter, has been underway for quite some time.

We are glad to read of the apparent state-wide approval of plans for the solidifying of the present Consolidated University system. There general tone of comment seems to agree with the spirit and principle of proposed alterations at WC and State. So we look forward to further approval of the plans, when they take the form of more tangible actualities.

So then, if we read of your approval of the direction and spirit of proposals, we are going to be looking for your support in the later realization of these proposals. (CW)

Art Theatre, "Hot Dog"

"The best thing that's happened around here in a long time," said the lady in the Intimate Book Store. "It's certainly about time that this area had something like it," said a man on the street; and "Hot dog!" said a member of the DTH staff.

What they were talking about is the recent (only yesterday) reopening of the Rialto Theatre in Durham. What makes the re-opening such a wonderful event is the format of future programming.

The theatre will be run strictly as an "art-house.

And without going into lengthy positive statements on just what this means, we would like to state briefly what we hope it implies . . . that now, in this area, some of the better foreign films will run longer than one day, and that now, in this awful age of tension, those who desire to relax may do so without subjecting their minds to the hogwash that runs in the local movie-picture houses.

It is indeed a shame that the theatre must be in Durham. But the trip over will not be so long any more. The ride, walk or crawl over will be readily endured for the chance to see first-run foreign films and some of the old favorites of years-gone-by.

The climate of opinion around Chapel Hill indicates that the Rialto should do pretty good business. And with the movie-picture houses in this town practically forcing us to take our business elsewhere, we surely are grateful for the timely, and indeed, timeless, appeal of a nearby art theatre. (CW)

Bad Checks

Next week Student Legislature will consider a bill which will affect a large portion of the student body —it deals with those who bounce checks.

Aside from the fact that outside of a university community such wholesale check-bouncing as that which goes on around here, would readily be brought before civil authorities, there should be some stern legislation which handles students who suffer from lack of foresight and extreme carelessness.

Indeed, we would propose a definite limit as to the number of checks or amount of money upon which students may draw their bad credit; and after reaching their limit, they should be put in stocks at Y-Court, and made to spit-shine Weejuns, until they had worked off their bad debts.

Of course, we recognize this as an impossibility, and so we will be glad to see any toothless legislation which gets watered down and manages to slither through Student Legislature, even if takes the form of a mild pat-on-the-hand to those who bounce $1000 worth of checks weekly. (CW)

Communist Students' Position On Meredith & Ole Miss Riots

(Eds' Note: Following is a statement of policy received by the DTH from the International Union of Students. The IUS is a Communist-controlled organization with headquarters in Prague, Czechoslovakia. This statement is typical of the line taken by the Communist propaganda toward the Meredith incident, especially in that it plays down the role of the Federal troops.)

The case of Mr. James Meredith, a 29-year-old American Negro, who had been refused admisson into the University of Mississippi, has shocked international public opinion and evoked deep concern in the world student community.

Mr. Meredith has been violently barred from enrolling in the University of Mississippi by the state's Governor and other state authorities every time he atempted to do so since the beginning of the school year. Members of the Ku-Klux Klan, the John Birch Society and similar racist and fascist groups in Mississippi and in other nearby states headed the opposition to Mr. Meredith's enrollment, while the U. S. Government did little to stop this mob violence.

Racist mobs besieged the University administration building and attacked the Federal soldiers on the town square, who were sent only after much delay by the U. S. Government. They used firearms and tear-gas to disperse the rioting racists and hoodlums. In the bloody clashes two persons were killed, a correspondent for Agence France Press and an American worker. Many persons were also injured and hospitalized.

As a result of the pressure of world public opinion and the American people the racist Governor was finally forced to retreat and Mr. Meredith was admitted to the University. But the events in the state of Mississippi as well as those happening in Little Rock and other cities of the United States throw light on the ugly practice of racial segregation which prevails in present-day U.S.A.

The Secretariat of the International Union of Students and all IUS members are deeply alarmed at the brutal and violent methods used to obstruct a Negro from pursuing his education in his own country.

The IUS, true to its policy of opposition and struggle against all forms of racial discrimination in all spheres and aspects of education and life, strongly condemns the shameful spectacle staged in Mississippi. It hails the personal courage of Mr. Meredith in the face of the brutality and threats by the racists, as well as the support and sympathy extended to him throughout the world. It clearly expresses and reflects the desire of millions of students all over the world that an end be put to such barbarous practices in education in this age of scientific advance.

The IUS calls upon all students to demand that Mr. Meredith's study at the university be ensured and that his life be protected.

Carter Case Report

(Eds' Note: Following are excerpts of the report of the special committee established by UNC's Board of Trustees to investigate the "Anne Carter Case." Miss Carter, a student who was suspended from UNC by the Women's Council on a cheating charge, has appealed her suspension through all University channels. The case will come before Wake County Superior Court in Raleigh today.

The committee finds that there was no lack of due process or fairness in the handling of the hearing before the Women's Council. Further, we find no merit in the contention that Miss Carter's constitutional rights were violated because male students were not included on the Council, nor do we find any merit in the claim that there is no legal basis for student government as presently constituted at Chapel Hill. It has for many decades been recognized by the faculty and the Chancellor and the Board of Trustees as an inherent and integral part of University life at Chapel Hill. The plan of student government now in effect is embodied in a Student Constitution which provides for legislative, executive and judicial branches of student government somewhat similar to the plan of our national and state governments. This Constitution has been developed, adopted and set up as an instrumentality for the management of student affairs and the handling of disciplinary matters within the student body of the University, with the consent, approval and encouragement of the faculty and University administration and the Trustees. Under these circumstances any verdict and judgment of the Women's Council, as an act of the student government at Chapel Hill, has validity and meaning and, unless other error is pointed out, should be carried into effect.

We find no merit in the contention that Miss Carter's constitutional rights were violated because members of the Council were told briefly what the case was about by a representative of the staff of the Student Attorney General before Miss Carter entered the council chamber. The testimony under which she was convicted was all taken after she entered the room and in her presence.

We find no merit in the contention that Miss Carter's constitutional rights were violated because she was requested to tell her side of the story first. It is repeated that the Women's Council is not a court of law and could not follow the refinements of court procedure, but is purely an agency of student government attempting to get at the truth or falsity of a charge against a student. This student had been informed of the charge against her and under these circumstances it did not take away the presumption of her innocence until proven guilty to request that she give her explanation of the events in connection with the make-up quiz first. Her accuser was later brought into the room and she was given a chance to question him, and did so. The Council did not vote to convict until it had heard all the evidence.

We do not find any evidence of bias or prejudice against Miss Carter by any member of the Women's Council, by any member of the faculty or by any University official. We do not think the Dean of Student Affairs, his assistant or the Dean of Women did anything that in their positions was not required in handling of this case. There does not appear any evidence of bias or prejudice in anything that they did.

Likewise, we find no indication of bias or prejudice because Chancellor Aycock, President Friday and Governor Sanford refused to allow this student to stay in school and attempt to get credit for college work while her appeal was pending before the trustees. To allow a student to continue in the University and take classes after a suspension would make a nullity out of a suspension.

We feel, therefore, after making a full and complete investigation of this matter and hearing all interested parties, that the Board of Trustees should take no action: that the question of the readmission of Miss Carter to the University at Chapel Hill should be left where it has been placed by the Trustees and where it properly belongs — with the Chancellor and faculty at Chapel Hill.

As a matter of policy, this Committee recommends that no individual disciplinary case be referred to or considered by the entire Board of Trustees or any special committee thereof. It is our opinion that the obligation of the Board of Trustees in disciplinary matters extends only to insuring that adequate means is provided so as to guarantee fairness and due process. We feel that such means is now provided in the disciplinary system of the University.

Will This Winter Be Man's Last?

To the Editors:

It is difficult to believe that this world has known such persons as Christ and Ghandi and Buddha. It also is incredible that the belief is extant that mankind desires peace, and that justice, honor, peace, kindness, and decency are still considered virtues.

It seems that we are standing at the bottom of a huge, sweeping, roaring hurricane of monsterous proportions; our arms are outstretched, and our eyes look upward for some indication that the world about us is NOT as grossly warped as it seems. But instead of the hoped-for shaft of light, we see only dark cloud piling on top of dark cloud, and we hear only the rising howl of the wind. It strikes me as worthy of marvel and awe that, in this year of 1962, men seriously entertain the idea of war, that there are men who have plans for attack or defence, perhaps who would even enjoy a good war.

Hiroshima's will be commonplace in the next global war. The cities—New York, San Francisco, London, Moscow, and even such minute spots as Chapel Hill— all will be shocked and burned and destroyed by the ever-more efficient bombs and missiles, paid for by the obliging citizens against whom these drops of destruction will rain. And yet they—and we, by tacit assent—plan and think war; they build bombs and bases and "fighting men". Our minds are daily conditioned to the acceptance of the possibility, even probability, of a war: by the sparkling new orange and black posters proclaiming buildings to be fallout shelters (the capacity of which, interestingly enough, tends to fall short of the area population) which will serve as caves in which to cower until we can come outside, once again, to this best of all possible worlds.

And by the stirring speeches, filled with righteous indignation peculiar to our country, which set the blood boiling and trigger fingers twitching.

And it is all done in the name of peace, freedom and justice. Seldom has a war professedly been waged for any reasons other than the most noble and selfless. The logic of war is wonderous: "Let us buy (the leaders say) peace and prosperity and a better, more decent way of life by killing and destroying and maiming." Truly a curious statement. War has provided mankind with many things, such as——huge profits for manufacturers of the necessary equipment for war; guns, uniforms, ships, planes, rockets are not sprung, as it were, full blown from Mars' head.

—an outlet for the redfaced rage of chauvinists,

—inspiration for some good literature and much bad,

—And convenient landmarks in man's staggering convoluted history.

One thing that war has never produced, and never will, is peace.

If killing were unheard of, completely foreign to our nature and experience, the knolwedge (especially first-hand knowledge) of a single murder would sicken us. But as time and justified murder goes on, we become more and more accustomed to war, and it takes a truly stupendous production such as Hiroshima or the Nazi concentration camps to disturb our callous-encased consciences. Our minds would be unhinged by the number killed and maimed by senseless fighting if only we could see the bodies all at once, in one staggering flash of revealed carnage; but we are protected by time and distance and our own short-sighted (and more than a little myopic) vision form this pictoral view of the consequence of adherence to the notion that it is somehow sweet and proper, fitting, to die for one's country.

We are waiting, at this moment, for our fates to be decided. In the capitols our lives—all life—are in the hands of men who can in an instant bring forth Armageddon. The militaristic sophistry of Russia and the United States, and all other countries that profess to seek peace while courting war, is disgusting hypocrisy on a grand scale. I find it repugnant that our leaders speak their sham-filled words in the name of us all, while the millions whose existence is at stake have very little power to influence decisions of the most critical importance. There is very little to choose between a Russian militarist and an American war lover; Einstein's reknowned formula works quite well either side of the Iron Curtain. Both countries are powerful, and were they to exert as much effort and spend as much money toward the problems of disarmament and peace as is lavished on the spiraling war effort, there is no doubt that much of the tension prevalent in our life could be drained away.

The chief ideal and guiding light of war is gain, in one form or another, and many a fortune has been made of the deaths of untold numbers of human beings. In the classroom I hear of man's glorious achievements, but outside, looking around me and reading and thinking, I see a dubious progress indeed. I am disturbed, not so much by the thought of possible death, but more, (I THINK) by the certainty that, if war comes, all of the learning of life which has been so painfully gained, will have been forgotten, rejected and replaced by the bludgeoning rationale of sheer force.

It is autumn now, and winter's bitter song will soon be heard. Perhaps man, too, is in his autumn: a transitory period of the spirit, the prelude to an unknown, dark winter. But, then again, there may be a movie-like reprieve, an unseen Renaissance which will halt and reverse the downward, darkening spiral of events. Perhaps even now a bugler—the herald of better things—is raising the horn to his lips. In this chill, pregnant November night I listen for the call. And wait . . .

—John Butler Justice

Mayer's Column Was Nauseating

To the Editors and Mr. Meyer,

I would like to comment on your rather superficial and, at times, downright nauseating "Odds and Ends" which was indeed a fitting title, for odds and ends they were. You may well believe that the past elections confirm the fact that the New Frontier will forge onwards and upwards to dizzy achievements in the public interest; that may well be so but, it will be the next Congress that will decide that. I think the elections were also a confirmation of the confidence in a new type of leadership very much on the model of President Kennedy, and as you know some of the newly-elected Governors are Republicans in key states. Even more significant, there has been a reshuffling of party loyalties the implications of which are certainly not clear yet, but what matters more than Republican and Democrat labels, Liberal and Conservative tabs, which over-simplify issues, is to understand the changes that are taking place in voting patterns. What seems to matter most now is not what party these newly-elected Congressmen, Senators, and Governors belong to but rather, how they are going to vote, how many votes they can muster, and what philosophy of government they hold. These new patterns will soon become apparent and I do not pretend to be an expert on your governmental system but it does seem that the issues go a little deeper than you suggested.

I would also question on what rational basis you group Walter Judd, Richard Nixon, and Krishna Menon in the same category. The first two failed to gain reelection, but so did incumbents Swainson and Di Salle, and we are not really sure whose side Menon is on. The point is that there are other "Old Stalwarts", as you call them, still running around and they could include Harry Byrd, Ross Barnett, and President Nkrumah of Ghana.

Richard Nixon, I would admit, is about the worst type of politician and he was a Republican, but I can have little resptct for your political sympathies when you whitewash a man who VERY narrowly lost a Presidential election and who went down fighting for his life in his own state. Certainly politics brought out the worst in Nixon and he must realize that he has been in the wrong business, but like you and I he is a human being, and now that he is finished let's treat him like one. You are no better than him at whitewashing and perhaps like Nixon, you might regret some of the things you have said.

Carter Case Goes Before Court Today

the Women's Council.

"I am really amazed that a thing as important in the life of a student as being expelled for cheating could be conducted with as little in the way of standard procedure and with as poor facility of recording what transpired," he said.

Judge Clark's remarks were a factor in the recent attempts by the student legislature to investigate the use of tape recorders in recording honor council proceedings.

Attorney Manning's contentions in the case center around the "due process" and fairness of Miss Carter's trial before the Women's Council, and on the legality of the whole student disciplinary system.

In reference to Miss Carter's specific trial, her attorney has contended that, "the applicant has been deprived of a constitutional right granted to her under the Fourteenth Amendment of the Constitution of the United States i.e. the right once admitted to continue as a student unless deprived of said right after a hearing commensurate with the requirements of due process."

He maintains that these requirements were not carried out by the Women's Council in that:

—male students were not included on the Council,

—members of the Council were told briefly what the case was about by a representative of the staff of the Student Attorney general before Miss Carter entered the council chamber,

—Miss Carter was requested to tell her side of the story first.

These contentions were each specifically denied in the report of the special committee of the Board of Trustees (see text on pg. 2 of today's DTH.)

In reference to the legality of the student disciplinary system as a whole, Attorney Manning contends that:

—the delegation of authority for discipline to the student councils by the Student Constitution "is of no binding force and effect," since the constitution "has not properly and legally or constitutionally conferred any power or authority" to the student councils.

—the Board of Trustees was legally bound by the laws of North Carolina to grant Miss Carter a new hearing, "in that they are charged with the management of all affairs of the University of North Carolina, including that of student conduct which is involved in this matter."

These contentions were also denied in the report of the special committee of the Board of Trustees.

The final court decision on the case is expected to affect the practice of student government as it now exists at UNC. Chancellor Aycock has explained that the Student Constitution as now written has operated effectively as an informal agreement between the students and administration, but this arrangement may not satisfy the legal requirements of a court.

In additdon, the case may have ramifications outside of UNC. Chancellor Aycock has also said that the legal precedents established in the matter may be applied to cases involving integration demonstrations by students. He noted that students expelled from Southern schools for participating in integration activities may take their cases to the courts using arguments similar to those of Miss Carter and her lawyer.

SAE Gridders Meet Sigma Nu Today

Fraternity Blue Title At Stake

By STUART BALL

For the second straight day the favored team had to come from behind to stay alive as the Intramural tag-football leagues narrowed their once-large field (68 teams) to six finalists. Monday it was Manly which eked out a 13-12 win. Tuesday SAE had as much trouble and just did nip the Phi Delts, 7-6.

By virtue of their victory the SAE's will meet Sigma Nu for the Fraternity Blue Championship today at four p.m. on Intramural field No. 4.

After a scoreless first half, the Phi Delts broke the ice as Erky Duff scored a touchdown. The extra point kick was wide, but Duff's six-pointer was the first scored against the SAE's in five contests this year. To make it all the more painful, the Phi Delt TD followed the nullification of a 49-yard touchdown pass-play by the SAE's.

Down, but not out, SAE drove back up the field and Keith Stoneman tied the game, 6-6, with a touchdown. On the extra point play Center Jim Commander stepped across the goal line and was hit with a pass to account for the winning margin.

In the Sigma Nu-ATO game, the Nus looked as strong as they have all year and could very well upset the SAE's in today's contest. Warren Price accounted for two touchdowns and Joe Moye and Tom McKae tallied one each in a 25-7 win. Ed Boyd scored the lone ATO TD.

The Mangum Mavericks advanced to the Dormitory Finals by defeating last year's champion Alexander Playboys, 12-6. David Honeycutt and Len Dellolio scored the Mangum touchdowns and Bob Cornwell was the Alexander scorer.

The Intramural Wrestling finals were held last Thursday and winners in the weight classes of each division are as follows:

Dormitory Division — 123 lbs., Dave Fletcher, Navy; 130, Paul Wellstone, Aycock; 137, Russell Simmons, Navy; 147, Steve Lehrer, BVP; 157, L e i t h Singletary, Teague; 167, Steve Mack, Everett; 177, J. Wesley Robinson, Ehringhaus A; Unlimited, Jerry Trachtenberg, Winston.

Grad Division—123 lbs., Charles Pratt, Law; 147, Dick Hilt, Physics; 157, Gene Clayton, Peacocks; 167, Sandon Lehoczky Physics; Unlimited, Lewis Snead, Physics.

The final team tabulations in the divisions ended up with the Phi Delts topping the Fraternity participants, followed by DKE and SAE. In the Dormitory Division Everett received top honors with Manly and Navy coming in second and third, respectively. The Grad division saw three entrants and three placers. The Physics School topped the list with Peacocks and Law School entries placing second and third.

Duke Preps For Deacons

Duke's Blue Devils, eager to obtain an unprecedented third straight Atlantic Coast Conference pennant, hope to move a step closer to that goal Saturday when they tangle with the Wake Forest Demon Deacons in Winston-Salem.

Gametime is set for 2 o'clock in Bowman Gray Stadium. A crowd of 15,000 is expected to see the defending ACC champs in action against the Deacs.

The Blue Devils have their work cut out for them. They must win the final two games of the season to insure themselves of the title. A slip-up against either Wake Forest or North Carolina could enable Maryland to sneak by the Dukes by virtue of playing more ACC games.

Student Athletic Council

Honors Ken Willard

Athlete Of The Week

Each week the Student Athletic Council will sponsor a UNC Athlete of the Week in the Daily Tar Heel, to be selected by the DTH Sports Staff on the basis of the previous week's performances. Varsity, freshman and intramural athletes will be featured weekly for the remainder of the year.

By ED DUPREE

They call him Ken "The Bull" Willard and he's been roaming the football pastures so effectively that he seems destined to become the Atlantic Coast Conference's Sophomore of the Year.

Game after game Ken has galloped or bulldozed his way for clutch yardage in North Carolina contests.

Willard, who turned down a bonus contract to play baseball with the Boston Red Sox, carried the ball 10 times in the Tar Heels' touchdown drive aaginst Virginia Saturday. His 69 yards rushing in 24 carries on a rain-soaked field gave him 376 for the season.

The Richmond, Va., native has carried 92 times for a 4.1 average per carry. Only Len Chiaverini of Maryland and Billy Gambrell of South Carolina are ahead of him in the ACC rushing statistics.

Carolina's rushing game has been quite sluggish this season, accumulating only 845 yards in eight games. But what would the UNC ground game be without their sophomore fullback? His rushing yardage is almost half of the team's total.

Against South Carolina the fleet 217-pounder returned a Gamecock kickoff for 83 yards in UNC's first ACC victory. The play was the most dazzling one Kenan Stadium fans have seen since LSU's visit here last year.

Ken's big week was against Clemson when he picked up 113 yards rushing—only the third ACC back to break 100 yards in one game at that time.

Sparkling Flankmen Match Talents In Saturday's Game

Jim Kelly

NOTRE DAME, Ind.—Jim Kelly, junior right end, seems destined to go down in Irish grid annals along with the names of Leon Hart, Jim Mutscheller, and Monty Stickles as one of Notre Dame's top ends of ths post-World War II era.

Kelly, a 6-2, 205-pounder, was at his best last Saturday against Pittsburgh, catching 11 aerials from Quarterback Daryle Lamonica, good for 127 yards and three touchdowns.

These 11 receptions enabled him to break the single game Notre Dame pass-catching record of eight set by Monty Sickles against Pitt in 195. His three touchdown receptions tied Jim Mutscheller's record set against Michigan State in 1950.

Kelly is threatening to surpass the all-time Notre Dame records of passes caught (35 by Mutscheller in 1950), yards gained (442 yards by Jim Morse in 1956), and most touchdown passes received in one season (seven by Mutscheller, 1950 and Stickles, 1958). Through the first seven games he has 28 catches for 363 yards and four touchdowns, and will have a chance to break these records in the remaining three battles with North Carolina, Iowa, and Southern Cal.

End Coach Bill Daddio rates Kelly as the best he's ever had at Notre Dame. Says Daddio, "He's a tremendous receiver with all the fakes and moves, and has tremendous hands. He also plays an excellent defensive game."

Kelly is from Clairton, Pa. He was bothered a bit by injuries in his sophomore year, but still played 175 minutes. As a soph he grabbed nine passes for 138 yards and two touchdowns. Last winter his right knee was operated on.

Bob Lacey

By BOB QUINCY

Bob Lacey, who has nabbed 35 passes this season, obviously has athlete's hands. More recently he has developed athlete's foot.

The tall, 6-3 flankman of the North Carolina Tar Heels isn't content to make Willie Mays' catches on the gridiron. He has started giving the opposition a hot foot.

When Lacey laced a 34-yard field goal against Virginia last week, it was the most important such act for North Carolina in the past 30 years or more. The three-pointer, plus Ron Tuthill's touchdown caper, provided a diced delight of 11-7 on the scoreboard for the Tar Heels.

Field goal kicking has been something of a lost art around Chapel Hill in the modern era. Now it seems the brilliant Lacey owns the equipment to revive it.

Long Time

Between the years of 1949, when Bob Cox graduated, and 1962, the Tar Heels had booted only two field goals. Both were by Bob Elliott, a fullback who graduated last season. Neither figured in a win.

Back in 1921, a lad named Robbins Lowe drop-kicked three against Maryland to provide the difference in a 16-7 victory. His trio in a single game is an all-time record here.

Lacey's feat—or foot—provides a story. When the season opened, Bob was chosen the logical guy to handle placements. Yet, he had to be bypassed because of a pulled leg muscle. Kicking with power was extremely painful to him.

The muscle rip healed, and for the past three games Bob, a 215-pounder, has been kicking off for the Tar Heels. Against Virginia, he boomed one into the end zone.

Injured Players Expected To Play

UNC's Tar Heels expect to have three key players ready for action against Notre Dame this week who missed the Virginia game.

Halfback Ronnie Jackson won't make the linenup against the Irish because of a bruised hip. Ends Frank Gallagher and Chris Hanburger were out with injuries, and so was defensive Halfback Tommy Ward. All three will play Saturday.

"The Virginia touchdown came on the side of the field Ward normally covers," said Coach Jim Hickey. "His absence hurt us. Jackson is always a threat, but with the wet field at Virginia, his effectiveness would have been limited. Those defensive ends are good boys and we'll surely need them against Notre Dame."

Judge Upholds Honor System; No Ruling On Carter Guilt

All Evidence Heard Today In Court

By BILL WAUMETT
Special to the DTH

RALEIGH—The legality of the honor system was upheld yesterday in Wake County Superior Court as Anne Royal Carter appealed her 1961 suspension by the Women's Honor Council.

After hearing evidence in the case, however, Judge Heman Clark said his judgment would be restricted to Miss Carter's case and "would not challenge the authority of the trustees to delegate responsibility in disciplinary matters to the Chancellor or the student body."

Judge Clark did not announce when he would release a decision as to Miss Carter's guilt, but did say, "although my judgment in this case may differ from that of the women's council, I am not sure that there is too much I can do about it at this point."

Material witnesses were heard in the court yesterday after Judge Clark ruled Sept. 21 that records of the trial were inadequate for him to make a judgment on Miss Carter's guilt.

The court heard testimony from Latin instructor John Gatlin, Latin Department Head Dr. Albert Suskin, former Women's Council head Priscilla Wyrick and Miss Carter.

Catlin testified that Miss Carter turned in the answers to an original exam instead of the makeup exam which he gave her.

He said he gave Miss Carter the makeup exam in his office and that she went to an adjoining room to answer the questions.

During the examination, he said, she asked for, and was granted, permission to move to another room because of the noise.

Catlin indicated that the two exams, the original and the makeup, were similar in that they covered the same material, but that the same answers would not apply to both exams.

After about 15 minutes, he testified, Miss Carter gave him the answers to the exam in the hall outside his office.

He then asked her for the question sheet, according to his testimony, and she left to look for it while he taught a class.

Catlin said he never saw the makeup exam again.

Miss Carter testified that after leaving Catlin in the hall, she went to the ladies room where she had finished taking the exam and found the question sheet there in a trash can.

She returned the question sheet, she said, to the seminar room adjoining Catlin's office where she had begun taking the test.

A copy of the original exam which Catlin said he later found in his desk had his name written on the back in handwriting which resembled Miss Carter's.

Miss Carter contended that Catlin had given her the original exam, by mistake, rather than the makeup he had intended.

She said she had left the question sheet in the seminar room rather than his office because she did not know which desk in the room was his.

Catlin said he had thrown away all copies of the original exam except for the typewritten original copy. He said the makeup exam was also typewritten.

The typewritten original, presented as evidence, had Catlin's name on the back, in handwriting resembling Miss Carter's.

Miss Carter said she would not object to a handwriting analysis of the name on the back of the paper.

The defense contended that the original exam was indeed the one Catlin had given Miss Carter, and that she had written his name on the back.

Beanbirds Tap 18 Fledglings

It was five o'clock in the morning, but in Chapel Hill, the birds were already up. Huddled in the Morehead Planetarium parking lot, The Noble Order of the Old Beanbirds prepared to take off on its annual Fall flight to peck a new batch of Birds.

After two hours of concentrated chirping, eighteen fledglings had been rounded up and conducted to the mystic nest. The new arrivals included Susan "Songbird" Birdsong, Charles "Crested Tomtit" Shaffer, John "Lesser Redpole" Nash, Judy "Bush Sparrow" Johnson, Roger "Keel-Tailed Grackle" Penland, Bill "Brown Creeper" Davis, Rufus "Loggerhead Shrike" Edmisten, Susan "Crow" Crow, Eddie "Long-Winged Goatsucker" Connell, John "Ferruginous Finch" McNinch, Gary "Water Pewee" Gischel, Bobby "Yellow-Bellied Flycatcher" Reagan, Rob "Butter Bird" Glenn, Bob "Blue-Gray Gnatcatcher" Madry, Edith "Red-Breasted Nuthatch" Alston, Martha "Asquatic Wood Wagtail" Wolfe, Edith "Bohemian Wax-Wing" Kellerman, and Brooks "Belted Kingfisher" Reed.

The new birds were chosen for their avian looks, as well as their ability to:

1) Go out on a limb.
2) Perch.
3) Do the Beanbird Shuffle.
4) Twitter-Tweet.
5) Control their squawks (In the air and on the ground).
6) Fly alone (Even with a broken wing).
7) Use their wings to cling to the strong and sturdy limbs of wisdom.

Writer Betty Smith To Lecture In Fall

Betty Smith, loval novelist of international fame, will be a visiting lecturer in the UNC Department of English during the spring semester, 1963.

The noted author of the best-selling "A Tree Grows in Brooklyn" will be teaching English 34, the beginning course in creative writing. She will also teach the honors course in writing with Associate Professor Jessie Rehder.

Miss Smith has formerly served on the UNC faculty as a play consultant and special lecturer on drama in the Department of Dramatic Art. She is the author of over 75 published one-act plays and of a considerable number of three-act plays.

Betty Smith's success-winning novel of 1943 sold some six million copies, was translated into 16 languages, appeared as a motion picture and as a musical version on Broadway. She followed this beginning with two novels, "Tomorrow Will Be Better," published in 1948, and "Maggie Now," published in 1958. All three novels were published by Harper & Brothers, New York.

A native of Brooklyn, N. Y., Betty Smith wrote short plays for several years to help meet family expenses. She later was allowed to be a special student at the University of Michigan by the president of the University. Her first full length play won her the Avery Hopwood Award for excellence in playwriting at the University of Michigan. She then studied playwriting at the Yale University of Drama with the aid of a scholarship from Yale.

Following her study at Yale, Betty Smith heard that Carolina was looking for dramatists. She got the job and came here. It was here that she wrote her first novel, and she is now in the final stages of her fourth which will be published in the spring of 1963. This fourth novel is a departure from the preceding works; its setting is a university town instead of Brooklyn. This book is now being called "Annie Brown."

Debaters Among 8 Finalists At USC

UNC's debate team finished among the eight finalists in the 17th annual Carolina Forensics tournament which was held recently at the University of South Carolina.

Debate teams from 23 eastern universities participated in the tournament, each team debating both sides of the questions. There were eight rounds of debate, four affirmative and four negative.

UNC's team of Bill Patterson and George Carson debated the question, "Resolved that the non-communist nations of the world should establish an economic community."

They finished the sixth round of the debate with a 5-3 record.

Duke University and the University of Miami placed first in the semi-finals, both having a record of 8-0.

In the final round of the tournament the UNC team was defeated by Duke.

The NYU debate on Dec. 7 and 8 is the next debate in which the UNC varsity debate team will participate.

The highlight of the debate team's year will come on Jan. 4 and 5 when UNC will be host to the Atlantic Coast Conference Debate tournament. All eight teams in the Atlantic Coast Conference will meet at UNC for the debates.

The novice debate team at UNC has also been active this semester. The novice team went to Wake Forest for a debate tournament on Nov. 2 and 3, finishing it with an affirmative record of 4-2 and a negative record of 2-4.

Y-Sponsored Trip To Europe Slated

By MARTIN KRUMING

A 66 day trip to Europe for only $1285, or $19.50 a day. Sound impossible? Not at all, according to Claude Shotts.

In 1953 Shotts, general secretary of the YM-YWCA, became distressed that the University had not organized a European tour program.

After discussing the idea with Carolina students and contacting people in Europe, he finally accompanied a group across the Atlantic in 1958. The program grew in intensity and on June 11, 1962, 30 students aged 19 to 22 embarked by jet from Idlewild Airport in New York. They were accompanied by Shotts and his wife.

In order to get the maximum value from a summer in Europe, the students met in weekly seminars during February, March and April. There was a three day conference in Washington for briefings with the Embassies and the State Department.

One unique feature about the YMCA sponsored tour is that it caters only to students. "Often you will get a tour which includes both students and older people. And of course you know who will direct the group as to what it sees and where it goes," Shotts said.

Although time is devoted for Westminster Abbey, NATO International Headquarters in Paris, and the Roman Forum, students are able to live and mingle with the European people. Meeting with French school children or visiting the Lord Mayor of Dublin is not at all unusual, Shotts said.

Included in the tour is a week's stay in London, Paris, Florence, Berlin and Rome. This summer Heidelburg will be replaced by Prague and Madrid.

"It is a program with people," the personable general secretary said. Meetings are arranged with students, faculty members, civic leaders and government representatives in each country.

One of the great problems of European trips is that they are forced to travel from place to place by bus. This is both time consuming and quite boring. "You know how dull it can be to sit in a European bus for three hours and see only Americans," said Shotts. But this difficulty was erased last year when the group flew to each city by commercial planes. The time was cut in half.

An authority on European tours, Shotts is willing to compare the YMCA trip with that of any commercial tourist agency. Certainly the Carolina tour is the most enriching for the least amount of money.

He also emphasized that Carolina students always receive excellent hotels, food and guides.

Plans for the 1963 summer trip are already in the making. Although there is no limitation on the number of students taken, Shotts suggests that all those seriously interested in the program contact the YMCA office or see him personally in the Y building.

AFROTC BALL SET

The first Air Force ball in the history of the local AFROTC "Flying Tar Heels" will be held November 30, according to a spokesman for the AFROTC Information Office.

The dance is being planned by the Arnold Air Society and will be payed for from the Cadet Social Fund.

WESLEY HOUSE

There will be a supper at Wesley House tonight at 6 p.m. Call for reservations before 2 p.m. today. A group will go to Greensboro to see "Carnival" after supper.

Toronto Exchange Students Scheduled To Arrive Today

Twenty seven students from the University of Toronto will arrive in Chapel Hill this afternoon for a three day visit as part of the fourth annual Student Government Canadian Exchange Program.

A full program of discussions, informal receptions, campus tours, and social events has been planned for the weekend by the UNC Toronto Exchange delegation, headed by Suzy Johnson and Mickey Simmons.

Members of the Carolina group will each be the official host for one Canadian student, his "Co-Tar Heel" for the weekend. These roles will be reversed during the semster break when the UNC group visits Toronto.

The group will be officially welcomed to the campus by President and Mrs. William C. Friday at a reception at their home late this afternoon. Several UNC faculty members will also be present.

After a dinner at The Ranch House, the exchangites will attend the Germans Club concert in Memorial Hall, sitting en masse in the orchestra pit.

Saturday's schedule will feature a planetarium show, tours of the Computation Center and Ackland Art Center, classroom visits, and a discussion session led by Dr. Sam Hill of the Department of Religion on "Anxiety in the Post-Modern Age." Various sororities will host the group for lunch, and a cook-out and cabin party is scheduled for the evening.

A panel discussion, "Integration: Is it Moving Fast Enough?," will be held on Sunday, and a banquet at The Carolina Inn will conclude

IDC Votes $25 To Broadcast Cheers To UNC-Irish Game

The Interdormitory Council Wednesday night adopted a proposal to contribute $25 toward the broadcasting of cheers originating here to the Carolina-Notre Dame football game at South Bend, Ind., on Saturday.

The proposal also urged the residents of the men's dormitories to support the broadcast by going to the Tin Can and participating in it.

Much discussion preceded the voting on the issue and it was passed by a margin of four votes.

Two other proposals were also passed by the Council, both unanimously.

The first of these directed the IDC Rules Committee to compile a codification of all regulations passed by the IDS. This codification is to be printed and distributed to all members of the Council.

The second of these urged that authorities investigate speed limits and pedestrian safety at the intersection between Craig and Ehringhaus dormitories.

Phil Smith, Chairman of the Campus Entertainment Board, spoke briefly at the meeting concerning his committee's black list of combos that don't show up for parties and dances. The Council unanimously supported this black list plan.

Smith also said that there is also a plan for guaranteeing a combo a minimum number of dates in order that the groups participating might get a reduced rate. The reduction, he said, may be as much as 20 percent.

Gerry Good, Chairman of the Dorm Contest Committee, reported the present standings in the contest. The top five are as follows: Everett — 307, Mangum — 267, Joyner — 254, Ruffin — 232, Avery — 182.

Good also said that in future UMOC Contests the committee would recognize a dormitory winner since the fraternities so consistently win this contest. The committee will award points for this at its own discretion.

Vice President Ralph Mosley reported that the IDC-sponsored party for West Cobb and Joyner last week was a success. He said plans are being made for other such affairs.

An Old Problem: Canada And Criticism

Over a period of years the Toronto Exchange has been one of UNC's most criticized programs. A past Tar Heel editor suggested the program be reevaluated or discontinued. As much good could be done, he said, by the 27 participants "forming a daisy chain and dancing three times around the campus singing 'Oh Canada'. All participants would then re-enact the orgiastic scenes from 'La Dolce Vita' in the Forest Theater . . . Finally, the group would take a side trip to Carrboro."

As enjoyable as that sounds, it's not all the Toronto Exchange is.

On both the Chapel Hill and Toronto ends of the exchange there are educational programs (last year the UNC students heard a discussion on the pressures of Canadian nationalism . . . One of this year's Carolina discussions will center on the student view toward racial integration, and another program will feature Drs. Hill and Natanson on existentialism . . .) Additionally, the Torontans will have the opportunity to talk with many of UNC's top professors.

But far and away the most important part of the exchange lies on the personal level. This is where real understanding can take place among the 27 Carolina students and the similar group from Canada. Understanding of the UNC campus and its students should be made more realistic this year by the exellent selection of the 27 — the group is absolutely the most amazing collection of disparate personalities ever merged into one body (which will make it rather difficult for the Torontan to figure out Who and What is the Carolina student.)

. . . As the campus welcomes the Toronto visitors, opposition to the program seems to have vanished.

What about the past DTH editor quoted above, you ask? He's a member of the exchange program this year. (JC)

Carter Case Warning

Judge Heman Clark's decision in Raleigh yesterday that he would rule on the legality of UNC honor councils was encouraging.

He said he would pass judgment only on the facts of the case—a decision which, in itself, does little to support the council's authority. If any student convicted by the student councils and refused appeal by the chancellor and faculty, can then appeal to the state courts, it would seem the council's authority would be undermined.

No one can tell the exact effect of Judge Clark's decisions, or of the Carter case itself, until the judge's final verdict is reached. It also would be difficult to foretell what actual effect this case will have on Carolina's judicial system.

One thing, however, is certain:

The honor councils, and the university community as a whole, probably will take their judicial system and the safeguards, and rights granted defendants more seriously in the future. The Carter case has put just a tinge of the "fear of God" into 'em.

. . . But we are glad the case acted as a warning, rather than a death knell to UNC student judiciary. As a warning, the case was useful, as a club against student self-discipline, it would have been grossly unfortunate. (JC)

An Obituary

Several weeks ago the Daily Tar Heel published the first issue of the North Carolina Magazine, a humor and satire publication.

The idea for said magazine originally was written-in to the minds of the editors by that personable man-about-campus Mike Mathers, a candidate for editor last spring. Seeing the apparent student desire for such a magazine, we decided to attempt the undertaking.

The first issue was not well done. In fact, it was bad.

Student reaction to the magazine, understandably, was adverse. (Good to see the students are on their toes . . .) The young scholars with whom we have talked, expressed the desire that the mag be scuttled, that no new attempt be made. In other words, their reaction was, "If you don't at first succeed, don't ever try again."

If any students did feel the magazine was of potential value, we haven't heard from them.

We think the magazine could be made into a worthwhile addition to the university community. We think it could be a high quality humor and satire publication. But apparently the students don't want this—and this is a student newspaper, run for and by the students.

With these thoughts, we announce the untimely, however unlamented, death of the North Carolina Magazine.

Letters To The Editors

For And Against Editorials

Nixon Editorial Had 'Restraint'

To the Editors:

I read with much interest your recent editorial printed under the caption "Pray for Brown."

In my judgement you showed considerable restraint in your evaluation of Mr. Nixon.

Presumably the Almost-President and the Almost-Governor will now have to go to work. It is to be hoped that Mr. Chotiner will give him a job.

It is hoped so because if Mr. Nixon is forced to enter business and uses his political tactics he will be fortunate if he lasts twenty-four hours.

The time is now ripe for a grateful people to thank the Almost-President and the Almost-Governor by buying a mink coat for Mrs. Nixon. If you would care to organize such a fund, I would be glad to make a donation.

Let's Eliminate DTH Editorials

To the Editors:

I object to the practice of one or two students being permitted to editorialize in the school newspaper to which student subscription is mandatory. I can see the value of a forum for all students, but I cannot see why it is either valuable or fair for one or two students to express themselves in the paper every day. True, the editorhip is elective, but the choice is narrow; yet even if the choice was wide, I could not see the usefullness or justice in that person's opinion appearing every day in the newspaper since subscription is not optional. In the other dailies of the area the editors daily express their opinions, but we have the privilege of not buying these dailies, a privilege we do not have with The Daily Tar Heel. I submit that the daily editorials in The Daily Tar Heel should be eliminated, or subscription to it should become optional.

—Wayne Spurrier

Letters Shouldn't Attack Personality

To the Editors:

Of late there has been much criticism of Mr. Clotfelter's "editorials" in the Daily Tar Heel. In the November 13th edition, Mr. Clotfelter was accused of attempted "brainwashing," slander, and other felonies. I am of the opinion that he was not trying to brainwash anybody, but was merely expressing opinions.

If Messrs. Langdon, Dixon, Thompson, and Pope were really concerned with honesty, or (Heaven forbid) doing something constructive, perhaps they should criticize Mr. Clotfelter's editorials, not Mr. Clotfelter himself. It is a test of a man's intelligence if he can find valid reason for disagreement with an opinion, but only a test of his ignorance if he must resort to criticism of those with whose opinions he does not agree.

—Sam Hunt

Poor Composition

To the Editors:

I think E. L. Smith's article in last Sunday's Daily Tar Heel, November 11, 1962, has given freshman students a very good example of how NOT to write a composition. Mr. Smith's article is the best example of using stilted diction that I have ever seen in print. He could have made his point much easier if he had not written such a long article. Most of the statements were superfluous to the actual point he was attempting to make. Since Mr. Smith went to such extremes, I feel his article was a waste of three columns of editorial space in the Daily Tar Heel.

Word Left Out

I left a phrase and a word out of the copy of my letter printed under "Honor Code Like Gestapo State?" in the Sunday TAR HEEL:

The fourth paragraph was meaningless or, at best, confusing s printed; however, the paragraph becomes clearly meaningful when correctly written as "A Gestapo system of policing acquires much of its information through reports from citizens who have been convinced that they must report other citizens' acts which are classed as damaging to the state—such as children informing on their parents."

"The heaviest cost is not paid in guilt pangs, planted by Honor Code bromides, . . ." is correct for sentence two in paragraph eight.

Any errors were made in recopying, not in logic.

A New Literary Weejun?

With Mary McCarthy's impish ha-ha in Harper's, the battlements of the J. D. Salinger cult are trembling. But since there must be a successor-cult (American students, it seems, read as well as dress by herds) the British author, William Golding, is moving up. That is just what Edmund Fuller says in a recent New York Herald Tribune book review—"a vogue for William Golding on a scale matched only by that of J. D. Salinger."

It is most curious.

The Golding totem is a slender novel called LORD OF THE FLIES which so far has sold 311,750 copies, mostly, one gathers, in college book exchanges. Its story is allegorical. By statement so direct as practically to dispense with character development, or the notion that human nature may have two sides, it savagely attacks the old (or should one say, pre-Freudian?) notion of the innocence of children.

The irony is heavy. Mr. Golding sweeps us up in the aftermath of a devastating nuclear war. Kind-hearted adults have sent a planeload of school-boys away to make a new life on an island — at least until they can be rescued, as they finally are.

The blunt point of hte book is that even children, "innocents," are naturally too bestial to live together without lapsing into savagery, tribalism, murder, anarchy, the law of the jungle. Despite the vain effort of two boys to establish order, this is just what happens.

LORD OF THE FLIES is a strikingly original novel, as minor novels go. But its categorical judgment upon childish nature is so curiously wop-sided as to make Freud blush and Thomas Hobbes (who theorized that life for adults in the state of nature is "solitary, poor, nasty, brutish and short") cringe. A further irony of the book is that if one accepted its sweeping view of human nature, one would, as Hobbes saw, accept most of the argument for the authoritarian state.

Why, one wonders, would American students, fresh from the child-adoring Salinger who paints a world where callous grownups smother ultra-sensitive kids, skitter so capriciously now to the camp of old Bill Golding, who tells them that Freud was understanding the case for childish aggressions? Why don't Golding's young readers rebel? Why not call him a slanderer, a vile propagandist against their title to the presumption of innocence? One is at a loss to say.

Maybe the high school and college students who buy and swallow LORD OF THE FLIES view themselves as Junior Adams. Or is it just that a voguish but one-sided theory of human nature can be slipped, like a sort of literary Weejun, over the mind without a moment's question whether it is true or not?

Out Of The Fryin' Pan . . .

We look forward to, indeed, welcome with open arms, those readers who wish to take issue with the opinions and/or facts expressed in this column. Anger is to be preferred to apathy any day of the week; and be it similarly stated here that those who decide to reply are well within their rights as citizens, for we know of nothing in the Constitution that requires a man to THINK before writing a Letter to the Editor.

Members of the Duke Ambassadors, aided and abetted by the Harlequins, presented what we thought to be a most satisfying afternoon of jazz on Sunday last. Whether due to inadequate promotion on the part of GM or to Miss Ann Bancroft and Patty Duke holding forth at the Carolina theatre, the concert only drew two hundred out of ten thousand.

The music was sincere, solid and swinging, the afternoon lawn party pleasantly devoid of any phoniness in presentation that so often characterizes sessions of this sort. Critical sequins for the Harlequins and an ICBM for the the Hot Nuts.

Results of a survey executed by the SATURDAY REVIEW indicate that journalism graduates of UNC fall close to the bottom of the salary spectrum in nation-wide comparison. Highest median figures for starting salaries go to those graduates from Iowa, Northwestern and Columbia, in that order, $112 being the top.

UNC graduates bring down $80, along with U. of Oklahoma, Texas Christian and Boston University. Lowest figures belong to those stalwarts from Georgia and U. of Rhode Island.

Well, we can't all start on The Washington Post, but then there's The Hillsboro Feed and Grain Weekly—not much money, but think of the experience!

There once was a Nixon named Dick
Whose tactics were Murrayly slick.
He slung gobs of mud
But came up with a dud,
Oh, Dickie, you're sick, sick, sick!

Pat Brown is no doubt humming to himself these days, the cheerful lyrics of "California, Here I Come." These leave Mr. Nixon to chant woefully the words to "Back in My Own Back Yard." A great to do is made over the fact that Nixon finished third at Duke Law School as though this sterling accomplishment gives him immunity from ethical itch.

Now we know how he did it.

THE ONE AND ONLY REAL TRUTH

By BENEDICT BURR

College Newspapers today are quivering in fear as the Great Censor stalks the land, crushing the tyranical press at state universities.

With the objective hand of truth, he — well, almost objective — slaps down the evil voices of insidious college students.

Who is this Grand Inquisitor who is saving us from such brazen fiends as 20 year old journalism majors? Of all people, it's Barry "Why - don't - you - inherit - a - department - store" Goldwater.

Unfortunately, the good senator is not applying his truth-discerning powers to all editorials . . . just to those which criticize, of all people, Barry Goldwater.

He was successful in getting the editor of the Colorado Daily fired. He is now going after the daily paper of the University of Illinois.

It is encouraging to know that at least one of our U. S. Senators is taking time off from his regular duties to administer college newspapers. Maybe this is why he doesn't have time for peace in Cuba, or medical care for the aged, or federal aid to education.

It is doubtless true that the college papers acted without much sense when they attacked the department store tycoon. But how much less sense does it take for a U. S. Senator to accuse the president of the University of Colorado of being unfit for his job because a student spoke indiscriminately?

How trivial and egotistic can a national figure be when he stoops to apply pressure to get the editor of a college paper fired. Senator Goldwater has shown his power and influence to the nation . . . and he has made an ass of himself.

Obviously, this is a challenge to the Honorable Goldwater to try to assert himself at the University of North Carolina. Even in a southern state with a growing two-party system, there is no doubt that his bombastic efforts would be in vain at a university that cherished its student autonomy and freedom.

Let us hope that the senator has enough dignity and respect for his position to ignore this dare.

Dr. Russell Kirk On The College Press

By Armistead Maupin, Jr.

FROST

A recent NEW YORK TIMES reported that a Moscow television broadcast carried a film of Robert Frost reciting some of his poems. Simultaneous translation into Russian was provided for the Soviet audience. However, the segment of "Mending Wall" that reads, "Something there is that doesn't love a wall," was not translated . . . for some reason or another.

ELECTON REFLECTION

Republican Man of the Year: Terry Sanford

NOVEL

A SHADE OF DIFFERENCE, the sequel to Allen Drury's ADVISE AND CONSENT, has already begun to ruffle liberal feathers. But, unlike its sister novel, it has managed to escape the clutches of Otto Preminger; Doubleday announced at the publication of the book that it will not be available for sale to the movies.

BABY JANE

While we're on the subject of movies . . . don't miss "What Ever Happened to Baby Jane." It's the most original, the most artistic film that Hollywood has produced this year. Some critics have even suggested a split Oscar for Crawford and Davis.

LIBEL

Dr. Russell Kirk pointed out in Carroll Hall the other night that, on the college campus as elsewhere, freedom of the press does not mean freedom to libel. He cited offhand the recent furor caused by the student newspaper at the University of Colorado. And, in the latest issue of NATIONAL REVIEW, Dr. Kirk gives the full story.

It appears that the COLORADO DAILY recently launched an unparalleled attack on Mr. Eisenhower and Senator Goldwater. As an example of the "frantic defamation" that poured forth from the paper's editorials, Dr. Kirk quotes from the writings of Carl Mitcham, a senior at the school: "Barry Goldwater is a fool, a mountebank, a murderer, no better than a common criminal."

With great reluctance, the president of the University dismissed the editor, and, in doing so, seized the opportunity to libel the Arizona Senator farther. Mr. Goldwater sent a letter of protest to the University president which prompted the administrator to denounce Senator Goldwater at a press conference. A letter from the president to the Senator read, in part: "We have a genuine democracy of ideas on our campus. We have fought long and hard to achieve it, and the fight has been against those who—like yourself—believe the function of a university is to indoctrinate, rather than educate: to control thought, rather than to stimulate it."

Of this Dr. Kirk says, "So to protest against being called a murderer and a common criminal is to advocate "thought control"! Suppose the student paper had thus described Senator Hubert Humphrey, say would Mr. Newton (the president) have treated Senator Humphrey's dislike of being libeled as a passion for "thought control"?

Newman Recital Set Nov. 27

William S. Newman, Distinguished Professor of Music, will give a piano recital on the Music Department's Tuesday Evening Series Nov. 27 at 8 p.m. in Hill Music Hall. The recital in free to the public.

Among the pieces to be played will be an amusing 17th century Tocatta on the cuckoo motive by Bernardo Pasquini, an expressive 18th century sonato by Friedrich Widhelm Rust that has figured in one of the greatest hoaxes of music history, and Busoni's heroic transcription of Bach's Chaconne for unaccompanied violin.

The second half of the recital will include two exciting favorites of the 19th century, by Mendelssohn and Liszt, as well as the rarely heard Seventh Sonata by the influential Russian mystic of half a century ago, Alexander Scriabin. This sonata, subtitled "The White Mass," is cast in one movement and built entirely on the restless six-tone "mystic chord" that underlies Scriabin's later harmony.

Originally from Cleveland, Ohio, Dr. Newman came to Chapel Hill after separation from Army Air Forces Intelligence in 1945. He has been teaching courses in appreciation and graduate musicology, and serving as chairman of piano instruction. He divides his time between teaching, performing, and researching.

In 1960-61, grants from the Guggenheim Foundation and the American Council of Learned Societies enabled him to complete "The Sonata in the Classic Era," which is the second of the four volumes projected in his large-scale history of the Sonata Idea.

Soccermen End Season At Duke

By CURRY KIRKPATRICK

North Carolina closes out a fine soccer season this afternoon when Coach Marvin Allen's booters engage Duke at Durham.

The Tr Heels, 6-2 on the year, will be out for their first victory over a Duke team since 1959.

That year, Allen's kickers beat the Blue Devils, 2-1, climaxing their finest campaign (10 wins against a single loss) in history.

If past years are any indication, today's game should be a thriller. Two seasons ago, the Dukes beat Carolina in overtime, 4-2 and, last year, upended UNC in a 3-2 cliff-hanger.

Decided Second Place

As has been the case in these recent years, the game will decide second place in the Atlantic Coast Conference. The title has already been sewed up by Maryland's prennial champions.

Maryland, incidentally, defeated Navy on Wednesday thereby advancing to the NCAA Eastern semi-finals against Pittsburgh this weekend.

Duke, this afternoon, will be led by its slim senior captain, Dean Ross. Ross, who learned his soccer in Madrid Spain, centers one of the fastest lines in the South.

Contributing much to the speed of this line in one Alex Epanchin, a swift right wing, scored the goal that beat the Tar Heels last year.

For Carolina, the game marks the final soccer contest for ten senior squad members, four of whom have been outstanding this season.

Center Forward Jim Reston has has been a prolific goal scorer this year on his return to the soccer wars from a year's study in England. Reston, with 13 points, is still within eyesight of John Ghanin's UNC record of 16 set in 1959.

Snyder, Kepner Praised

Co-captains Bill Snyder and Bob Kepner have also played strong roles in Carolina's 1962 successes.

Snyder, a tough fullback, has been a big reason for the Tar Heels' tight defense while Kepner has been a steady ball handler and playmaker on Coach Allen's offensive line.

Herman Prakke also finishing up his career today, climaxes two years as a starter on the line. Prakke is a fine two-way player and has the rare knack of checking as well on defense as he charges on offense.

Remaining seniors winding up their eligibility today are Ted Garrett, Ward Hamilton, Nelson Irvine, Bob Jones, Andy McNally, and Charlie Shelton.

SAE, Manly, Law School Win Intramural Grid Titles

By STUART BALL

Manly, SAE, and Law School III were crowned champions of their respective divisions as their Intramural Tag-Football seasons came to a climatic finish. Manly won with relative ease after a close call in the semi-final round, but Law III and SAE had to battle to the wire for their victories.

The Law III victory over Law I was one of the most wild and wooly finishes in playoff history. Falling behind 15-2, Law III had all but been counted out by the many Law school students who watched the contest from the side lines. But a saftey and two touchdowns, the second coming with only seven seconds remaining in the game, turned apparent defeat into joyous victory.

Late in the third quarter, after being awarded two safeties due to incomplete passes from the end zone, Law III began a drive that was culminated by Poo Rochell's score to close the gap to 15-10. Only three minutes 50 seconds remained and, instead of running out the clock, Law I seemed intent on scoring a clinching touchdown after receiving the kickoff.

The Law III defense dug in, however and forced Law I to punt from their own end zone. The kick was returned to midfield and a final desperate scoring attempt was launched by Law III with just over a minute remaining.

A pass interference call against Law I greatly aided the effort. With seven seconds remaining, J. T. Patrick caught a side line pass and fell into the end zone for the go-ahead touchdown. The extra point was missed but it was incidental as Law III won 16-15.

The SAE's also had trouble in finally winning their crown. Behind 7-0 at the half, they had to fight for their lives right down to the last play before finally emerging victorious.

An interception by Vinny Giles and two touchdown passes by Scott Trotter accounted for the SAE scores. Keith Stoneman and Bob Segrest were the recipients of Trotter's passes.

UNC-ND Gametime Changed

Gametime for tomorrow's intersectional football clash between UNC and Notre Dame has been changed to 1:30 p.m. (EST), it was announced yesterday.

Meanwhile, in Chapel Hill, cheerleaders are still making plans for the radio-loop telephone broadcast of cheers from Carolina students to Notre Dame Stadium.

While head cheerleader Hannis Latham will be with the Tar Heel team in South Bend, Ind., the rest of the cheerleading squad will remain behind to pep up Carolina students listening to the game in the Tin Can.

A play-by-play account of the contest will be amplified over a loud speaker, and a mock football field will be set up showing the progress of the teams and the score of the game.

Lee Ferrell's combo will be on hand to play for dancing and listening at 1 p.m. until game time, and during halftime.

Refreshments will be provided—and in Carolina tradition, BYOL.

The cheerleaders encourage the student body to bring a blanket, babe and what-have-you—and root the Tar Heels on.

Though other schools have used this cheer-by-proxy technique, it's the first time Carolina has tried it.

One day this week the team worked out briefly in Kenan Stadium with the loudspeakers blaring canned crowd noise at a fever pitch. The Notre Dame crowd can be one of the noisiest in the nation, and Coach Jim Hickey wants to get his boys prepared for the conditions they'll face Saturday.

Educator Talks To Teachers

"Teachers in the South have failed for years to supply the kind of quality instruction needed by our children," said William C. Archie, director of the North Carolina state board of higher education.

Archie spoke Thursday afternoon at Carroll Hall to education majors attending the annual convocation of the school of education. The convocation was held in observance of National Education Week, November 11-17.

Archie said that the students of North Carolina do not measure up to the students from other states, especially in the fields of math and science. "North Carolina teachers are doing a totally inadequate job in the teaching of math and science," he said.

According to Archie, the average scores made by North Carolina students on national tests are below the national average for the tests.

Archie has taught in several private schools, and is a former dean of Wake Forest College and Emory University.

Archie commended the climate of freedom that is emphasized at UNC, saying, "No other public institution in the South can compare in the freedom of climate and the tolerance that exists in UNC."

He said that the best place for North Carolina to build a distinguished, tax-supported institution of higher education is at UNC.

Archie asked the students why they wanted to become teachers, suggesting that it might be because they were not certain what they wanted to do with their life.

"Most teachers are idealists, for if they didn't scorn money, they wouldn't be in teaching." He said that although great gains had been made in pay (he quoted $3600 as the average North Carolina high school teacher's pay), teachers were still underpaid.

"The teaching profession is a noble one," Archie said, and he blamed the teachers themselves, by their depreciation of their profession, for the lack of good teachers.

He listed among the attributes of good teachers: (1) native ability, (2) intellectual curiosity, (3) moral and intellectual integrity, (4) sense of humor, and (5) imagination.

The theme of the 1962 American Education Week focuses attention on the role of the schools in meeting the challenge of change.

President Kennedy said in his proclamation on American Education Week that "We should examine the quality of our educational institutions and assess the degree to which our educational programs and practices served the interests of the individual and bring vitality and strength to our Nation and its culture. Every American should be committed to the advancement of education."

Thai Dancers Perform Here November 28

West meets East on November 28 when the Phakavali Dancers come to Chapel Hill.

The dance group from Thailand will appear on the stage of Memorial Hall at 8 p.m., Wednesday, November 28.

The group originated when a retiring court musician of the 19th century drew his disciples around him in order to preserve the traditional arts of Thailand, which were in danger of disappearing.

The present head of the Institute is the son of the original founder and the foremost composer in Thailand. With his wife he directs the Institute and the company, carrying on the traditions so carefully guarded by his father.

The wife of the director is the country's leading classical dancer and is the only woman in Thailand who has directed and choreographed for the stage, films and TV.

Eleven Cadets Make Solos Within Week

Things happen fast at Carolina's AFROTC Detachment.

John H. Faunce, a senior cadet who will enter pilot training when graduated, soloed. Within the next ten days, eleven of his fellow cadets enrolled in the local Flight Instruction Program, also soloed. During the same period Howard E. Adams, another FIP student, received his private license.

The Flight Instruction Program gives all senior AFROTC cadets going into Air Force Pilot training, an opportunity to learn the fundamentals of flying and receive their private license during the final college year. Following military tradition, soon after each cadet soloed, he was tossed into a swimming pool by his classmates.

Other Cadets who soloed are George M. Barr, William E. Burgess, Rodney D. Collins, William D. Croom, Perino M. Dearing, Douglas E. Eury, William H. Holderness Reginald A. Pinson, Mark G. Schnitzer, David E. Scobie and Tony W. Walker.

Y Contingent To Make Tour Of U.N. Plant

For forty YMCA members, Thanksgiving will be spent at the United Nations in New York.

This group is planning to leave Wednesday, Nov. 21, and take a planned tour of the UN in a program entitled "The Changing Role of the UN."

"We hope to attend the General Assembly and several committee meetings," said the YMCA's adviser for this trip, Miss Ann Queen.

The students have planned to have interviews with members of different UN missions. Among the members will be those from the USSR, Cuba, India, Algeria, and Mexico.

Certain qualifications were set up by the Collegiate Council of the UN which planned this tour, that had to be met by the students going.

First, all members had to be interviewed and passed by a board headed by the co-chairmen of the project, Kellis Parker and Judy Alexander.

Second, preparatory lectures had to be given by qualified people and attended by the students. These lectures were presented by Dr. Herbert Bodman, Dr. Raymond Dawson, William Darity and Jim McCorkle.

Third, all students must attend all sessions and meetings planned during the tour.

Students making up this UN group represent all major fields of study and are from all classes, from freshman to graduate school.

Each day the tour will last from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m., leaving evenings open for free time.

When the group returns, they will begin to plan a program that will enable UNC students to see what was learned on the trip.

SL Allots $961 For Yearbook

by JOEL BULKLEY

Student Legislature Thursday night passed three bills which appropriated a total of $1,236.60 to assist campus activities.

A bill to limit resolutions which legislature can consider was tabled, by a vote of 23-7, as the thirty-third assembly concluded its last session.

SL hastily passed a bill giving the Yackety-Yack $961.60 in order to help them rectify a total error of $1,711.60 in their income.

Louis Legum, Editor of the Yack, spoke in its behalf noting that the staff had tried hard to raise the money, by charging admission to their beauty contest and by cutting the number of '63 books to be printed by 100, thus saving $760. He added that they were still very much in debt.

A bill, introduced by Rufus Edmisten (SP) for Haynes McFadden, appropriating $210 to the Asst. Attorney General in the field of legislation for the printing of a new codification of the statutes of Student Government was passed unanimously.

Cheerleaders

A bill alloting $75 from the unappropriated balance for the UNC cheerleaders was also unanimously approved. Its purpose is to assist the cheerleaders in their effort to broadcast organized cheers from the Tin Can to Notre Dame Stadium this afternoon.

George Rosenthal, (SP) who introduced the bill for head cheerleader Hannis Latham, said that since no appropriation for the cheerleaders had been made in this year's Student Government budget, that it was the duty of SL, the representative body of the students, to aid them. He added that head football coach Jim Hickey had reported to him that this year's cheerleaders were doing an excellent job. Hickey said that he and the other coaches felt that this idea to increase school spirit was a good one.

Latham noted that $110 of the $300 cost of this project had already been raised through contributions from other campus groups. He said that this innovation in raising school spirit for an away game was a necessity and therefore warranted the appropriation. Latham also stated that cheering for a school team involved a cause common to every student, whether fraternity member or a dorm resident.

Lengthy Debate

After a lengthy debate, a proposal to amend the student constitution was tabled for further consideration. This bill stated that legislature should have only the right to pass resolutions which would "directly relate to the campus" or substantially affect higher education in America."

Ford Rowan (SP) called the wording of the bill, co-sponsored by Arthur Hays (SP) and Bo Edwards (UP) nebulous and also questioned the legality of it.

Rowan, acting in his capacity as SL Parlimentarian, reported that this bill was unnecessary because the student constitution, the by-laws and "Roberts Rules Of Order" would effectively cover this measure.

Edwards replied that something concrete should be done to clarify the constitution. He cited a recent poll conducted by the Communications Committee which showed that 62% of the students interviewed did not want SL to consider off-campus issues as an example for his side.

Charles Cooper (SP) concluded the debate by saying that "no reins on legislature were needed and that everyone should be free to speak."

All bills now in committee will have to be re-entered into the thirty-fourth assembly, which convenes November 29th, in order to be considered again.

Mooney Named First Editor Of Journalism School Paper

The establishment of a laboratory newspaper and the appointment of its editor were announced today by Dr. Norval Neil Luxon, dean of the University School of Journalism.

The UNC Journalist, to be issued several times a semester, will be edited during 1962-63 by Charles D. Mooney, senior from Statesville. Mooney, holder of the Quincy Sharpe Mills Scholarship, was chosen by a board of student and staff members. Mooney worked on the Charlotte News last summer.

First issue of the UNC Journalist will be a four-page, printed tabloid. The editor and the board will decide the format of succeeding issues.

News and feature stories, reviews and editorials written by journalism students as class assignments or assigned by the editor will make up the content of the Journalist.

The UNC Journalist will be circulated among journalism students, journalism schools and departments, North Carolina newspapers, and other interested persons. The publication will carry the best work of students in the School.

The staff of the School of Journalism has had such a publication under consideration for some time. Final plans were worked out by the board appointed by Dean Luxon after a slate of student members had been recommended by officers of undergraduate journalism groups.

Coed Gets Reprimand For Driving After Late Hours

A sophomore coed pled guilty to a breach of the Campus Code in the only case that came before the Women's Honor Council Thursday night.

The defendant was charged with the violation of a rule prohibiting a coed from driving after closing hours without the written permission of her parents.

The student had permission to be away from campus for the period of Friday through Monday and kept within this limitation by arriving in Chapel Hill at 6:30 a.m. Monday.

Although she pled guilty to a violation of this rule, she stated that she did not know of the ruling at the time. When informed of it, she turned herself in to the Attorney General.

Statements were submitted from her housemother and her date.

After a deliberation of one and one-half hours, the defendant was found guilty as charged. She was given an Official Reprimand on the basis that she drove all night and not for a short period of time, that she should have known the rule in question because she had been given a copy of the rules and was responsible for knowing them, and that she had appeared before the Women's Honor Council before and had been found guilty on another charge.

Students Warned Of Keeping Cars Here

An official spokesman for the Office of the Dean of Men announced yesterday that all freshmen and those sophomores without "C" averages would not be allowed to keep cars on campus between the Thanksgiving and Christmas holidays.

Such action would constitute a violation of University regulations and would be dealt with accordingly.

Defense Changes Proposed

PARIS (UPI) — The United States told its European allies Friday it will give serious consideration to helping them create a medium-range nuclear missle force if they want one.

But it urged that they step up their contribution to increasing the size of the Atlantic alliance's conventional forces in Europe.

The offer was made by Undersecretary of State George W. Ball in a speech to the closing session of the eighth annual North Atlantic Treaty Organization NATO parliamentary conference.

Ball made it clear that the United States still believes there is no urgent military need for a European nuclear force. But he said if the European allies really want one, "we are ready to give serious consideration to the creation of a genuinely multilateral medium range ballistic missile force fully coordinated with the other deterrent forces of NATO."

He also told the Europeans bluntly that with their present booming economies they can contribute a bigger share to maintaining NATO's conventional forces.

In Washington, U. S. officials, commenting on Ball's speech, made these points about the multilateral missile force which be discussed:

U. S. officials believe it should be a seaborne force, either on submarines or surface vessels. This, they feel, would be less vulnerable to attack than a land force and less likely to be used for the purposes of a particular nation.

—The force could be a European one or joint European-U.S. one,

—But it would have to be "genuinely multilateral" and "fully coordinated" with the existing NATO deterrent.

Ball's statement apparently marked a change in the Kennedy administration's previous policy of keeping the NATO nuclear deterrent as much as possible in American hands.

Peking Paper Blasts Soviet 'Revisionists'

TOKYO (UPI)—The newspaper Red Flag of Peking, theoretical journal of the central committee of the Chinese Communist party, Friday blasted Soviet "revisionists . . . scared stiff before the position of strength of U. S. imperialism."

A 3,740-word editorial from the party organ was broadcast by the New China News Agency, and monitored here. Coming just a few days before the central committee meeting of the Soviet Communist party, the editorial underscored the Peking-Moscow ideological rift.

The attack on the Soviet Union was indirect, but unmistakable. Yugoslavia was criticized directly. The editorial ripped into "modern revisionists," a category in which Chinese theoreticians have placed Soviet Premier Nikita S. Khrushchev.

Modern revisionism, the main danger to the international Communist Movement, can be recognized by its "surrender to imperialist pressure," the editorial said, in what could well be an oblique reference to the Soviet rocket removal from Cuba.

Yugoslavia was scored for "relying on the good intentions of the sensible section of the imperialist circles, believing lasting world peace can be realized."

Despite the attack on Yugoslavia whose President Tito was called "the most conspicuous exponent of revisionism," Red Flag stated that any attempt by one party or country in the Communist bloc "to impose its own views on others or substitute for comradely suggestion and criticism a method of interference in each other's international affairs will impair the unity of the international Communist movement."

Audience On Stage

New Technique Adapted To 'Worker'

By VANCE BARRON JR.

Memorial Hall will be converted into a "theater-in-the-round" for a special production of "The Miracle Worker" Dec. 14-16.

William Van Tassel, director of the play, explained that the curtain will be closed and the audience seated on the stage surrounding the play area. This technique was chosen because it "pulls" the audience into the action, Van Tassel said.

But although this heightens the drama, he continued, it also creates a number of new problems. Lighting, for instance, must be projected onto the stage from all angles without striking the audience. And movement must be controlled so that all members of the audience see the faces of the players during the play. Also, audience size will be restricted to about 90 persons per performance.

The "theater-in-the-round" technique was first developed in Dallas, Tex., and Washington, D. C., for small professional theaters with limited budgets.

One of the leading roles, that of Helen Keller, will be played by Ann Carson, a Chapel Hill girl. Although this is Miss Carson's first production, she is said to have shown considerable promise in the early rehearsals.

Miss Margaret Cathell will play the role of Anne Sullivan, the teacher of Helen Keller. Miss Cathell has studied for two years and several summers with the Neighborhood Playhouse School of the Theatre in New York City. In addition, she has appeared in a few off-Broadway productions. Presently, she is a part-time student at the University and working at a veterinary hospital.

Paul Gold, who will appear as the father of Helen Keller, is a veteran of several Playmaker and Petite Dramatique productions. His last role was as Mephistophiles in "Doctor Faustus," presented by the Playmakers last spring.

He also appeared in "The Deadly Game" and "The Renegade" and toured with "The Matchmakers" last year. Ann West, who will play the role of Helen Keller's mother, participated in summer stock theatre in Southbury, Conn., this year. She is a transfer student from Wilmington Jr. College where she appeared in "Androcles and the Lion" and played the title role in "Medea."

The role of the Doctor will be played by Larry Walz. He has appeared in another Petite Dramatique production, "The Deadly Game" and in "Doctor Faustus."

Henry Ramer will play the role of the son.

Director Wesley Van Tassel presently is working on an MA in Dramatics Arts. He came to Chapel Hill from New York, where he taught school. His undergraduate work was done at the University of Minnesota. Van Tassel recently directed "The Deadly Game" and was assistant director of "Doctor Faustus."

The assistant director of "The Miracle Worker" is Kit Ewing. Harry Callahan is designing the set.

Honor Council Upheld– But Not Really...

Anne Carter has produced evidence tending to prove her innocent of the honor council offense for which she was suspended from UNC. In so doing, her case may become a legal precedent which will lead to the weakening of UNC's system of student self-discipline.

The judge said he felt the Board of Trustees had the "inherent power to delegate authority to the administration and faculty and then to the students." So he decided not to rule on the specific charge by Miss Carter that the councils were illegally constituted. He said he believed the major question before the court was the "matter of whether or not Miss Carter cheated"—and on that, the judge was "inclined to disagree with the decision of the Women's Council.

"I am not fully sure that, even though I don't agree with the decision of the council," Clark said, "there is too much the court can do."

If the hearings in the Wake County court continue in this vein it appears the judge will find Miss Carter innocent. She claims she took the original quizz, not the make-up her Latin instructor claimed he had given her. In Thursday's hearings a copy of the original quiz was introduced — with the words "Mr. Catlin" (the name of the instructor) on the back of it, apparently in Miss Carter's handwriting.

The most serious aspect of Judge Clark's hearing is that he is basing his view on exactly the same evidence which appeared before the Women's Council.

There is no new evidence. The handwriting was on the back of the quiz when the council decided to suspend Miss Carter—in fact, the council even considered the handwriting evidence.

The student who wrote up the Carter trial proceedings told the court she thought "Mr. Catlin" had been written by the student attorney general. Former Women's Council Chairman Prissy Wyrick said the council had made a handwriting comparison, but apparently had considered it insignificant.

For the Wake County Superior Court to rule on the same evidence which faced the student council, and to reverse the council's decision, would seem to be a strong blow to Carolina's governmental system. It would open the path for all convicted students to appeal to higher courts, even if the regular appeal avenues (the chancellor, president and faculty) refused the appeal.

This is not to hope for a "guilty" verdict from Judge Clark—if Miss Carter is innocent, the verdict should certainly say so. But if the judge does say "innocent" the UNC honor councils will be put in a most difficult position—and they will be kept company in this position by the chancellor and faculty. (JC)

Duke Game: A Protest

There are some things about university life which are now, and will continue to be, beyond the realm of any student control. There are events, decisions, and rulings which, although they greatly effect students, are none-the-less properly placed in the hands of administrative authorities.

We accept many decisions and abide by many rulings in the conception of which we have had no active part, because they are made by our elders who reside in the positions of responsibility. This is as it should be.

But because certain rulings and events are beyond any active student control, we should not glibly assume that they are beyond student concern. We acquiesce in most instances because we realize that our elders are in positions that enable them to better understand the full scope of problems and to administer justly the decisions that must be made.

But we do not relinquish the privilege, indeed the right, to raise an occasional voice in protest, when we feel that the administration has totally disregarded our concerns.

Such "disregard" appears to have been in evidence with the scheduling of this year's football encounters, particularly in the scheduling of the Duke game over the Thanksgiving holidays.

Certainly, we should all realize that there are many factors which drastically affect the composition of one team's football schedule. One alteration in the schedule of any particular team is liable to rearrange the schedules of numerous other teams. And when each university is trying (we would hope) to secure the best possible arrangements for its team—and its fans—a great deal of work must go into the final arrangements.

There must be problems about weather, concern about attendance, consideration of time, and, of course, scrambling after dollars. This, alas, appears inevitable. Big time athletics is no small business. And when one major sport, as in this instance football, is forced to support so many other facets of a university's athletic program, the necessity for procuring the dollar must be quite an important factor.

So, the situation may never be changed. And, certainly, we recognize that if it ever is to be changed, it will not come about because of noise on the part of students. It surely is out of our hands, but damned if it is out of our area of concern.

And therefore, we raise a voice in protest. We are extremely unhappy about the fact that the Tar Heels play Duke University over the holidays. We know that we can do nothing about it. We know that the students at Duke are unhappy. And we know that our protest doesn't make any difference. But we did not want the event to pass without voicing our resentment.

In light of all the complexities of scheduling, it would seem that there should be some things that are basic to every year's schedule—some things upon which you build, and around which you arrange the remainder of the schedule; and it would certainly seem that one of those basic things should be the scheduling of the encounter with Duke University on a week-end when school is in session. That much seems reasonable at least. (CW)

'Question 7' Forces Viewer To Ask Self

"Question 7," which opened yesterday at the Varsity Theater, is one of the best and most unusual films to come to Chapel Hill this year. Produced by Louis de Rochement Associates in collaboration with Lutheran Film Associates, it is based on documented testimony from East German refugees, and is about the pressures brought to bear on Christianity by the Communist regime, and less specifically, about the test of conscience put to those who are morally against the means and ends of the Communist ideology.

The title, "Question 7," refers to a questionnaire distributed by the regime to the students who are applying for higher education, and of course, the answers, to be acceptable, must adhere to the Party line. Question 7 itself is, "What have been the predominant influences on my social development?" To be answered truthfully by Peter Gottfried, a talented music student, and the son of a Lutheran pastor, the questionnaire would reveal him to be politically unreliable and doom him to a labor battalion instead of enabling him to attend a music conservatory. To answer as he is expected to answer would make him a liar to himself, and deny everything his father (and the Lutheran Church) had taught him.

This is but one of the examples of the pressures brought to bear on Christians by the regime. Peter's father has his difficulties, too, as informers within the congregation are continually reporting his sermons to be political speeches, and since his sermons are honest, they are held to be subversive. The state manages to turn the "religious subversion" of political dogma into political subversion of religious dogma. These are but a few of the economic and legal-political pressures brought to bear, and there are also, of course, the examples of the Marxist interpretations of history in public education, and other expected examples of propaganda. But so much for the documentary aspect of the film.

As a story, "Question 7" is more valuable as one of personal struggle. It proposes three alternative responses for the Christian or "moral" (if one is willing to regard Communism as amoral) individual to make. As an evasion of the entire issue, or the happiest solution, depending on how you look at it, there is flight to the West (obviously not the happy solution it was before the erection of the Wall); as the easiest, or most realistic (and dishonest) solution, again depending on how you look at it, there is the "radish" solution (red on the outside); and finally there is the most courageous and honest solution, that of standing firmly and openly for what you believe, at the risk of economic and political persecution.

The two leading roles are both expertly played by Michael Gwyn as the pastor and Christian de Bresson, one-time winner of the Katharine Cornell Award as the Best Juvenile Actor, as his son. Lothar Wolff and Stuart Rosenberg, as producer and director respectively.

Goldwater Isn't Hypocrite On Aid

Dear Sir:

Recently an article, "Federal Aid To Arizona, A Billion for Barry," appeared in The DTH which systematically noted the influx of Federal aid into Arizona. The overriding implication was that Senator Goldwater is a hypocrite BECAUSE ARIZONA ACCEPTS FEDERAL AID. Perhaps Mr. McNeill's lack of discernment or either outright deception is typical of Senator Goldwater's critics. The crux of the issue is that Senator Goldwater is opposed to the Federal Government involving itself in areas that it does not constitutionally belong. He maintains that when this happens Arizona and 49 other states are forced to grab from the "pork barrel." The fact that THE FEDERAL GOVERNMENT CREATES THE "PORK BARREL" is Senator Goldwater's lament! It is absolutely absurd for Mr. McNeill, Senator Goldwater, or anyone else to suggest that if Arizona refrained from accepting Federal Aid, then 49 other states would follow suit. Yet Mr. McNeill implies that this is precisely what Senator Goldwater and fellow Arizonans must do in order to avoid a "particular sense of contradiction." Bull!

WUNC Favors Carrier Current

To the Editors:

On Tuesday, November 13, a letter appeared in your paper concerning WUNC-FM. The letter was written by Thurman L. Smith. While Mr. Smith could be corrected concerning his ungentlemanly comment on the attractiveness of Miss Mink, and his erroneous conclusion on the number of students who possess FM radios and listen to WUNC-FM, I would prefer to confine my comments at this time to the matter of "carrier current."

Where "carrier current" is concerned I must agree with Mr. Smith. An effective "carrier current" operation can be a valuable asset to a University campus. However, the word effective is the key to the problem. Last year an attempt was made to bring "carrier current" to the UNC Campus. Small transmitters were placed in selected dormitories and received their signal via telephone lines from the WUNC studios. There were, however, two flaws in this system. First, not enough transmitters were available to cover an appreciable percentage of the campus. Second, those which were available were in need of maintenance every three or four days. Thus, a dcision was made in May of 1962 to the effect that WUNC would not return "carrier current" to the air until such time as it could do so effectively.

We at WUNC now interpret "effectively" to mean a relatively large transmitter, centrally located, and with the ability to blanket the entire Carolina Campus. At the present time Swain Hall, the home of WUNC, is in the process of expansion. All personnel who would be qualified to construct the above mentioned transmitter are currently concerned with the new addition to Swain. This does not mean that "carrier current" is dead. It simply means that for the present it is not operable. At such time as our conditions for "effectively" can e met, "carrier current" will make another and more successful appearance at Carolina. We at WUNC do feel that an "effective carrier current" system can be a valuable asset to UNC.

People Run U. S., Not Politicians

To the Editor of The Greensboro Daily News:

There's an old saying which I think describes last week's political upheaval quite succinctly—it goes "The mills of the gods grind slowly but they grind exceedingly fine."

Were it a laughing matter, I could find the innocent air of bewilderment and face-saving rationalizations of the politicians (and their friends in the news media) an amusing thing. While they grab at straws for excuses and try to put the blame on everyone but themselves, the truth grins down at them like Alice's cheshire cat.

A long time ago this country was founded by a group of independent souls who had no use for dictatorial kings or taxation without representation. They established a government by and for we the people and "we the people" lumbered slowly to its collective feet and made it clear that this was still a democracy last Tuesday.

In my Grandmother's parlance, politicians the country over, and particularly here in Guilford, were given their "come-uppance." They were reminded quite emphatically that they are after all, public servants, just that and no more. They were told (if they had ears to hear) that as public servants their growing arrogance, contempt and disdain for we the people was a distasteful thing. They were shown (if they had the eyes to see) that we the people intend to be listened to with respct, will not be ignored, dictated to, bullied or stepped on.

I firmly believe that the public is tired of being treated like a country cousin, tired of having its sincere and thoughtful requests ignored or tossed lightly aside, tired of having to lower itself to the point of begging for the things it needs and feels its taxes should be paying for.

I hope that the politicians, Republicans and Democrats alike, will heed well the lesson spelled out for them on Nov. 6, 1962 and remember that they are a part of "we the people" and not the royal family of America nor its gods.

Mrs. Wilson P. Byrd
Greensboro.

Tetlow, Justice Letters Welcome

To the Editors:

"And what to my wondering eyes should appear but" two exceptional letters to the editor on the same day, not a single asinine column from the political observers who sit in Harry's much of the time and peer out at the world on rare occasions, and Chuck Wrye breaking with recent DTH policy and writing pertinent and remarkably slanderless editorials.

I was especially gratified to see John's letter "Man's Last Winter?" and hope it serves as a reminder that we are all involved in a dangerous game of brinkmanship and perhaps the time has come for all of us to take a step away from the edge of the cliff.

Tim's rather astute criticism of Henry Mayer was well deserved and the only thing that surprised me was why Tim let J. C. off the hook. A man like Nixon does not deserve any sympathy, although he certainly does not deserve the slander of our two "band-wagoning" pseudo news men.

Again accolades to the DTH for its most enlightening Thursday morning November 15th. The DTH should encourage more of the Justices and Tetlows to be heard and in this manner it could put a stop to the political pen-waggins which defile and make a mockery of Editorial Freedom.

—Joe Deutsch

Yes, Virginia . . .

Dear Editor:

I am 24 years old.

Some of my little friends say there is no Otelia Connor.

Papa says "if you see it in the DTH it's so."

Please tell me the truth: is there an Otelia Connor?

Chapel Hill— Place for Purpose

(Eds' Note: Time Magazine calls UNC "the conscience of North Carolina and the most enlightened state campus in the South."

In the Nov. 16th issue of the weekly newsmagazine, the University at Chapel Hill is featured in the education section as the institution of higher learning to attend "for a man with a purpose."

An aerial photograph of the central campus at Chapel Hill is displayed on page 42 of Time. "Beauty and freedom" is a subhead on comment about the natural loveliness of the landscape and the tradition of freedom.

The complete article in Time Magazine is as follows:)

A PLACE FOR PURPOSE

At 40, Chief Machinist's Mate Richard McKenna was the very model of a sea-going sailor: he had joined the Navy during the Depression, served 22 years on everything from a river gunboat in China to a destroyer off Korea. In 1953 McKenna suddenly deep-sixed the old salt image. Stumbling on "Walden," he felt that his mind had been " in a deep freeze," decided to retire and become a writer. An old skipper charted his new course: go to the University of North Carolina, a good place for "a man with a purpose."

In 2½ years at Chapel Hill, Sailor McKenna sped through 40 courses in science, literature and anthropology, made straight A's and Phi Beta Kappa. He stayed on after graduation in 1956, married a university librarian ("for my complete set of Wordsworth," she murmurs), and toiled at a first novel about the 1925 revolution in China. The book, called "The Sand Pebbles," has just become the $10,000 Harper Prize novel of 1962, is a Book-of-the-Month choice for January, and has been bought by Hollywood for a minimum of $200,000.

In a sense, McKenna has only done what comes naturally at North Carolina, the first (1795) state university to open its doors. Chapel Hill boasts "something in the air" that inspires purpose. In part, the spur is a natural beauty: a town built around a tree-shaded oasis of ivied Georgian buildings on 552 acres. Alumnus Thomas Wolfe ('20) fondly described "Pulpit Hill' in "Look Homeward, Angel" as "a provincial outpost of great Rome: the wilderness crept up to it like a beast."

The outpost has long subdued the beast with a Jeffersonian blend of what its citizens call "small town living and cosmopolitan thinking." Except for the five years that carpetbaggers closed it after the Civil War, the university has forged a freedom that makes it the conscience of North Carolina and the most enlightened state campus in the South.

Before World War I, the university launched the South's first great college extension service, which in turn inspired good highways, school libraries, medical schools, community drama and the North Carolina Symphony. The Institute for Research in Social problems helped spur TVA. The Institute of Government trains state and local officials at every level—judges, jailers, sheriffs, tax collectors. Spurning political interference, North Carolina desegregated its graduate schools in 1951 and admitted Negro undergraduates in 1954. Last year Julius L. Chambers, the Negro son of an auto mechanic, scored the law school's highest grades, was made editor of the "North Carolina Law Review."

Whiskey & Writers

Chapel Hill is the sort of town where last year the P.T.A. "came out for whiskey"—that is, using state liquor stores to support public schools. It values variety of opinion. It tolerates white students who join Negro sit-in pickets, and it tolerates W. C. George, a retired medical professor who recently earned a $3,000 fee from Alabama with a study "proving" the biological inferiority of Negroes. It is rightly proud of such alumni as President James K. Polk (1818), and wryly proud of such graduates as the late swindler Gaston B. Means, described by Historian Archibald Henderson as "the most able, ingenious and imaginative criminal of the age."

Such tolerance, and a first-class library, have long made Chapel Hill a haven for writers. While alumni range from Tom Wolfe to Columnist Robert Ruark, other writers choose Chapel Hill as an inspiring place to live. The late novelist James Street ("Tap Roots") wrote, farmed and battled there for civil rights. So now does Pulitzer Prizewinning Playwright Paul Green ("In Abraham's Bosom"). Fighting just as hard in another cause—to save Chapel Hill's trees from builders' buzz saws—is arboreal Novelist Betty Smith ("A Tree Grows in Brooklyn").

Work to Do.

Amid its blessings, Chapel Hill recently got a reminder from Basil Jones, a Negro janitor at the university, that it still has work to do. Dismayed that some of his fellow janitors could not even sign their paychecks, Jones hit the faculty with the hard fact that North Carolina is the nation's sixth most illiterate state. Jones organized a remarkable adult education program, stressing the three R's, science, government, health and humanities. University scholars quickly donated films, books and lectures. It seemed to prove once again that Chapel Hill is the right place for "a man with a purpose."

Take Books Home at Thanksgiving

You may be no thing of beauty on the campus, but to the kid brother or sister, you're a big shot. Take them home a book and you'll be next best thing to Santa!

The family? They'll stand a little butter, too. A Thanksgiving book from the Intimate will show them that you care. Might pay big dividends one day.

Then there's that cute chick-a-biddy whose eyes get big when you're around. Take her home a copy of L'Amour or This is My Beloved, and prepare for the best, chum, prepare for the best. In short, a book at Thanksgiving can lay the foundation for a truly Merry Christmas!

COMMITTEES: AN AGONIZING RE-APPRAISAL

To those of you who stay out of your student government because you believe the committee system is just an excuse for inaction, let me cite an example to prove that a committee, properly led and directed, can be a great force for good.

Last week the Student Council met at the Duluth College of Veterinary Medicine and Belles Lettres to discuss purchasing a new doormat for the students union. It was, I assure you, a desperate problem because Sherwin K. Sigafoos, janitor of the students union, threatened flatly to quit unless a new doormat was installed immediately. "I'm sick and tired of mopping that dirty old floor," said Mr. Sigafoos, sobbing convulsively. (Mr. Sigafoos, once a jolly outgoing sort, has been crying almost steadily since the recent death of his pet wart hog who had been his constant companion for 22 years. Actually, Mr. Sigafoos is much better off without the wart hog, who tusked him viciously at least once a day, but a companionship of 22 years is, I suppose, not lightly relinquished. The college tried to give Mr. Sigafoos a new wart hog—a frisky little fellow with floppy ears and a waggly tail—but Mr. Sigafoos only turned his back and cried the harder.)

He only turned his back and cried the harder

But I digress. The Student Council met, discussed the doormat for eight or ten hours, and then referred it to a committee. There were some who scoffed then and said nothing would ever be heard of the doormat again, but they reckoned without Invictus Millstone.

Invictus Millstone, chairman of the doormat committee, was a man of action—lithe and lean and keen and, naturally, a smoker of Marlboro Cigarettes. Why do I say "naturally"? Because, dear friends, active men and women don't have time to brood and bumble about their cigarettes. They need to be certain. They must have perfect confidence that each time they light up they will get the same gratifying flavor, the same Selectrate filter, the same soft soft-pack, the same flip top flip-top box. In brief, dear friends, they need to be sure it's Marlboro—for if ever a smoke was true and trusty, it's Marlboro. Get some soon. Get matches too, because true and trusty though Marlboros are, your pleasure will be somewhat limited unless you light them.

Well sir, Invictus Millstone chaired his doormat committee with such vigor and dispatch that when the Student Council met only one week later, he was able to rise and deliver the following recommendations:

1. That the college build new schools of botany, hydraulic engineering, tropical medicine, Indo-Germanic languages, and millinery.
2. That the college drop football, put a roof on the stadium, and turn it into a low-cost housing project for married students.
3. That the college raise faculty salaries by $5000 per year across the board.
4. That the college secede from the United States.
5. That the question of a doormat for the students union be referred to a subcommittee.

So let us hear no more defeatist talk about the committee system. It can be made to work!

Tar Heels, Irish Play Today

TAR HEEL Sportscope

By Ed Dupree

It isn't often that the nation's top-ranked football team loses, 37-6, but it happened last week. Wisconsin really picked 'em up and layed 'em down against Northwestern's Wildcats. It was also a rarity in that I hit on an upset prediction.

But the other half of my double upset picks wasn't the same story. Alabama poured 23 points across the goal line in only seven minutes and came from behind, topping Miami, 36-3.

A .750 prediction week brought the season's percentage up to .718—125 correct and 49 wrong. The football season is fading away, but there's still time left for bowl-minded teams to get butchered and for traditional rivals to match forces. Anything can happen.

North Carolina's Tar Heels have another big assignment. This time Notre Dame is the foe as Jim Hickey's men make their third showing in the mid west.

The Fighting Irish have looked impressive against Navy and Pitt. Their 3-4 record means nothing as they've lost four games to Big Ten teams. And they have the advantage of playing in Notre Dame Stadium.

Daryle Lamonica might also remember a 12-7 loss to UNC in Chapel Hill two years ago. Carolina's Junior Edge and Lamonica should put on quite an offensive display. NOTRE DAME 36, UNC 17.

Duke's quest for the Atlantic Coast Conference title will not be stopped by Wake Forest, although the Devils might be looking ahead to next week. DUKE 35, WAKE FOREST 7.

The Clemson-Maryland contest is always a dilly. Last year Maryland won, 24-21. The Terps are even stronger this year and the game's being played in College Park. MARYLAND 21, CLEMSON 14.

The week's big intersectional contest is on the west coast where Southern California seeks its eighth straight win. The Trojans will get it. SOUTHERN CAL 27, NAVY 13.

Alabama journeys to Atlanta for a big Southeastern Conference engagement with Georgia Tech. The Tide showed its stuff last week. ALABAMA 17, GEORGIA TECH 10.

In the Southwest Conference Arkansas is still looking for the league crown, or at least a share. The Razorbacks shouldn't have trouble with SMU. ARKANSAS 22, SMU 7.

But the Southwestern leader, Texas, might have a rough time. A hunch says TEXAS CHRISTIAN 13, TEXAS 7.

A surprisingly strong Florida State team and Florida might stage the best game of the day. The Seminoles pulled a tie last year, but the Gators have the edge this time. FLORIDA 10, FSU 7.

And Army should be the victor over Pitt now that the Cadets bowl hopes have been shattered. ARMY 20, PITT 8.

CALIFORNIA 21, KANSAS 16. An upset. The Golden Bears avenge a 53-7 loss last year.

AUBURN 10, GEORGIA 0. The Tigers are still smarting from the upset defeat to Florida, and they'll take it out on Georgia.

PENN STATE 27, HOLY CROSS 6. Still the best team in the east.

WISCONSIN 21, ILLINOIS 0. The Illini start a new losing streak.

WASHINGTON 23, UCLA 14. But it could be a romp.

MISSISSIPPI 17, TENNESSEE 0. Number eight for Ole Miss.

LSU 7, MISSISSIPPI STATE 3. The Bayou Bengals specialize in close games.

NORTHWESTERN 28, MICHIGAN STATE 20. Knocked off the top rung . . . no more pressure.

RICE 20, TEXAS A & M 0. You could bet Yankee Stadium on this one.

OHIO STATE 28, OREGON 23. But only because the Buckeyes are at home.

NEBRASKA 21, OKLAHOMA STATE 7. The Okies won't pull two upsets in a row.

OKLAHOMA 21, MISSOURI 14. Wilkinson's men are on the move.

IOWA 20, MICHIGAN 17. A close Big Ten battle.

MINNESOTA 14, PURDUE 7. Defense makes the difference.

IOWA STATE 21, KANSAS STATE 0. State your case.

Rain Threatens Passing Game

North Carolina's Tar Heels are in the mid west for the third time this season, seeking their first victory in Notre Dame Stadium.

Kickoff time for the intersectional contest is 1:30. The Irish have yet to lose an intersectional game, while the Tar Heels have yet to win one.

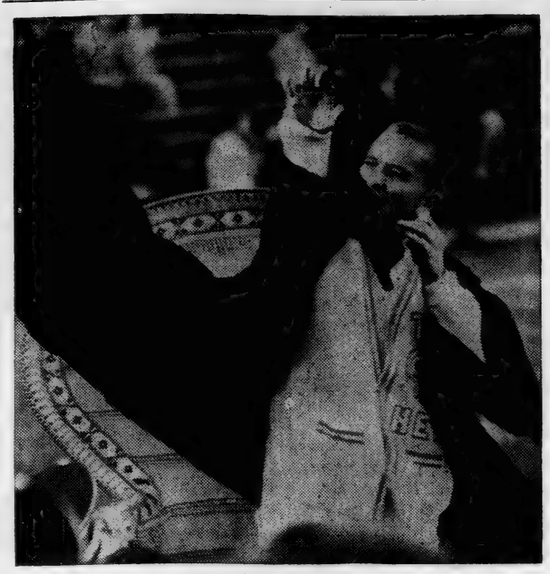
Notre Dame, coached by Joe Kuharich, holds victories over Oklahoma, Navy and Pitt and an over-all 3-4 record. Jim Hickey's Chapel Hillians are 3-5, with Atlantic Coast Conference triumphs over South Carolina, Wake Forest, and Virginia.

The Notre Dame-North Carolina rivalry began in 1949 when the Fighting Irish trounced the southerners, 42-6. The 1949 Tar Heels went on to the Cotton Bowl.

It wasn't until 1960, after dropping ten in a row to the men from South Bend, that UNC won a game. And that 12-7 Tar Heel victory gives the Indianans the revenge motive for the first time in the series. The teams did not meet last year.

Statistics imply that a lot of passes will be thrown in the 12th game of the series, but the weatherman may have other ideas. It was raining in South Bend Friday afternoon.

The passers are Carolina's Junior Edge and Notre Dame's Daryle Lamonica. Edge has completed 83 of 144 passes and Lamonica has hit his man on 44 of 76 attempts. Lamonica has a slight percentage lead, .579 to .577.



On the other end of the aerial tosses, Bob Lacey and Jim Kelly are the dazzlers. UNC's Lacey has caught 35 passes for 474 yards. Kelly has hauled in 28 for 363 yards.

Defensively the Irish are led by center Ed Hoerster, guard Bob Lehmann, and backs Frank Budka and Gerry Gray.

On defense the Tar Heels can counter with center Joe Craver, tackle Vic Esposito, ends Chris Hanburger and Frank Gallagher and backs Dave Braine and Tommy Ward.

UNC Students 'Behind' Team

North Carolina students will be behind their team today when the Tar Heel footballers play at Notre Dame, Indiana.

The cheers of Carolina students will be piped from the Tin Can by radio-loop broadcast to speakers located behind the UNC bench in Notre Dame Stadium, so the students will literally be behind the team.

Game time is 1:30 p.m., but UNC cheerleaders have a full afternoon planned for Tar Heel fans. Lee Ferrell's combo will start things off at 1:00 and keep things hopping until game time.

Then, on a mock football field over an extensive loud speaker system, students can follow the progress of the game.

At halftime the combo will take over again.

Refreshments will also be sold wholesale by the cheerleaders.

This "behind our team" plan has been used before, but never in the Atlantic Coast Conference. A big turnout is expected and a success could lead to more of the same thing next year.

Carolina Booters Rip Duke's Devils By 1-0

By MARTIN KRUMING

The sweet smell of success permeated Carolina's varsity soccer squad yesterday afternoon after they had whitewashed a fighting Duke team, 1-0, in Durham.

"I never thought it would hold up," remarked inside left Frank Lankford in the locker room. He was referring to the goal he scored with only 40 seconds gone in the initial period.

The Tar Heels took the opening kickoff and moved the ball deep into Duke's defensive territory. Cutting from left to right, Lankford swept the ball past one defender and drilled a liner into the upper left hand corner from 20 yards out. Bobo Mueller, the Blue Devil cager, didn't move an inch.

Play battled back and forth for the remainder of the half with Carolina frequently fighting to clear the ball out of its defensive zone.

Duke's forward line, spearheaded by center forward Dean Ross, could not find the target all afternoon. Finally, they began to press in the third period but sophomore goalie Buddy Siegel was always Johnny-on-the-spot.

Perhaps the key figure in yesterday's victory was Siegel. All afternoon the alert cager would come charging out of the nets to dampen any Blue Devil scoring threat. Credited with 15 saves, Siegel clearly showed why he is one of the top goalies in the ACC.

From the opening whistle, the Tar Heels played the type of soccer head coach Marvin Allen has been stressing all season. The passes were accurate and the tackling was clean. "It was a fine team effort," he said.

Yesterday Allen initiated an offense never used this season. At several points during the game he sent in a complete new forward line and directed the team to fall into a 4-2-4 pattern. This put four up front, two in the halfback line and four in the fullback slot. Ordinarily Allen plays a 5-2-3 offense.

"This game will depend a lot on whether we have a good season or not," commented Allen in the huddle before the opening kickoff.

Going into the contest Carolina and Duke had identical 2-1 ACC records with victories over State and Virginia. They both lost to the conference champion, Maryland.

Seniors Herman Prakke, Jimmy Reston and Bobby Kepner all turned in fine performances in their final game as Tar Heels. Co-captain Bill Snyder was his usual bull-like self at center fullback while the play of juniors Steve Painter and Charlie "Neck" Battle was sparkling all afternoon.

Not since 1958 had a Tar Heel squad defeated a Blue Devil team.

Carolina emerged from the season with a 7-2 record and a second place standing in the ACC.

Cheerleading by Remote Control

While the Carolina football team was far away at Notre Dame yesterday, their student followers massed at the Tin Can to root for them. The sounds of the cheering were sent to the stadium by telephone. Above, students follow the progress of the game on a board and enjoy the fun as the Tar Heels take the lead. But right, the lead has melted and so have the smiles.

Military Is Warned By Communists

MOSCOW (UPI) — The Soviet first deputy defense minister, Marshall Vasility Chuykov reminded the Red Army Saturday the Communist Party still is its real boss.

Western observers speculated that reaffirmation of the party's guiding role may have been intended to head off any possible criticism in the armed forces of the Soviet decision to withdraw from Cuba.

Some observers also interpreted it as an exhortation against possible second-rate party leadership within the army.

Marshal Chuykov's reminder was printed in an article in the Soviet military newspaper Red Star as delegates from throughout Russia streamed into Moscow for the Communist Party Central Committee meeting plenum scheduled to open in Moscow Monday.

The plenum is expected to concentrate on ways and means of increasing the efficiency of the nation's agriculture and industry. But it was believed possible Premier Nikita Khrushchev might report to the Central Committee in private on the current situation with regard to Cuba, Berlin and the Chinese-Indian conflict.

Marshal Chuykov's article indicated that the diminishing of the party's role in directing the armed forces was a Stalinist error.

He criticized military histories written during Stalin's rule for not fully telling about the leading role of the party and its Central Committee in guiding the armed forces.

Chuykov said the party's role in these histories was merely hinted at while Stalin's personal hand in organizing and directing the armed forces was highly praised.

"Even during the cult of personality the party acted as a great organizing and mobilizing force, and following the ideas and directions of Lenin, the party directed all affairs of the Soviet armed forces," Chuykov wrote.

Seven Point Lead Fails To Hold Up

By CURRY KIRKPATRICK

SOUTH BEND, Ind. — An interception of a thrown pass is always an exciting thing to watch but yesterday it turned out to be a heartbreaking experience for the football party of North Carolina.

Ahead 7-0 at the half and seemingly in control of the situation, Carolina saw its upset hopes go up in smoke as the Fighting Irish of Notre Dame manipulated the interception into a tremendous offensive weapon and crushed the Tar Heels, 21-7.

Tom MacDonald, a 172-pound junior from Downey, Calif., acted as the main executioner in the Notre Dame victory as he intercepted three passes, two of which spelled destruction for North Carolina. With about five minutes left in the third quarter and UNC seemingly safe with its 7-0 lead, MacDonald speared a Junior Edge pass on the Carolina 42.

Four minutes later, the Tar Heels were quickly, and as it turned out, hopelessly beaten.

MacDonald's interception (his second of the day) started the Irish on an eight-play drive into touchdown country. Don Hogan and Joe Ferrell, two strong, swift sophomores, alternated in carrying the ball and with 3:31 left in the third period, Ferrell's one-yard burst hit paydirt. Ed Rutkowski's kick was good, and the contest was all even.

Carolina could not have imagined what was to come. As soon as the Tar Heels received the kickoff, Edge started throwing again.

But MacDonald—not Bob Lacey—came to be the UNC quarterback's favorite target on this cold, miserable day, and the Irish defensive back again intercepted, this time on Carolina's own 20-yard line.

He ran his acquired possession down to the nine. From there it was quick and it hurt. After two rushes up the middle, Ferrell again got the call. He dashed six yards for the lead points.

With the third quarter 32 seconds from completion, Rutkowski again kicked good, the score was 14-7, and the Tar Heels were as dead as the proverbial doornail.

Notre Dame was not through, however. Adding insult to injury, the Irish again stopped a UNC drive by once more intercepting an Edge forward pass.

This time, the interception was carried out by one Gerry Gray, who hadn't even been in the ball game in the first half. Gray caught Edge's aerial at his own 13, and raced 16 yards to the Notre Dame 29. From here, it took the Irish five plays to add on to their victory.

The big gainer was a 59-yard scamper up the middle by Hogan. Carolina's fine sophomore defensive back, Hank Barden, dived at Hogan, stopping him on the UNC five. Two plays later, ND quarterback Daryle Lamonica sneaked over from the one. Rutkowski was true a third straight time and that was all she wrote.

But for the Tar Heels, it could have been, would have been, different. Carolina played perhaps its finest football of the year in the first quarter, as the Tar Heels practiced ball control with the precision of professionals. Both teams were unsuccessful in their first series of downs, with Edge's tre-

Dook Parade To Include 25 Floats

Eight Carolina co-eds and 35 colorful floats highlight the 1962 Beat Dook parade beginning at 3 p.m. Tuesday afternoon in front of Woollen Gym.

Sponsored by Pi Kappa Alpha fraternity, the parade will include Carolina ROTC units, marching bands from the area, and the Beat Dook queen with her court of four.

PIKA dream girl Beth Walker will lead this parade preliminary to the Dook-Carolina clash in Saturday afternoon. In addition, Jean Spears, last year's Beat Dook queen, and Pat Hall, the 1963 Yack queen, are featured. All three are from Pi Beta Phi sorority.

In order to stir up some curiosity, the 1963 Beat Dook Queen has not been announced. The five finalists include Sarah Broadhurst, a Chi Omega sponsored by Phi Gamma Delta; Betsy Caron, a Kappa Kappa Gamma sponsored by Craige; Sophia Pike, a Chi Omega sponsored by Sigma Alpha Epsilon; Dana Smith, a Delta Delta Delta sponsored by Kappa Alpha; and Sherry Stone, a Kappa Delta sponsored by Kappa Delta.

Judges for the contest are Mrs. Alexander of the Dean of Women's office, Dr. James Dimmick of the History Department and Dr. Robert Voitle of the English Department.

Starting at Woollen Gym, the parade will proceed to Spencer Dorm and pass through Chapel Hill. Turning left on Columbia Street and advancing to Cameron Ave., it will pass by South Building. The final stage travels along Raleigh Street before returning to Woollen Gym.

Originated almost 15 years ago, the Beat Dook parade has grown in popularity and attracted huge crowds at all spots along the route. The PiKA's have always sponsored it.

STUDENT PLANNERS

There will be a meeting of the International Students' Board's Seminar Planning Committee on Monday at 2 p.m. in the YMCA.

Trustee Proposal Found Popular

Student leaders at State and WC reported yesterday that their students have mixed, but generally favorable, feelings toward the trustee proposal to unify the Greater University.

State College objects strongly to changing its name to "The University of North Carolina at Raleigh." Students there prefer the name "North Carolina State University."

Signs have plastered the State campus since the proposal, with slogans such as "Alumni, do you want your name changed?" and "Keep the name N. C. State."

"State students are happy about the liberal arts major, however," said Mike Lea, editor of the college newspaper, the Technician. "This is something we've been pushing for years. He have a very good liberal arts faculty, most of them Ph.D.'s especially in the English Department.

"But we're unhappy as hell about changing the name," he said. "It's sort of like UNC being called Duke University or something.

"We do need a closer academic tie between the schools," the editor continued. "Neither school is complete by itself, even though some State students say we don't need Carolina. Some feel that State is more academically respectable."

Lea thinks closer cooperation of the faculties of the schools will be a good result of the proposed change.

Asked to comment on a possible loss of student and school identity in such an expanded system, Lea answered:

"We're not worried about the size too much. We have considered ourself a University for a long time. State is already composed of cliques, like the agriculture students or the School of Design. And about a third of the students are married. They don't particularly want to be students, they just want to get an education."

So we're not very worried about losing any traditions, we're just worried about the name."

Some WC girls, on the other hand, don't want to give up their traditions in a female institution.

"Generally the student body is saying, "Oh, no!" before they consider the facts," said Carole Furey, president of the student body at WC.

"But I think most are willing to listen to the facts, and rationally we're in favor of becoming a co-educational school. The "Oh, no!" is just an emotional reaction."

"North Carolina and the University cannot stand still," Miss Furey said. "We do have to face problems rationally. We want to keep the high standards we have."

A different view of the WC situation came from Dorothy Davis, Chairman of the Judicial Board there. She said the student body is mostly against the proposal and citetd one opinion that 85 to 90 per cent of the girls are opposed to co-educational status for WC.

"I personally think there is a very definite place for specialized educational institutions for girls," she said. "But the proposed changes would afford advantages, such as a better faculty, and having full status rather than being third-rate in the system."

Frosh Select President In Tuesday Vote

Runoff elections for president of the freshman class will be held Tuesday from 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. Only freshmen are eligible to vote.

Jack Harrell (SP candidate) has proposed a platform of greater class unity and inter-class cooperation through an inter-class council. He proposes greater emphasis and information on the Freshman Honors Program and advanced classes. He stresses intramurals participation and improved social life for freshman dorm students.

Earl Johnson (UP candidate), has proposed greater emphasis on freshman class financial projects. He presents ideas for better social life including a freshman weekend with a freshman queen, dances and contests. He suggests class-sponsored tutoring and review sessions, and a campus quarterly to include information for freshmen.

Five polls will be open Tuesday. Avery, Parker, and Teague freshmen will vote in Parker; Old East freshmen in Gerrard Hall; Conner freshmen in Winston; freshmen in Battle-Vance-Pettigrew, Old West, Alderman, McIver, East Cobb, West Cobb, Whitehead, and Town Districts will vote either in Gerrard Hall or Graham Memorial.

Two Students Struck By Car

Two students were struck and injured while crossing East Franklin Street near the University Service Plants offices Saturday night about 7 p.m.

The pair, identified as Iris Waltmire of Charleston, S. C., a student at Peace College in Raleigh, and Larry Lee, also of Charleston, a student at the University, sustained undetermined injuries as they attempted to cross from the north side of Franklin.

According to the driver of the automobile which struck them, Princhas Nieldsdevere, Jr., he was driving east at the time of the accident and did not see the pair until they suddenly darted in front of him. Nieldsdevere said that he was travelling at low speed at the time, but did not think he could have avoided striking the couple.

English Dept. Considering Artist Idea

According to Jessie Rehder, creative writing instructor in the English Department, student interest has moved the department into taking action which may result in bringing an Artist-in-Residence to Carolina for the coming year.

Miss Rehder said that she plans to make a trip to New York next week to try to determine what promising young writers might be available for the program.

Dr. George Harper, chairman of the English Department, refused to make any comment about the department's plans except that there has been considerable interest shown by students, and that be hopes to discuss the proposal further with Administrative heads.

The student "Artist-in-Residence" Committee recommended three authors whom they would consider desirable James Baldwin, William Styron, and Flannery O'Connor. Miss Rehder said, however, that there was little chance that any of them would fill the post.

She said that she hoped to be able to give more definite information in the near future.

Planetarium Gives Special Program

Swarthmore Kap Sigs On Suspension

Chapter Blames Break On Policy Of Admitting Negro

By Collegiate Press Service

SWARTHMORE, Pa. — The Swarthmore chapter of Kappa Sigma fraternity announced this week its national ogranization had officially suspended the local, effective Nov. 7.

The national's reasoning was given as "attempting to involve other chapters in organizing to defy the national's basic principles, and failure to maintain standards of scholarship."

The Swarthmore college chapter attributed the suspension to its recent efforts "to change the unwritten discriminatory policy of the national fraternity." The local released a lengthy statement explaining its position to the Swarthmore Phoenix at the beginning of the week.

The Swarthmore local said that at the conclave students present asked the national treasurer of the fraternity what the national's position was concerning the pledging of Jews and Negroes. He stated that Jewish members were "frowned upon" and "any chapter which bid a Negro would be expelled" they said. The Swarthmore chapter presently has three Jewish brothers, no non-whites.

At the national biennial conclave in 1961, the fraternity readmitted a chapter previously expelled for pledging an Oriental—on condition that it would refrain from bidding non-whites in the future, a Swarthmore spokesman said.

GOLDWATER FAVORS RED SPEAKERS

FLAGSTAFF, Ariz. — Senator Barry Goldwater, in an interview given to the Arizona State College Lumberjack last week, stated that he "very definitely approved" of allowing Communist speakers on college campuses for speaking engagements.

The senator said that he felt it to be the best way for students to get the full story of Communism and other political ideaologies. He also endorsed courses teaching ideaology, the Lumberjack related.

Goldwater also mentioned his recent clash with University of Colorado president Quigg Newton, saying the issue was not one of freedom of the press, but one of the senator's personal opinions on the capability of the college president.

The senator held that Newton's political background (former Democratic mayor of Denver) did not qualify him for his post as university president.

HARVARD, CORPS PART

CAMBRIDGE, Mass. — The Peace Corps and Harvard University had a "friendly disagreement" last week, and Harvard withdrew from a teacher training program for Corps volunteers going to Nigeria.

A Harvard official explained that Harvard feels that the teachers should get part of their training in Nigeria. When Harvard trained a contingent for Nigeria in 1961, the volunteers got part of their training at University College, Ibadan. This year, however, the Corps has changed its policy, to avoid sending partly trained teachers overseas.

Dean John Munro of Harvard College (undergraduate) said Harvard still believes in the ideals of the corps, and Peace Corps officials said the parting was amicable."

Misery Likes Company

Well, it is heartening to see that the DTH is not the only paper in the immediate area that apparently suffers from hurried amateur journalism.

The Raleigh Times, obviously endeavoring to fulfill its obligation to readers in that fair city, felt that many of its readers would be interested in various aspects of the Honor system here at UNC. The Ann Carter case has been brought to the attention of the entire state; the future expansion of the Consolidated University has drawn attention to existing educational units; an the Honor System in Chapel Hill is usually interesting material.

So the Times sent a reporter over to interview some of the administration and to question a few students on their views of the Honor System.

He came by the DTH offices and spoke briefly with the editors. He was told why they felt the system did not work, and why they felt that open trials would benefit the student body.

Then he went home to write the story.

A few days later the Times carried his interview, as part of a series on the Carolina Honor System. The headline, in an obvious attempt to attract readers' attention, read: "UNC Editors Call Honor System Absurd."

The fact of the matter is that the editors did not call the Honor System absurd. They told why they felt it did not work, and they expressed some views on how it might be made to work; they did not "call it absurd."

But the headline certainly drew attention to the article, and it must have been written in a hurry. So we can sympathize with the Times; we make quite a few blunders ourselves. And as previously stated, it is nice to have company. (CW)

We Are Thankful...

As we approach the day of Thanksgiving we feel it appropriate to list a few of our blessings:

We are thankful for the Student Legislature for introducing a source of humor into an otherwise dull existence.

We are thankful for the Yack being an even more confused publication than is the Tar Heel.

We are thankful for the administration for being so shrewd and cagey and "You'll never know until it hits you".

We are thankful for Chapel Hill's weather, so that we can better appreciate the weather everywhere else.

We are thankful for such programs as the Toronto Exchange, to prove that student government doesn't always take itself so deadly serious.

We are thankful for REPORTER, NEW REPUBLIC, and NATIONAL REVIEW magazines for adding some zest to political writings, and for Norman Cousins for telling us about peace.

We are thankful for California.

We are thankful for professors who don't enforce the "No moking" rules in some buildings. (JC)

More On Nixon

With apparent good taste and a bit of experiential wisdom, Mr. Nixon has chosen to remain out of the raging controversy about the appearance of Alger Hiss on American Broadcasting Company's political blunder.

However, we should not immediately attribute Mr. Nixon's silence to lack of concern over the show, "The Political Obituary of Richard Nixon," but perhaps to a momentary state of shock.

What could anyone say after issuing a statement praising TV for keeping the press honest?

About the only significant fact to come out of the whole Nixon affair appears to be: the excitement and thrill felt by those expedient souls who jump on bandwagons is surpassed only by the insane glee felt by those warped souls who jump on dead men's graves. (CW)

Dorms In The Yack

The Yack has agreed to include a dormitory section in this year's annual. It will be similar to the fraternity and sorority sections which have long been an integral part of the Yack.

This is an encouraging sign that more people are recognizing the inherent humanity of dormitory residents and — maybe even letting them into the mainstream of campus life.

Dormitory officers who think they can raise the required $70 for a full page (or $35 for half-page) should contact George Rosental, 120 Craige, 942-6227, before the end of the month. (JC)

NSA President: Communist World Youth Festival Doesn't Have Free Exchange Of Political Ideas

(Eds' note: this report, from Current Magazine's Campus supplement, was written by D. Dennis Shaul, President of the U. S. National Student Association. He was in Helsinki during the World Festival as Director of the Independent Research Service, a group which attempts to present Western non-Communist views at the various Communist festivals.)

Perhaps the most striking thing for anyone attending the World Youth Festival was the universally poor press coverage it received. It was not that the event lacked coverage; rather the coverage given was either inaccurates or irrelevant. In the United States almost all the newspaper stories centered on the riots. From these riots, it was concluded that the festival itself was a failure. Yet anyone who attended realized that the riots were comparatively insignificant and that the Soviet Union gained much from the festival.

In advance of the festival, its sponsors, through the International Preparatory Committee, a front for the World Federation of Democratic Youth and the International Union of Students, claimed that it was to be a truly open, nonpartisan meeting. They even constructed new instruments such as the "Free Tribune" and the "Colloquim on Peace" to indicate a break with the past and a determination to provide a mechanism for the free flow of ideas. They attracted an observer from UNESCO, thus underscoring their contantion that the festival was a meeting in which any group, whatever its political view, could participate. Continually they stressed the many cultural features of the event.

Mechanical Response

Once the festival started, it became apparent that the structural part of the meeting was not only controlled and one-sided, but also emotional and fruitless. The free forum never really became free until after the Soviets had exploded their first nuclear device in the new series on August 5. Up to that point the forum had closely paralleled their other meetings in political content. A series of boring speakers used the festival as a convenient vehicle to voice their oft-repeated cliches about the West, and the United States in particular. The speeches were striking only in that each exceeded the prescribed time limit, and each failed, and seldom even attempted, to voice original political thought.

To dwell on the insignificance of the political meetings of the festival is useful only indirectly, but perhaps very importantly. They had an unreal and mechanical quality about them. They seldom elicited an emotional response even from the faithful. It sometimes seemed as if the Soviets themselves realized that this procedure no longer reaped great results. This may indicate a Soviet willingness to get away from the festival format. It may also indicate the growing sophistication of the student and youth leaders from the developing areas.

Significant Absentees

It may be that the significant absences from this and previous festivals have also convinced the sponsors that many will not buy the "games" and cultural approach to world political questions. For instance, Ghana and Nigeria could not find room on their calendars to attend this or past festivals. The Indian Congress Party sent only a handful of observers as did the United Arab Republic.

Neutrals themselves, during the course of the meeting, indicated their displeasure with its political content. Some did so in the same way the Ceylonese did — by walking out. Others, numerically far greater, did so by staying away totally from any political meetings. Africans especially were critical of the dull and repetitious character of the meetings and avoided them. By the second day, several political discussion groups were nearly empty.

Viewed from the perspective of the political meetings, the festival would in any event seem to be a complete failure. Even had the meetings been characterized by original, thoughtful and convincing speeches from the Soviet position, few if any converts would have been made. There is no need to convert the faithful. The Westerners who were in attendance were not about to be convinced. The true neutrals — few in number at any event — were dedicated to neutralism itself; no other creed would supplant it.

Assuming that the Soviets want something for their money, it is obvious that they expect to get it from sources other than the political meetings. To some extent, they expect to get it from the contact itself — from the ego bolstering and reaffirmation of faith which occurs when individuals dedicated to a common cause get together — a process not dissimilar from what happens at a United States political convention. This process not only bolsters the already dedicated, it spreads an enthusiasm which is infectious, and which the Soviets undoubtedly hope will plant itself in the uncommitted.

If there is a single goal which the sponsors seek at an event like this, it is to present a convincing portrait of a society on the move. Emotional fervor on the part of the dedicated is a necessary prerequisite.

The emphasis on culture, and presentations by highly able cultural groups from Soviet bloc countries, is an important complement to this. The Soviets tried hard to give the impression that because their society is not capitalistic, it is also not materialistic. They presented a picture of a thriving artistic community, and often by word or with implication juxtaposed that to a United States which they painted as materialistic and uncouth. The type of delegate sent from the bloc countries, often an expert in his profession, further strengthened the image they wished to project. The Soviets hoped to use, and did use successfully, informal contact to score their points and get their message across.

Are the Soviets Satisfied?

How can one evaluate the festival by looking only at the ten days themselves? Probably better than half of the delegates from developing areas were given pre and post festival tours. Many were offered scholarships to study in East European universities. Some were taken to special seminars run by the Soviets before and after the festival. Some were probably recruited for active party work, or put into front groups. Many were offered free trips — often their first experience abroad. All of this was not without its impact. Dull political seminars and riots aside, in these areas there were gains for the Soviets.

There were indications, however, that even the Soviets were not altogether happy with the event. For one thing, the costs of past festivals have been estimated at from $30 to $100 million. With results so hard to define and so intangible, the Soviets must wonder whether they are getting all they might out of their money.

Some Soviet remarks, given often as replies to criticism, indicate that the Soviets may want to do away with the festival altogether and replace it with meetings such as the Moscow Youth Forum. Such meetings offer the opportunity for more control and straight politics. They may be more attractive to political types from developing areas who recognize that there is a conflict in the world and who want to talk about it. Thus, the emotional fervor of the festival may very well repel as many as it attracts.

The festival must have been most disappointing to those who came hoping to discuss the conflicts dividing East and West and the developing and developed worlds. The most obvious lesson is that no genuinely worthwhile discussion can occur where one partisan and one partisan alone calls the meeting, selects its agenda, appoints its chairman and controls the speakers.

But there are other conditions which have to be met. One of them is that if political divisions are to be alleviated, they must be recognized, and meetings themselves must start out with political objectives. It is not possible to reach significant new ground when politics hides behind a camouflage of culture. This is not to say that cultural meetings, exchanges, etc. do not have their place; it is rather to state the obvious needs for defining and clarifying goals before meetings are held. One of the more obvious faults of the festival and similar events is that they purport to be a panacea for the ills of world society.

Indirectly this analysis does undercut the thesis that contact in and of itself is beneficial for promoting concord among individuals and therefore alleviates tension. Contact is useful however only if both sides come in a spirit of good will and are willing to look at issues afresh. Even then there is a real danger that the whole exercise will be superficial, that it will become an end in itself, a substitute for the harder-to-obtain meaningful discussion necessary to reach new conclusions. Surely any such contact is conditioned by the atmosphere in which it occurs. The climate cannot be emotional, the time together must be sufficient to allow the parties to probe into issues and arrive at some understanding of one another. Perhaps most important, the objectives must be limited.

The biggest story about the festival was not the slight success or failure that the Soviets experienced; rather it is the fact that this meeting, and others like it, are barriers and obstacles to real understanding among nations. And this is so not because certain democratic values are violated, or because the Soviets have control of it; but rather it is true because this meeting pretends to be a whole series of things which constitutionally it cannot be. It is not a free forum; it is not a place where a dialogue begins which creates new understanding among men. It substitutes superficiality for honest differences, and emotion for intellectual rigor.

The result can only be what the result of the World Youth Festival was: a short interlude of disappointing, boring and, sometimes, irritating speeches punctuated by sometimes pleasant social exchange. The youth of the world deserve something better; the problems of the world demand it.

Grad Condemns Seeger Sponsors

To the Editors:

An issue of the DTH, announcing the forthcoming appearance of Pete Seeger on December 5, has recently come to my attention.

Without disputing the relative merits of Pete Seeger as "a folk-singer of some renown," I would like to admonish the student body to consider the far-reaching implications of the appearance of Mr. Seeger and his sponsorship by the New Left Club. The New Left has openly avowed that a primary purpose for their sponsorship is to gain financial backing for the Student Non-Violent Co-Ordinating Commttee—a student group for non-violent liberal activities.

I hope that students, who might be tempted to view the appearance of Pete Seeger as a harmless affair, worth the price of admission, will consider the left-wing, un-American causes to which the admission proceeds will be applied

With this in mind, I am sure that on December 5 the entertainment will be better and the air a good bit fresher anywhere but in the company of Mr. Seeger and the New Left.

Peace Corpsman Thanks Campus

To the Editors:

Tomorrow (Saturday) marks the end of a ten week period of intensive training I've experienced as a Peace Corps Trainee here. I would like to take this opportunity to express my appreciation to the University of North Carolina for their hospitality and the important role they play in the program. It is with mixed emotions that I will be leaving UNC—sadness caused by thoughts of the wondeful experiences I've had and the newly formed friendships that will be left behind, but happiness with the prospects of new adventures, further growth, and of the service which I will be able to give to the country as an English teacher in Venezuela.

It would be impossible to list all of the people who have worked so tirelessly and sincerely during the training period, so I would like to simply say thank you one and all for the interest and selfless hours you've spent working with us, teaching us, counseling us, socializing with us and in general preparing us for the job ahead.

A special note of thanks to the program head, Dr. Frederico Gil. Without his effective organization, constant leadership and warmth all would have been impossible.

Now things can return to normalcy around Dey Hall, room 301 will await new occupants and everyone can rest for a change!

Muchas gracias, amigos, por todo!

Conservatives Get New Grant

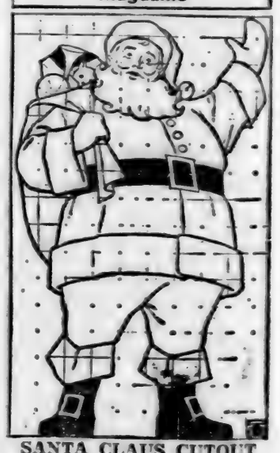
To the Editors:

Of course we are all familiar with the football chant:

Lean to the LEFT; Lean to the right. Stand up; SIT DOWN; Fight, fight, fight.

Today's conservative would reply:

Lean to the right; Lean to the right. Stand up; stand up; Fight, fight, fight.



Speaking of politics in connection with football, that sport relies to some extent on the failure of politics (i.e., war). Can you imagine a game in which the quarterback is not BLITZED? Or a game in which the quarterback does not go for the BOMB?

Of course we'd be just as happy without the source for such colorful terms. Then we'd have to get our terms from elsewhere.

But can you imagine a linebacker checkmating a quarterback

Traditional UNC-Duke Game Climaxes Season Saturday

Methodists Boast Top ACC Record

By ED DUPREE

North Carolina's Tar Heels close out the 1962 football season in Kenan Stadium this Saturday against Duke's powerful, but not feared Blue Devils.

The Dukes warmed up for the traditiontal contest with a 50-0 swamping of Wake Forest yesterday. Jim Hickey's Tar Heels lost a hard-fought contest to Notre Dame, 21-7.

Saturday's game will be the 47th in the series which began in 1888 when the Methodist school was called Trinity. Carolina has won 20, lost 24 and tied three.

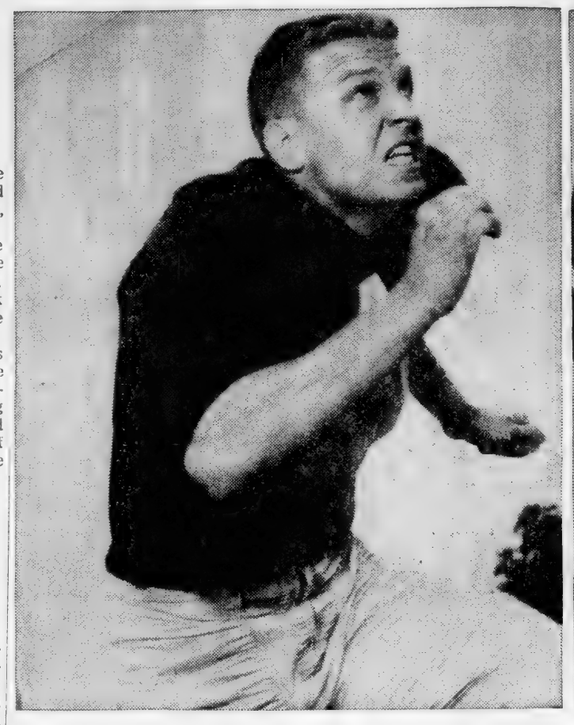
The Blue Devils go into this contest with a 7-2 record and first place in the Atlantic Coast Conference, but UNC, now 3-6, is always a toughie for the Dukes.

Last year the Devils, coached by Bill Murray, won their first game over a Jim Hickey-coached team, 6-3—a battle of three field goals. The year before UNC won 7-6 in Chapel Hill, and in the most remembered game of the rivalry Carolina scored a 50-0 upset in 1959.

Leading the Duke offense have been quarterbacks Walt Rappold and Gil Garner, fullback Mike Curtis, end Pete Widener, and linemen Art Gregory, Jean Berry, and Paul Bengel.

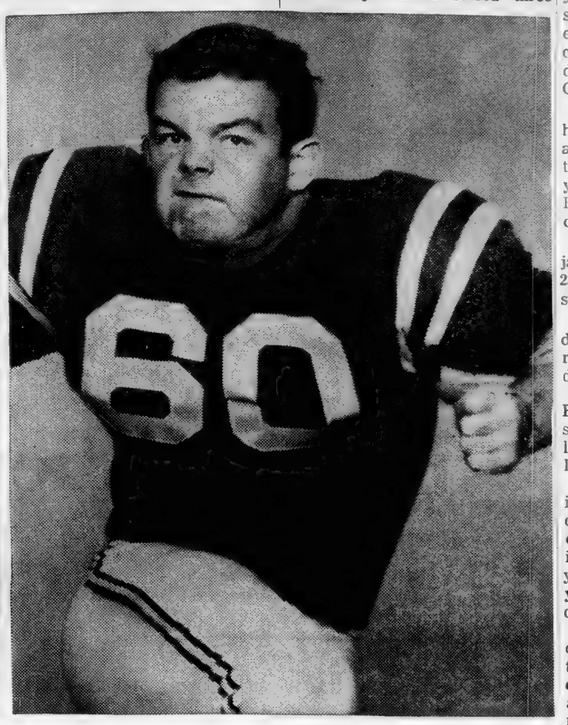
UNC's chief weapon against the Devils should be the Junior Edge to Bob Lacey pass combination. Edge passed the 1,000-yard mark in passing yardage against Notre Dame.

The Tar Heel running game has depended on Ken Willard, the bruising sophomore fullback. Willard was injured in the opening quarter against Notre Dame and didn't play for the remainder of the game. His loss could hurt the Tar Heels.



Clemson Upsets Maryland, 17-14

COLLEGE PARK, Md. (UPI)—Clemson doused Maryland's flickering bowl hopes Saturday by rallying from a 0-14 deficit to upset the favored Terrapins 17-14 on Rod Roger's 23-yard field goal with less than two minutes to play.



It was Tiger Coach Frank Howard' first victory in four years over Maryland's Tom Nugent and Clemson earned it with a savage tackling defense that stopped the Terps' flashier attack cold.

Clemson yielded two touchdowns to Maryland in the second period, the first on Lem Chiaverni's 3-yard buck, climaxing a 77-yard drive and Ernie Arrizi's intercepted pass.

John Hannigan converted both times for a 14-0 lead but that turned out to be Maryland's last moment of glory as the Tigers clawed their way into complete control of the game.

Futrell Sparks Blue Devils In 50-0 Romp Past Wake

WINSTON-SALEM (UPI)—Halfback Billy Futrell scored three touchdowns and set up a fourth yesterday to lead Duke in a 50-0 shellacking of winless Wake Forest. This win put the Blue Devils one step away from an unprecedented third straight Atlantic Coast Conference football crown.

Duke stunned a Wake Forest homecoming crowd of 12,000 with an unrelenting attack which netted seven touchdowns and a 45-yard field goal, kicked by Billy Reynolds who also booted five TD conversions.

The longest of Futrell's three jaunts to the end zone was from 23 yards out. The Blue Devils also scored twice on pass interceptions.

Reynolds, the kicker, hauled down a fourth period aerial and ran 16 yards for the first touchdown of his college career.

Third string sophomore halfback Bill Baird intercepted another and sprinted 52 yards along the sideline for a touchdown two minutes later.

Futrell scored first in the opening period and carried for his other two touchdowns in the third quarter. He set up a fourth tally in the second period with a 58-yard run that ended on the three-yard line when he tripped over one of his blockers.

Two plays later, second-string quarterback Gil Garner finished the job on a plunge from one yard out. Halfback Mark Leggett added another touchdown before intermission on a five-yard run to the end zone that gave Duke a 24-0 halftime lead.

The Duke scoring spree accounted for the most points compiled against the bumbling Deacons since Army racked up 54 points in 1945.

Wake Forest has failed to win in eight previous starts this fall.

Duke, hopeful of a bowl bid, carried a conference mark into the game and needs only to down North Carolina next week to clinch its third straight ACC title.

Wake Forest's deepest penetration in the game was to the Duke 28-yard line in the final period. The Deacons did not pick up a first down until midway in the third quarter and gained only 64 yards rushing to Duke's 251 on the ground.

Bonnie Loving Wins Tennis

Bonnie Loving of Kappa Kappa Gamma has won the Women's Athletic Association tennis championship in a tournament held over the past three weeks.

Miss Loving defeated Nancy Gates, 6-4, 6-4, in the finals. The champion topped Carolyn Powers of Alpha Gamma Delta, 6-2, 6-2, in the semifinals, and Miss Gates beat Vivian Conklin of Kenan Dorm, 6-2, 6-0.

Alpha Gamma Delta defeated Kappa Kappa Gamma and won the sorority division of the WAA volleyball tournament. The Alpha Gams will play the dormitory winner—not yet decided—in the finals Tuesday night at 7:30.

State Defeats UVA, 24-12

RALEIGH (UPI) — North Carolina State's all-junior backfield found its best offensive game of two seasons to wallop Virginia, 24-12, before 16,500 homecoming fans Saturday.

With a little razzle-dazzle and a lot of heads-up ball, the Wolfpack earned its second victory of the year.

Led by the rushing of halfback Joe Scarpati and fullback Pete Falzarano, Coach Earle Edwards' Wolfpack scored touchdowns on two drives of 80 yards in the first half, added two more scores in the third period and then held on to their comfortable margin in the final stanza.

Quarterback Jim Rossi pitched a long pass to halfback Mike Clark, who scampered around Virginia defenders and romped home from 70 yards out. It was the longest play from scrimmage for the Wolfpack this year. Scarpati scored twice, once on a three-yard run to climax an 80-yard drive and again on a 14-yard pass from Rossi.

Falzarano added the other State tally with a three-yard plunge. All of State's efforts for the points after touchdown failed, including once when the Wolfpack spread across the width of the field in an unusual "shotgun" formation.

Irish 21, UNC 7

mendous 57-yard punt and a group of strong defensive rushes keeping the Irish inside their own 20.

From his own end zone Notre Dame's Lamonica was forced to punt. John Flournoy downed it on the ND 40, and the Tar Heels were on their way.

Edge threw a lookin pass to Bob Lacey for 12 yards and a first down. Ken Willard then blasted three straight times and Ron Tuthill once for another first down.

With the ball at the NC 17, Edge's look in to Lacey bounced off the tall end's chest for what seemed to be an aborted attempt, but the alert Willard picked it off in mid-air and ran it down to the five-yard line. From there Willard ran for one, Tuthill for three, and Willard leaped into the end zone for the TD.

Carolina continued to control the ball for the remainder of the period and the half. With Ken Willard out with a leg injury in the first quarter, second-team fullback Eddie Kesler had to carry the brunt of the UNC attack. Kesler carried the ball 14 teams after Willard left the game.

After the touchdown, the Tar Heels again bottled up the Irish and Lamonica punter. The Chapel Hillians then carried on sustained drive of 15 plays, but the last play was an Edge pass which was intercepted by the ever-present MacDonald on the Notre Dame 10.

The Irish were unable to move and Lamonica again had to punt—from his own end zone. Carolina, starting on the Notre Dame 48 drove to the Irish 30. But, on a fourth down situation and three yards to go, Edge was manhandled by Notre Dame end Tom Goberville for a loss of 12 yards.

Notre Dame took over again, but four straight Lamonica passes fell incomplete and UNC went to the dressing room with a 7-0 lead.

Hogan, a 5-11, 182-pounder from Chicago, gained 117 yards in 15 carries to lead the Irish rushing game. For MacDonald the three interceptions brought his season total to eight.

Edge was true on 10 of 22 passes for 95 yards—bringing his season passing yardage to 1,039.

'Bama Streak Ends

ATLANTA (UPI) — The Georgia Tech Yellow Jackets came through with a gritty defense in the final period here Saturday to upset high-ranking Alabama 7-6 and hand the Crimson Tide its first loss in 27 games.

Linebacker Don Toner intercepted a pass with barely a minute left on the clock as the second-ranking Tideman appeared headed toward a cinch score that would have given them their 20th consecutive victory.

A record crowd of 52,971 went crazy as Tech ran out the clock.

University Stores Target Of $28,909 In Bad Checks Since Beginning Of Year

By DONNA FAGG

Renewed interest has been brought to the ageless problem of bad checks by the introduction of a "bad check" bill into the last session of Legislature. The bill would make the writing of a bad check an Honor Council offense.

Tom Shetley, University accountant, noted in a recent interview that he had handled $28,904 in "rubber" checks since June 30. The total includes checks cashed through Lenoir Hall, the Book Exchange, the cashier's office, the Bull's Head Bookshop, the laundry, the electricity and water office and the Monogram Club.

Shetley said, however, that through the efforts of Don Lassiter, student check representative, all except $731 has been collected. That sum is not yet deemed "uncollectable."

The policy of the University in handling checks returned for insufficient funds is first to re-deposit the check, stated Shetley. If the check bounces a second time, the student representative informs the person by letter. Failure to clear the matter up brings a telephone call. If the student ignores this warning, stop orders are placed on his grades.

Shetley noted that stop orders bring quick results. He commented that there was at least one stop order a week placed on someone's grades.

He was "frankly in favor of making it (failure to honor a returned check) an offense that would bring the student before the Honor Council." However, he also said that he was "reluctant to take action that would be put on a student's permanent record."

W. R. Cherry, comptroller of the Bank of Chapel Hill, feels that there are two types of students who bounce checks. There are the "irresponsible students" who fail to take care in balancing their check books and the "borrowers" who knowingly write checks without funds to back them in an effort to obtain money to tide them over a big weekend or for cash to go home.

Because of the number of "borrowers," the Bank of Chapel Hill has initiated an unwritten policy of limiting checks from out-of-town banks to $25 and requiring and ID card with each check.

"Each student is treated as an individual," Cherry stated.

Many of the Chapel Hill merchants have expressed their distress over the situation. One member of the Merchants' Association said that "Our chief complaint is that students make a loan agency out of us. They go off for a weekend after cashing what they know is a bad check. When they come back, they always: 'About that check, it's good now'!"

A restaurant owner estimated that about "12 to 15 bad checks" are taken in every week. It is the larger number of bouncing checks that have led some merchants to charge $1.50 to $2 for every check returned.

How do most of the hard-hit merchants feel about the "bad check" bill?

"I think it would be an asset to merchants and students alike," stated Joe Augustine, clothing store manager.

"I hope that bill passes!" said Mrs. Harry Macklin of Harry's.

William Long, Dean of Men, commented that he has found that it is the irresponsible students who are the repeating offenders in cashing checks without sufficient funds. He urged the merchants to work through the student check commission in these cases.

"The University does not enter the picture except in cases where it is felt that the student is being elusive," he stated.

To alleviate the situation, Long urges each student to have "a personal account in a local bank." He stated that next year the student handbook will carry such recommendations.

"A student should realize how important it is to establish credit and take particular pains with his financial matters," said Dean Long.

Although merchants stated that they were hesitant to take such "drastic moves as swearing out a warrant," nevertheless such warrants are served.

Paul A. Robertson, justice of the peace, was reluctant to state how many bad check cases he handles a month, commenting that there were "too many."

He stated that under the present system, the students "got off with a pill" (prayer for judgment suspended upon payment) and that there should be a more bitter "tonic" to cure these offenders "such as 30 days on the roads."

He blames "parental delinquency, not juvenile delinquency" for the number of cases.

Proposals Still Not Completely Counted Out

NEW DELHI (UPI)—India said Monday parts of the Chinese Communist truce proposal were "unacceptable." However, the proposals were not rejected outright, apparently because India did not wish to disturb the six-day-old cease-fire.

The statement read by a government spokesman was the first official reaction to the Chinese offer although India said earlier it was asking Peking for clarification of several points. The spokesman said the offer still was under study.

The government statement said the Communist proposals that each side withdraw from parts of the disputed border line would give the Chinese 2,000 square miles acquired by force in the Ladakh area of Kashmir since Sept. 8. The spokesman denied the Chinese actually controlled the area of Ladakh where they captured 43 Indian outposts.

In the North East Frontier Agency (NEFA), he said, the Chinese would continue to control vital high ground between the McMahon line and the captured monastery town of Towang. The Indians insist that Towang is 16 miles south of the McMahon line.

More Favorable

The spokesman began the statement by saying there was "a notion" that the Chinese communication of Nov. 21 implied a Chinese proposal "more favorable" to India than the terms proposed earlier by India.

"If so," he said, "China should accept the Indian position." The spokesman said the Communist proposal would call for Indian withdrawal from strongpoints bordering Utter Pradash state in the central section of the border and that they would have to give up Towang permanently. Asked the purpose of the statement, the spokesman said: "I am giving you facts. You can draw your own inferences."

May Reject It

The inference drawn by observers was that India eventually would reject the Communist proposal but not as long as the ceasefire is giving India a chance to build up its shattered border defenses.

Twelve American C-130 transports shuttled war supplies to the front Monday, taking off at 15 minute intervals from New Delhi's Palam Airfield. All returned by nightfall.

Three-Part Series On Latin America Begins Tomorrow

Graham Memorial in cooperation with the department of Political Science will present a trio of Latin American films Nov. 28, Dec. 5 and Dec. 12.

These films, which were chosen by Martin Merson of the Political Science Department and members of his Latin American Studies classes, are regular feature length films which point up various aspects of life in neighboring countries to the South.

"Because of the world situation and the increased desire on the part of the students to learn about Latin America," Merson expressed a desire for showing of this type. GM, in compliance, has scheduled "A Trilogy on Latin American Life".

The first part of the trilogy will be "Dark River", an expose of conditions on Yerba mate plantations in Argentina. This movie has been compared to "Bitter Rice" in subject and treatment. The film was opposed by police censors in Argentina but they were unable to stop its release and its director, Hugo Del Carril, was named best director of the year by the press and the critics.

Other films to be presented will be "The Young and the Damned", a story of Juvenile Delinquency in Mexico City, and "The Forgotten Village", a story by John Steinbeck about life in rural Mexico.

The showings will be at 7 p.m. for the next three Wednesday evenings in Carroll Hall Auditorium.

Harrell Wins Race; New Tiff Develops

Jack Harrell, SP candidate for President of the Freshman Class, won the re-election which his party had demanded. But he may be disqualified when the Elections Board meets again this afternoon to determine whether an illegal candidate's name appeared on the ballot.

The re-election was held by the Elections Board after the board upheld a Student Party charge that Sandy O'Quinn's name was on the ballot when he was not a legal candidate.

Harrell won the re-election by forty-two votes after having lost the first election, but he did not turn in an expense account before the absolute deadline set by Elections Board Law. Therefore, according to the law, he must be disqualified.

In effect, the board is ruling on the same type case as it did after the first election: that a person whose name was on the ballot was not a candidate.

If the Elections Board disqualifies Harrell, the UP candidate, Earl Johnson, the only other candidate in the re-election, will automatically assume the office of President of the Freshman Class.

Women's Council Gives Case To WRC

The Women's Council, last week, dismissed a case against a defendant charged with violation of the Campus Code and referred her to the House Council for returning to her dormitory after closing hours.

The defendant, who pleaded guilty as charged, had gone to Washington for the weekend and had signed out for midnight, Sunday. She said that she had been held up by traffic on her return to Chapel Hill and had called in to notify her dormitory that she would be late.

She arrived at her dorm at 1:05, one hour and five minutes late. According to the rules of the Women's Residence Council, if a girl returns to her residence more than one hour late, she is to be tried by the Women's Council rather than the House Council, which hears cases involving less than one hour.

However, the WRC has another rule applying to the House Council which says that a girl has ten cumulative "late minutes" before she can be tried for coming in after closing hours.

Therefore, the Women's Council said that they would subtract the girl's ten "late minutes" from her charge of returning one hour and five minutes late, thus giving her fifty-five "late minutes" and returning the jurisdiction for the case to the House Council.

Kennedy's Housing Order: Difficult To Implement

Unlike President Truman's famous executive order calling for desegregation of the armed forces, President Kennedy's housing executive order, issued last week, will not be so easy to implement.

"By the stroke of a pen" the President ordered the end of racial discrimination in housing aided, financed or insured by the federal government. This affects not only areas of direct government assistance, such as GI home loans; but also indirect assistance, such as housing loans underwritten by the Federal Housing Administration or the Veterans Administration. The President carefully neglected to include in the order all FDIC banks — which would have made the order much more powerful and far-reaching.

Kennedy had promised to take such action during the 1960 campaign but had held back, primarily because of pressure from Southern Democrats. With the fall elections out of the way and his position in Congress strengthened, Kennedy apparently felt safe in issuing the order.

* * *

Presidential executive orders, by their nature, are tricky political instruments. They must be used carefully but not hesitantly; sensibly but not cowardly.

In issuing his order Kennedy recognized the great problem he faced — which Truman, with his executive order 9981, did not face. Truman was acting within a purely governmental sector. His orders within that sector were ultimate and could not be avoided.

Kennedy is dealing in a predominently "private" sector. No amount of legal interpretations as to how much power the federal government has over housing built with its indirect assistance, is going to greatly reduce the problems to be encountered from the "private" members of this sector. It will take much more than a "stroke of the pen" to bring about any meaningful desegregation of housing in the North as well as the South.

* * *

And this brings us to one of the problems still faced in the application of Truman's armed forces order. One of the major troubles which plague Negroes in the armed forces has been insufficient off-base housing for their families.

The federal government has attempted to place all servicemen's families in living quarters owned by realtors who do not discriminate. At present the Pentagon feels it cannot purge discriminatory realtors off the approved government list because it would mean there would be insufficient housing for the families of white soldiers. This is an area where the Kennedy order should be of benefit. Realtors are hesitant to rent to Negro soldiers for the same reason they are hesitant to rent to all Negroes — because "No one else does it", because it would mean potential isolation within the real estate business, because the realtors are afraid to break with the past and flaunt tradition. If most realtors dealing in public housing do not discriminate, then it will be easier for individual realtors to end discriminatory practices.

* * *

Reaction so far to the order has been mixed. Most real estate men have said the order will not greatly hinder housing construction; a few insist upon the age-old cliche that desegregation will bring on a monumental housing slump. Most realtors have not appeared overly concerned about the effects of the order — and there is a reason for this unconcern.

Realtors know the order will be difficult to enforce. Any real estate man who does not want to rent or sell to a Negro merely will have to devise a technicality—and in a field where there is a labyrinth of complicated credit and mortgage terms, this should not be difficult.

The government will have a hard time setting up any uniform requirements to be met by all persons seeking housing. What this means is that the government might become embroiled in a never-ending series of legal suits brought by Negro housing applicants.

Each case will attempt to prove the Negro's acceptability as a candidate for such-and-such a house or apartment . . . And the cases will follow the example of the school desegregation cases, with each probably being decided individually, no precedents being set, and appeals prolonging the process.

The administration is supposed to release a series of regulations governing public housing practices on Friday. The regulations will have to be very detailed in order to apply to the most probable avoidances of the executive order.

Kennedy also will have to take the initiative in the banks and loan offices, and in the courts if necessary, to let it be known that the nation will not compromise on the basic rights of its citizens. The administration should recognize the difficult position of the realtors, but simultaneously — the realtors must make sincere and immediate moves toward non-discriminatory practices in public housing.

If this is done, perhaps the goals of the President's order can be achieved within a reasonable time. (JC)

Magazine & The Mass

Through personal talks, through letters-to-the-editor, through word of mouth, the campus has spoken as clearly as the campus ever speaks. Many students like the North Carolina Magazine, or at least, thought it had worthy potential. These students were responding to the Editors' "obituary" on the magazine Nov. 16.

In that editorial we said, "If any students did feel the magazine was of potential value, we haven't heard from them." A primary reason for the "obituary" was to "hear" from the students, to elicit some sort of response beyond wordless and oblivious apathy.

"We think the magazine could be made into a worthwhile addition to the university community," we said in that editorial. "We think it could be a high quality humor and satire publication." And we still feel that way.

Some letter writers chastise the editors for litening to adverse student reaction to the magazine — but as elected editors of a student newspaper, we must listen to the students. Even if we do not agree with what appears to be the student consensus, we must listen to it. If we feel our responsibilities as journalists dictate a path other than that desired by many students, we will still take that path. But in questions of the new expenditures of the students' money (as in the North Carolina magazine, which was paid for by DTH advertising surpluses), we feel student opinion to be important.

As matters now stand, it is obvious the student body is divided on the value of the magazine. We believe it has potential — so, a second, and we hope a third and a fourth, issue will be published.

"If You Don't Mind Danger, You Can Serve In One Of Our Cities Here At Home"

Dangers Of Food --And A Solution

By MATT WEISMAN

A foreboding wave of thick thighs, bulging middles, and rounded faces has swept across our campus. The condition has become so marked that Hesident Tom Kennedy has designated the University as a itness disaster area.

During the last few days, several gaunt and pale looking men have been seen prowling through Lenoir and several of the fraternity dining rooms. These men, agents of the Hesident's Youth Lightness committee, have finally come up with a suggested program for loosing those burdensome ounces.

The following low calorie-diet is the first part of a four step program to put the campus back on the map at SAC headquarters, Milwaukee, Wisc. Both the University and Sororities have agreed to adopt the menu on a one month trial basis. Fraternities insist on depleting present supplies before incorporating the menu.

Students Support NC Magazine

Give Mag Chance –Let It Live

To the Editors,

We disagree wholeheartedly with your edit on the N. C. magazine. We think what little of it there was, was goo. You can't solve the need for such a publication by killing it. Let it live and give it a chance.

—Henry and Lucille Perlot

Only Good DTH Deed

To the Editors,

You can't be serious about killing the N. C. Magazine! It is the only worthwhile thing you've done since you've been in office. Wake up and improve the magazine. Don't lie down and die. We thought you two had more guts than that. Use what little brain power you've got and keep the mag going.

—Nicholas Love
Robert Oliver

Keep Up Good Work

To the Editors,

I enjoyed your magazine supplement and hope you will keep it up and enlarge it to include more material. Keep up the good work.

—Jo Ann Block

Mistake To Scuttle Mag

To the Editors:

I think it's a mistake for you to scuttle the N. C. magazine. If the DTH were judged on the same grounds, it wouldn't have lasted one week this year.

—Nat Hemper

Can't Blame On Reaction

To the Editors,

You can not blame the scuttling of the North Carolina Magazine on the lack of favorable student comment. Reading the DTH edit page clearly shows that only people who get really stirred up over something ever bother to voice their comments. So you can not judge student reaction by whether or not the DTH editors — sitting on high — have heard about something. There is plenty that goes on that the DTH never hears about.

You two must have had some other motive in killing the magazine, other than a few adverse comments. But, I for one, think that you have made a mistake. If the Magazine has potential, let's see it. The DTH editors in the past have never paid very much attention to student opinion, so why now? Perhaps because it is your own whim. What ever the reason, stop making excuses and put out a better product next time.

—Randy Archer

No Edits–Just A Humor Mag

To the Editors,

After reading this morning's editorial entitled "An Obituary," I was struck by a very novel idea: namely, that instead of wasting your time in writing a very inane editorial column — where three-quarters of the time you don't know what you're talking about — you should devote your time to putting out a humour and satire magazine.

It takes a great deal of hard work and patience to put out a magazine of this type. Your time and energy might be better spent and appreciated in this avenue of expression.

However, if my novel idea does not appeal to you, then the least you can do is to continue to allow this North Carolina Magazine to publish. From the tone of the editorial, it appears that your decision was based on hearsay and probably quite hasty.

A humour magazine is definitely needed on this campus and I think that the talent to produce it is here. If you were not satisfied with the results of the magazine, you should have done the work for it yourselves. But since the past is gone, devote time in the future to putting out the next issue. Surely, the most ill-advised course of action would be to discontinue the Magazine.

—Barbel Spitzer

Good Word For Merchants

To the Editors:

In regard to your "Merchants" note, I would like to make a brief comment. In spirit you may be right when you say, "Their friendliness stops at the cash register." In fact, I immediately thought of several such Chapel Hill merchants.

First, is it or is it not, in our "American way", the right and privilege of the public to patronize those business establishments whose policies they endorse. I think that it is.

Second, to give credit where credit is due, one clothing store, The Hub, as far as I know, has, over a period of time, not only altered clothing sold, whether on sale or not, but has performed such courtesies as replacing buttons on sports coats sold if they become disconnected within some reasonable period of time.

Thus, I suggest to the dissatisfied public that they 1) seek out merchants whose policies they like, and 2) insist on courtesies they feel due, from other merchants.

Council Made Grave Error

To the Editors,

Re: Lead editorial of Saturday, November 17.

"The most serious aspect of Judge Clark's hearing is that he is basing his view on exactly the same evidence which appeared before the Women's Council.

"There is no new evidence. The handwriting was on the back of the quiz when the council decided to suspend Miss Carter—in fact, the council even considered the handwriting evidence.

"The student who wrote up the Carter trial proceedings told the court she thought 'Mr. Catlin' had been written by the student attorney general. Former Women's Council Chairman Prissy Wyrick said the council had made a handwriting comparison, but apparently had considered it insignificant.

"For the Wake County Superior Court to rule on the same evidence which faced the student council, and to reverse the council's decision, would seem to be a strong blow to Carolina's governmental system. It would open the path for all convicted students to appeal to higher courts, even if the regular appeal avenues (the chancellor, president and faculty) refused the appeal."

Miss Carter claims that she took the original quiz and not the make-up. She offers as proof of this contention that she wrote the name of her instructor (the words "Mr. Catlin") on the back of the quiz questions that she was given.

The Women's Honor Council considered the handwriting evidence and thought that it was insignificant. In Wake County, Miss Wyrick, former chairman of the Women's Council, testified that she had apparently thought the handwriting evidence was too insignificant to be included in the report of the proceedings. The student who wrote up the Carter trial proceedings testified to the same effect. Their testimony was supported by the fact that no mention whatsoever of the handwriting evidence was included in the record of the Council's proceedings against Miss Carter. In fact, Miss Wyrick testified that she had not even given another thought to the handwriting evidence "until today."

It is evident that the Women's Honor Council gave only a passing glance to the most significant piece of evidence in the Carter case. The last sentence in your editorial says: "But if the judge does say 'innocent' the UNC honor councils will be put in a most difficult position—and they will be kept company in this position by the chancellor and the faculty." When such an outstanding error has been made, I certainly hope that your observation is correct.

After having seen and heard Miss Wyrick and the Honor Council reporter give their testimony in the Wake County Court, it is my opinion that they thought—at least at the time of the proceedings against Miss Carter—that they were reaching the correct decision. Whatever their intentions, however, the record they made of the proceedings was a faulty one. Let me add my name to the list of those who are glad that there is a method whereby such a messy situation can at least be brought into the open.

—Vernon Norwood

Why Rebel Against 'Flies'?

To the Editors,

The attack on William Golding's Lord of the Flies by the Greensboro Daily News, which was printed in the Tar Heel, was an inept critique whose author apparently could not decide whether he wished to deprecate the book itself or its current popularity.

I agree in substance with the article's statement of the book's theme: "that even children — 'innocents' — are naturally too bestial to live together." But then he condemns the book as a "categorical judgment upon childish nature," which is a curiously literal interpretation of an allegorical novel. The children, to me, represent humanity at its ideal best. Golding then uses them both as a technical device to deliver his massage more forcefully, through shock, and as symbols of the common lot of all men, of whatever station or age.

The bestiality of the children as described by Golding is a valid development. Anyone who has been a normal child will remember the cruelty often evident in play. Without restriction, such cruelty could quite naturally run rampant, as it does in the novel. There is no reason for either Freud or Thomas Hobbes to cringe.

American students perhaps read this book, not because it is a "literary weejun," but because its message is a reflection of the times in which they live. This is a cynical age where we are all threatened daily with meaningless genocide. If Mr. Golding then expresses a dark opinion of human nature, is it surprising that many people happen to agree with him?

And why, when the editorialist laments the one-sided view of the book, does he then resent the fact that both Salinger and Golding are popular in college circles? Must we read only ambivalent works which express no definite idea, and ourselves all hold the same opinion of it? The writer seems irritated because youth apparently does not wholeheartedly follow the pattern of reading in herds which he feels called upon to condemn.

"Why don't Golding's young readers rebel?" cries the Daily News. Why do they not call Golding a "vile propagandist against their title to the presumption of innocence?" May I add two more questions? Why should we rebel against Golding because he expresses a philosophy different from that accepted by many of our number? Why hasn't someone told us we had a title to the presumption of innocence which we ought to defend?

The dismissal of this novel as a "voguish but one-sided theory of human nature" is flippant and superficial. The large sales of the book not only indicate popularity, but also the fact that it is used as a college text. At UNC, for example, there are at least two courses which study Lord of the Flies. It must, therefore, have some value over and above the function of a cerebral weejun.

Editors Shouldn't Be Politicians

Dear Editors,

In your editorial about the death of the North Carolina Magazine, it seems to me, that the real reason for its demise, is that both of you are too thin-skinned.

You two are supposed to be editors of the Daily Tar Heel, not a pair of politicians pandering to what you think the populous thinks. And how representative were the comments you heard?

I would like to see the magazine continued in an attempt to develop its potential. Somehow, the editors of the DTH, though students themselves, do not have a good picture of what students want, and about the magazine you two are dead wrong.

OF 'KING AND I'

Dancers In Exotic Tradition

Out of the tradition made familiar by "The King and I" come the Phakavali Dancers.

Graham Memorial presents this group at 8 p.m. tomorrow night in Memorial Hall. It will be free to students and spouses will be admitted for 50c.

On their first tour of the United States, the troupe has been heralded by European reviewers and such outstanding American performers as Anne Baxter and Edward G. Robinson. Mr. Robinson, known for his distinguished art collection as well as for his acting ability, described the performance by the Phakavali Dancers "the greatest experience of his life".

The youthful but lifetime-trained company is small and select, cultivated in the ancient traditions of the native art of Thailand.

The Phakavali Company dates from the nineteenth century and the present director is the son of the original director, who was appointed to the court of the kings of Siam to be court musician and to preserve the classical dance-drama traditions of the court.

The repertory of the Phakavali Company ranges from the Classical Dance-Drama to Folk-Dance. One of the most exciting features of a Phakavali program is the performance of the sword battle between the green masked Demon and the Monkey King in the white mask. It is a genuine duel which must be performed in the formalized classical positions with the added hazard of only pin-point openings in the masks through which the dancers can see. Audiences have been convinced of the authenticity of the battle by the appearance of the dancers wearing bandaids.

Another striking dance is the "fingernail dance" performed by six gracefully moving girls wearing long, ornamental fingernails and moving in complex patterns of color.

The Phakavali Dancers have become more popular with their audiences than some of the rigidly traditional but better known dances of India and other parts of Asia. The appeal of the Phakavali performers lies in their ability to charm their audience and still remain understandable.

The classical Pi-Phat Orchestra which accompanies the dancers performs entirely by ear since there is no music notation like that to be found in the West. But the music is handed down along with style and virtuosic tricks from generation to generation. The instruments include wind and percussion instruments which have no parallel among instruments of the West. Most outstanding of these is the Ranaad-Ek, a kind of xylophone with keys of bamboo.

The program will begin at 8 p.m. tonight in Memorial Hall. Seats not occupied by students at 7:45 will be open to the public at $1 per person.

Billy Reynolds Kicks Duke Past UNC, 16-14

By ED DUPREE

The dream game turned into a nightmare Saturday. For Carolina fans, it was like a television rerun of an old movie. Billy Reynolds was the star, or villain, again. Carolina once more was the last-minute victim, 16-14.

Reynolds, not satisfied with singlehandedly beating UNC a year ago, 6-3, with a pair of field goals, returned to haunt the Tar Heels. The Duke triumph came with 46 seconds remaining when Mr. Reynolds kicked one through the uprights from 20 yards out.

In 1961 he waited until only two seconds were left to kick the game-winning field goal.

Ironically, Reynolds' kicking failures cost the Blue Devils a win in his sophomore season, 1960. He missed a pair of field goal attempts and had an extra point attempt blocked by Tony Hennessey as the Methodists lost, 7-6.

Reynolds' performance overshadowed brilliant efforts by quarterback Junior Edge, end Bob Lacey, fullback Ken Willard and center Joe Craver—UNC standouts.

Edge completed 10 of 19 passes for 187 yards. For the season the Fayetteville junior hit on 93 of 166 tosses. Edge threw for five touchdowns and 1,039 yards.

Lacey was, as always, a Tar Heel magician on the gridiron. He caught six Edge passes for 126 yards and a touchdown, his fifth of the year. The junior from New York ran his 1962 total to 44 pass receptions and 641 yards.

Willard continued to be the only reliable ball carrier in the Tar Heel backfield. He carried 21 times, six more than the other five backs combined, and picked up 75 yards. The UNC total was only 115.

Craver, as usual, was tough on defense. He made ten tackles and knocked down two Duke passes from his linebacker spot. The big fellow from Shelby also assisted on three more tackles.

But for their efforts, they gained only a moral victory. And moral victories mean little in a Duke-Carolina game. This time the Dukes were a 14-point favorite.

Since the Tar Heels romped past Duke, 50-0, in 1959, the traditional game has been decided by a toe.

Jim Hickey's men showed Bill Murray's ACC champions that they meant business early in the game. The blue-clad Tar Heels stopped a Duke drive on the Carolina 28-yard line in the first quarter and played the men in white on even terms until the heartbreaking finish.

Another Duke drive was stopped on the Carolina 3. Reynolds, on fourth down, dropped back to the 10 and gave Duke a 3-0 lead.

The Tar Heels took the kickoff and found themselves on the Duke 10 in six plays. Ron Tuthill was thrown for a loss and a fourth-down situation faced Hickey's men.

The big play in the drive was a booming Edge to Lacey pass which went for 48 yards to the Duke 14. Lacey was shaken up on the play and left the field. When the ground game failed to bring yardage, Lacey returned to try a field goal.

Tuthill's loss had placed the ball on the right side of the field, a tough kicking angle. Lacey's attempt to tie the game was wide to the left and Duke still led.

Duke moved from its own 20 to the 43 and was forced to punt. The Tar Heels were unable to move and returned the punt four plays later, but a personal foul put Duke on the Carolina 32.

Two Blue Devil plays resulted in an eight-yard gain. Then Billy Futrell was stopped cold and, on fourth down, Chris Hanburger batted down a Duke pass. Another Blue Devil drive was halted.

From their own 24 the Tar Heels went all the way for a touchdown. It took 12 plays. Sparking the drive were passes from Edge to Tuthill (11 yards), Lacey (11 yards), and Marslender (14 yards). The big one was a 24-yard toss to Roger Smith who caught the ball and fell into the end zone. Dave Braine kicked the extra point and made it 7-3.

Only one minute and eight seconds were left in the half, but that was time enough for Bill Murray's men to set things up for Reynolds. On the last play of the half, he scored from 40 yards away and Carolina took a 7-6 lead into the dressing room.

With Willard supplying the power, the Tar Heels began to move again in the third quarter. Big Ken carried nine times for 40 yards in a 77-yard drive. But Ward Marslender was stopped for a four-yard loss and the threat ended at the Duke 8.

From there Duke marched 92 yards for a score. The drive carried over into the opening seconds of the final period. Futrell scored on a six-yard streak around right end and Duke again led, 12-7. Reynolds added the point for a 13-7 lead.

Were the Tar Heels to fall apart in the final half as they had the previous week at Notre Dame—and in several other 1962 contests? The Edge-Lacey combination gave a quick answer.

On the third play, following the kickoff, Edge heaved another long one to the magician. Once more Lacey was behind his defenders, two of them. He made another miraculous, diving catch. The play ended at exactly the same spot the first long Edge to Lacey pass had, the 14-yard line. But it didn't stop there.

Ken Willard and Eddie Kesler picked up two and four yards, respectively, then Edge spotted Lacey again. Lacey made another of his beautiful catches, a falling stab in the end zone—behind the defending Ed Chesnutt and the score was tied. Dave Braine's kick was again good, UNC led 14-13.

Carolina kicked off and Duke used 11 plays to move to the Tar Heel 23-yard line. The Dukes were faced with a fourth-down situation and Jim Hickey quickly sent in his first team. Duke needed about 18 inches for the first down.

Walt Rappold sneaked into the middle of a host of blue jersies. He got 17 and 1/4 inches on his try—it wasn't enough.

Nine plays later it was all over. Reynolds booted the winning field goal to make it 16-14.

Edge dropped back, following a 15-yard kickoff return by Ward Marslender, and spotted his favorite target again. He threw to Lacey on the left sideline—but Crisson bolted in front of the Carolina end for an intercept. Any Carolina hopes of a last-second victory were quickly ended.

And the victory bell is still in Durham. It will ring in D-flat for another long year.

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ Murray Expresses Relief, Pleasure

By CURRY KIRKPATRICK

For Duke, it had been sweet—oh so sweet. And Bill Murray expressed the feelings of his team best.

"We've never been so relieved a ball game was over," said Murray. And the relief was written all over his face.

But there, also, was pleasure. A deep, gratifying pleasure. Murray was thankful. And well he should have been, for if he had lost this one, he would have done so perhaps with the best team he has ever had at the institution down the highway.

Saturday, he said so himself.

"I would have to say that this year's club was every bit as good as my 1960 Cotton Bowl Champions. I don't want to say it's the best I've ever had—give me time for some evaluations—but it certainly is one of my best.

Pleased With Season

"We were not strong physically and we weren't too big but the boys molded into a fine unit and I was very pleased with the outcome of our season."

The subject switched to Bill Reynolds, the Dukes' Genius of Kick. Two years ago, on the same ancient turf of Kenan Stadium which has seen so many of these wild brawls between the hated arch-rivals, Reynolds missed two field goals and an extra point. Carolina won that one, 7-6.

Saturday, Reynolds came back to Chapel Hill, kicked three field goals and sent the Tar Heels home crying.

"Reynolds is certainly a clutch ball player, isn't he?" asked Murray. No one dissented.

"When the chips were down, his kicking has saved us on more than one occasion. I guess he got some revenge for the 1960 performance up here."

No Revenge Coming

Actually, Reynolds had no such revenge coming. Last year at Durham, his talented foot destroyed the UNC legion, 6-3, amply avenging the previous Fall's loss. But there was no stopping Murray on his 5-10, 180-pound kicking machine.

"Sure he could kick for the pros. He gets good distance when he has to."

Saturday, he didn't have to. Reynolds' icer with 46 seconds left came from extra-point depth.

Reynolds was actually recruited as a halfback out of Charleston, W. Va. He learned how to kick only after entering Duke. As a ball-carrier, his contribution over the years has been nil. But as a kicker, no ACC representative has ever been better.

Reynolds' chores Saturday gave him a foot in ACC records for most field goals in a career (15), in a season (7) and in a game (3). Quite an accomplishment for a guy who sits on the bench 99 and 44/100 per cent of every game.

Great Senior Crop

"This was a great crop of seniors we had this year," said Murray. "You know, these boys have been playing together since they were freshmen and have played a lot on varsity in each of the last three years. It's a real sorrow to see them go."

The Duke coach concluded. "From films I saw of Carolina this season, I would say that they played their best game of the year today. But so, I think, did we. It was the most exciting game I've seen in many a day."

Again, no one dissented.

Election Protests Continue

The University Party announced yesterday that it will appeal an Elections Board decision not to disqualify Jack Harrell as a candidate for President of the Freshman Class.

The Board held the re-election after granting a Student Party appeal that the ballot in the original election, in which UP candidate Earl Johnson led, was incorrect.

Harrell won last Tuesday's re-election by 42 votes, but he did not turn in an expense account before the deadline stated in the Election Laws.

The original election was ruled invalid because the name of Sandy O'Quinn, an illegal candidate, appeared on the ballot. Neither legal candidate got a majority in the first election.

The Board ruled yesterday that the Election Law does not govern re-elections, and therefore the deadline stated in the law does not apply.

Mike Chanin, UP chairman said, "The University Party is very distressed that this last election was run without any rules at all.

"The party feels that the Election Laws do cover all campus-wide elections, and that they were not drawn up to be disregarded.

"For the above reasons, the University Party will appeal the action of the Elections Board to the Constitutional Council. We will call Mike Lawler (Student Body Vice-president) as our lead witness."

When Lawler, SP, was asked to comment, he said, "The elected Student Body officers have a responsibility to the Student Body as a whole. This responsibility takes precedence over party affiliation.

"I feel that as Vice-president of the Student Body, and with a familiarity with election laws and elections, Mr. Chanin's point is well taken.

"I have asked to appear before the Constitutional Council to offer my perspective on the legality of this election."

India Ridicules Chinese Proposal

NEW DELHI (UPI)—India issued another statement Tuesday ridiculing the Chinese Communist truce terms in an apparent prelude to rejection. There were reports India might use British-built bombers to try to drive the Chinese from Indian territory.

The statement came as India signed a formal aid agreement with Britain Tuesday for arms to defend against Chinese aggression. Like an earlier American arms agreement, there were safeguards against the arms being used against Pakistan.

Kennedy, Macmillan To Meet For Conference In December

Allied Leaders Plan To Review Cold War Strategy At Nassau

WASHINGTON (UPI)—President Kennedy and British Prime Minister Harold Macmillan will meet Dec. 19-20 for a far-ranging review of allied cold war strategy in the wake of the Cuban crisis and amid evidence of growing dissension in the Communist camp.

The White House announced that the conference would be held at Nassau, in the British Bahamas, 190 miles east of Miami and 200 miles north of Cuba. No agenda for the talks was announced but Macmillan told the House of Commons Tuesday that the sweeping review was designed to "deal with practical problems which might be capable of solution at the present time." The aim was to find ways to lessen East-West tensions.

U. S. officials said Berlin, disarmament, Red China's attack on India and Moscow's increasing difficulties with Peking undoubtedly would be major topics. Kennedy also could be expected to discuss the long-range prospects for halting Communist expansion in the Western Hemisphere.

Meeting Details Undisclosed

The White House said only that Kennedy and Macmillan "have felt that it would be useful to have a further meeting to continue the informal series of reviews of the world situation which they hold from time to time."

This will be the sixth Kennedy-Macmillan conference. The five previous sessions took place in March, 1961, at Key West, Fla.; April, 1961, in Washington; June, 1961, in London; December, 1961, in Bermuda and last April in Washington.

Kennedy has described the current international situation as "a climatic period." He and Macmillan are expected to consider how the momentum generated by the successful U.S. handling of Khrushchev's Cuban gamble can be exploited to make more progress on other East-West conflicts.

Macmillan, De Gaulle to Meet

U. S. officials believe Kennedy's tough stand on Cuba may have convinced Khrushchev of the firmness of allied pledges and willingness to fight if necessary in the Berlin area and on other fronts.

Macmillan will fly to Nassau shortly after meeting in France with President Charles de Gaulle, whose refusal to cooperate wholeheartedly in NATO is a cause of continuing concern in Washington. Macmillan told Commons, in response to questions, that Western leaders must help solve some of the immediate problems of disarmament.

The United States and Britain agree that a total disarmament pact with Russia is impossible at this time. But they believe there is a possibility of making some progress on individual items.

Adenauer To Fire Defense Minister

BONN (UPI) — Chancellor Konrad Adenauer agreed to dismiss controversial Defense Minister Franz-Josef Strauss as the price for ending his worst government crisis in the 13 years he has held power, authoritative sources said Tuesday.

Adenauer was reported to have decided on the move in a meeting with Erich Mende, leader of the Free Democratic Party FDP which formed a junior partnership with Adenauer's Christian Democartic Party. Five FDP members of the cabinet resigned in anger over Strauss' political activities.

Informed sources said Adenauer planned to make Strauss the parliamentary floor leader of the Christian Democrats, replacing former Foreign Minister Heinrich von Brentano who would become justice minister. FDP Justice Minister Wolfgang Stammberger has said he is leaving the government for good.

Housing Minister Paul Luecke, 48, a one-legged war veteran, would become defense minister. But Luecke was reported to have told Adenauer he was willing to take the job only if the 86-year-old chancellor insisted. Later he stiffened his opposing to taking Strauss' job.

Although Strauss was reported agreeable to giving up his post, Adenauer was said to have met stormy opposition when he broke the news to a closed door meeting of his Christian Democratic CDU deputies.

The CDU has supported Strauss in the four-week old political battle over his part in a government security crackdown on the news magazine Der Spiegel. The Free Democrats said Strauss ordered the arrest of Der Spiegerl editors without informing the FDP justice minister.

Strauss is head of the Christian Social Union CSU, the Christian Democratic wing in Bavaria. He led his party to victory in elections Sunday in Bavaria, a move which made it more difficult for Adenauer to fire him.

Adenauer needs Free Democratic support to get a workable majority in parliament but there are so few Bavarian ministers he can get along without them. Tuesday, Mende told UPI he and Adenauer agreed to continue the coalition which would give Adenauer a majority.

Mikoyan, Adlai In Meeting

WASHINGTON (UPI)—President Kennedy Tuesday received a special report on the latest Cuban negotiations at the United Nations amid indications he may discuss the whole situation Wednesday with Soviet First Deputy Premier Anastas Mikoyan.

The President conferred at the White House with Ambassador Adlai Stevenson, who with other top U. S. officials met Mikoyan Monday night after the Russian had returned from his 24-day trip to Cuba.

John J. McCloy, the President's special representative in the Cuban negotiations, accompanied Stevenson in Tuesday's meeting with Kennedy.

The White House said it may have a statement later on the possibility of a Kennedy-Mikoyan session Wednesday. There had been reports this might take place Tuesday.

Speculation was that the veteran Russian troubleshooter would most likely press for the easing of U.S. economic and diplomatic sanctions against Cuba now that the military aspects of the crisis is over.

Economy, An Issue

But the indications were that this would be rejected. Mikoyan is a trade expert. He is understood to have spent much of his time in Cuba reviewing the island's stagnant economy and seeking ways to eliminate some of the mismanagement practiced by the Castro regime.

After his Monday night meeting with Stevenson and other U. S. officials he told reporters that the sessions had created "a good atmosphere for settlement of questions which are of concern to both of us."

The atmosphere did appear brighter for a final settlement of the Cuban crisis, and there are to be more meetings between Mikoyan and U. S. officials before he goes back to Moscow.

No Meetings Tuesday

There were no such sessions Tuesday, however. The two U. S. negotiators, Stevenson and McCloy, came to Washington and Mikoyan remained at the Soviet mission in New York.

The major unresolved question in the crisis is that of verification of the dismantlement of Soviet offensive weapons in Cuba.

Castro has said he would agree to this if similar inspection were carried out in the United States to check on "invasion" bases set up by Cuban exiles. Mikoyan has supported this proposal.

But the U. S. position was that such a deal would be of interest only if it meant global inspection of all bases, including those in Russia.

Plane Crashes In Peru; All 97 On Board Killed

Jet Airliner Rams Into Hillside While Preparing To Land

LIMA, Peru (UPI)—A Varig Airlines Boeing 707 jet airliner en route from Rio De Janeiro to Loss Angeles crashed into a hill Tuesday while preparing to land at Lima Airport in the predawn darkness. All 97 persons aboard were reported killed, including at least three residents of the United States

The Peruvian Air Ministry said the plane's wreckage was found on Las Cruces hill in a desert coastal strip south of here. The ministry said the 80 passengers and 17 crew members burned to death.

The air force rescue party which spotted the wreckage said the giant airliner was "destroyed."

The crash brought to 179 the number of persons killed in plane accidents on four continents in five days. Eighty-two were killed in crashes in Maryland, Brazil, France, and Sai Tome Island off Portuguese West Africa.

Flew Over Andes

The plane had taken off from Rio De Janeiro and had flown over the 22,000-foot Andes Mountain range. It was setting down for a landing when it vanished. Hours later searchers found the wreckage.

Lima Airport officials said that about 20 minutes before the aircraft was scheduled to land here, the pilot radioed the control tower at Pisco, Peru, to give his position.

In his message to the Pisco tower, the pilot gave no indication the plane was in trouble, officials said. It was the last communication received from the plane.

In Rio, Varig officials identified three of the passengers as Paul Best, export crude sales manager of California Standard Oil Co., San Francisco; Walter Curtis Gardner, aviation operations analyst, Standard of New Jersey, New York City, and Wolfram Arendt of Monmouth, N. J., a Columbia University student on a Ford Foundation scholarship.

Cuban Official Killed

Varig also reported that Raul Cepero Bonilla, president of the Cuban National Bank, and several other Cuban delegates to a just-concluded U.N. food and agricultural organization conference in Rio were aboard. Another passenger was identified as Maj. Gen. Jesus Melgar Escuti, Peru's minister of junta which seized control of the country last July.

At 3:37 a.m., when the pilot's last radio report was received at Pisco, Lima Airport officials said there was visibility here for 8½ miles and the ceiling was about 1,500 feet. This is considered good visibility for Lima.

Later in the morning, heavy clouds covered the ocean and this capital city, hampering search operations. Nearly 10 hours elapsed from the pilot's final report to discovery of the wreckage.

The Varig aircraft had been scheduled to stop at Lima, Bogota, Panama City and Mexico City before proceeding to Los Angeles.

Dance Group Of Thailand Plays At 8

The Phakavali Dancers of Thailand will perform in Memorial Hall at 8 p.m. tonight. Graham Memorial is sponsoring this troupe, which is on its first tour of the United States this season.

In other parts of the world these Dancers already enjoy a well established reputation as artistic performers. The troupe is small but select, consisting of six girls and two men and an orchestra of six.

A great attraction of the company is the fact that, although exotic to the Western viewer the performance is not incomprehensible. As one European review described it, "for the uneducated, absolutely enjoyable beauty now and then accompanied by a refined pantomime, with a clarity which left nothing to wish for."

The dances are notable for their variety, from the ritual dances of the court to familiar folk dances.

Outstanding among the court dances is the impressive "fingernail dance" in which six girls perform wearing long, exoctic gold fingernails and weaving exotic patterns of movement and color.

The most exciting number is the fierce battle of the "sword dance" between the masked demon and the Monkey King.

The Thai classical orchestra provides accompaniment for the group. The orchestra uses two types of wind instruments, the flute type and the oboe, and a variety of percussion instruments. Some of these cannot be compared to any instrument found in the West.

The Phakavali Dancers will perform at 8 o'clock Wednesday night. Seats not occupied by students at 7:45 will be on sale for the public at $1 per person.

Holidays Are Study Period For Students

By JACK GREGORY

Thanksgiving proved to be an instructive holiday for a group of 37 UNC students. The students, members of the UN Seminar of the Collegiate Council of the United Nations, left Chapel Hill Wednesday and arrived at the Hotel Edison in New York Thursday at 2 a.m. for a meeting with six UN delegates.

There they met with the six delegates and Mr. Eric Valters, General Agency Speaker of the UN, to discuss the seminar's theme: The Changing Role of the UN.

Mr. Valters, speaking directly on the theme itself, said that there had been three major changes in the UN's role: The shift of emphasis from the Security Council to the General Assembly; the emergence of the Secretary General as a powerful executive taking independent executive actions; and the emergence of the UN as a meeting place.

All three of these changes, he said, could be in the recent Cuban crisis. The non-aligned countries took the problem to the General Assembly and by-passed the Security Council. The Soviet Union and the United States recognized the position of Secretary General as a powerful mediator and agreed to submit the problem to arbitration.

The seminar group met with delegates from the United Kingdom, the Soviet Union, France, India, Tanganyika, and Algeria, to discuss each country's relations with the UN.

A common theme for several of the delegates was the Common Market. Mr. Edouard Koudriavtsev, Delegate to the USSR Mission, said the Common Market was an aggressive alliance against Russia, detrimental to independent African and Asian countries and pointed toward the emergence of neo-colonialism.

Mr. Malecella, the Tanganyika delegate, said "The Common Market is a political union which will dictate terms to the newly independent African states." He said Africa should form a Common Market of its own.

Mr. Cornell Capa invited the group to a party at his apartment Friday night. Capa met several Y members earlier this year when he did a story on student life at UNC for the London TIMES.

Judy Alexander and Kellis Parker were co-chairmen of the group.

The Y members arrived back in Chapel Hill at 10 p.m. Sunday.

United States Will Try For Agreement

GENEVA (UPI) — The United States said Tuesday it will press for an agreement on one of the two Western plans for a nuclear test ban despite Soviet refusal to accept inspections.

Western sources said the Russ apparently are unwilling to make any policy changes that might ease the test ban and general disarmament negotiations which were resumed here Monday.

Students in the infirmary yesterday included:

Nanett Powers, David Sentelle, William Harrison, Merrell Smith, Sutton Farnham, John Etienne, Stephen Hoyle, Steven Ellis, Paul Burroughs.

Reflections Goes On Sale

Political Articles, Short Stories Are In Magazine

The fourth issue of "Reflections from Chapel Hill" went on sale here and throughout the country this week. Published by students and former students of the University, this issue of the magazine is the largest since its first pubilcation in the summer of 1961.

The current issue contains two political articles, two short stories, a pictorial feature on the sculpture of Edward Higgins, and eight pieces of poetry.

Editor and Publisher Bob Brown said the magazine had a press run of "almost 3,000" copies, its largest to date. He said the increased number of issues was necessary to supply the magazine's new outlets in college towns and major cities throughout the country. Over 80 per cent of the copies are sold outside North Carolina.

Assistant Editor Mike Smith said the staff hoped to expand the number of Southern outlets for the magazine with this issue. "We are not a 'regional' magazine," he said, "But we are particularly interested in tapping the creative resources of the South. To date we have not had as many outlets in Southern colleges as we would like. We need these outlets to let young Southern writers and artists know we exist; we hope to obtain more of these outlets with this issue."

Herbert Matthews, formerly chief of the New York Times Havana bureau and currently a member of the Times editorial staff, is the author of "Poverty and Possibility," the lead article in the magazine. He examines the United States role in Latin America.

Gen. Hugh B. Hester (retired), a UNC graduate and former Food and Agricultural Administrator of the U. S. Zone in Germany, discusses "The Tragedy of Our German Policies" in the magazine's second article.

Two short fiction works, "Return of the Sad Fat Organization Man," and "The Beggar in the Bullrush" are by Ralph Dennis and Leon Rooke, both UNC graduates. Brown said Rooke would become "Reflections" Fiction Editor beginning with the next issue.

The magazine's eight pieces of poetry are by Michael C. O'Higgins, John Foster West, Guy Owen, Bronson Dudley, Theodore Crane Jr., and George Raleigh. Brown said the magazine was "particularly proud" to present the work of O'Higgins, an English author.

The center of the magazine is occupied by six pages of photographs of the welded sculpture of Edward Higgins. UNC Associate Art Professor Robert Howard introduces the section with a short piece on Higgins.

Brown said he hoped the magazine would receive extensive reviews of this issue. "Articles on our new fiction and poetry awards have appeared in newspapers throughout the South, and we hope this will lead the same newspapers to review the magazine when it appears in their area," he said. The previous issues of the magazine have been reviewed in most North Carolina newspapers, two Virginia newspapers, the Washington Post, and college newspapers in North Carolina, New York, Massachusetts, Michigan and Wisconsin. All reviews but one have been favorable.

The magazine has grown in size with every issue. The current issue is 72 pages, with the pages wider than in any of the previous issues.

Brown said the magazine, priced at 65c a copy, was selling "well" so far. He explained that the staff hopes to reduce the price to a standard 50c per issue with the next issue, but was unable to do so with the current issue because of printing costs. The publication is run "on a shoestring" and still owes some money to the printers for the third issue.

Smith said the magazine is in need of new staff members. "I hope the list of staff members at the beginning of this issue won't scare students away," he said. Many of the students who are listed there worked on this issue of the magazine but have since left the magazine. Smith said the magazine particularly needs a business manager.

Brown said any students, professors or townspeople interested in writing or working for the magazine should contact him at the magazine's office at 308 Cameron Ave. (across from the Chi Psi Lodge).

The Beat Duke Parade And Collegiate Filth

Criticism of the "Beat Duke" parade has been tossed from all levels, and we would like to take this opportunity to add our voice to the din.

Certainly, the great majority of college students suffer from a touch of grossness. It seems a human failing, and we would not expect otherwise. But even though the individual man may bear the unfortunate banality of the human situation, it never ceases to be disgusting when groups of men or college kids band together for the purpose of organized display of a collective obscenity.

Quite a lot of the "collegiate cuteness" which passed before the eyes of onlookers during this year's parade verged on outright filth. It was, matter-of-factly, quite foul.

Most often, when college students go a little far in exercising their right to be gross, those individuals who are offended may acquiesce and merely look the other way. As a whole, college students usually confine their more gross actions to limited areas; that is to say, in the cellars of fraternities or the social rooms of dorms, and therefore the university community at large is not made to suffer through our clever stunts. They may accidently happen to witness some of our mild stuff, in the form of Homecoming displays or the Sigma Chi Derby, but by and large the real filth that escapes from the minds of collegiate animals is not put out for public display.

Rumors continually circulate about wild pledge "training" or post-party shenanigans, but few persons may actually bear witness to the alleged acts. Indeed, few persons are even able to believe that such acts take place.

Therefore, why should any organization, especially one which has over the years earned the respect of both students and administration, choose to provide public opportunity for verification of the alleged irresponsibility of college students?

We choose to think that the sponsoring organization does not condone the type of float that has come to prevail. We choose to think that the parade has just momentarily gotten out of control, and that eventually — hopefully immediately — steps will be taken to insure the absence of plain filth from "Beat Duke" parades of years to come. (CW)

You Won't Believe This...

The following statement was actually made — by an American citizen in this year of Our Lord 1962. The speaker's name is Walter O'Barr and he is a circuit court judge in Mississippi. He presided over a recent grand jury indictment of a Federal marshal and a G.I. — the same grand jury which condemned the "many cruel and inhuman acts of violence" committed by the marshals (yes, that's right, by the marshals) . . . the same jury which claimed tear gas was used by marshals in the Sept. 30 Oxford riots "for the purpose of inciting a riot."

Judge O'Barr's statement — perhaps an Americana classic:

"It is a deplorable circumstance to have to begin a court term with American soldiers camped at the edge of Oxford . . . in violation of every constitutional right . . .

"A great instrument which has been able to stand the test of time for over 150 years has within a very short time been shorn of all meaning by a diabolical, political Supreme Court made up of political greedy old men who are not and have not been qualified to serve as a judge of any court, much less as a judge of the highest tribunal of the land . . .

"This court, together with the hungry, mad, ruthless, ungodly, power-mad men who would change this Government from a democracy to a totalitarian dictatorship have attempted to crush the people of this state through the excuse of upholding and enforcing an unlawful order that had not become final . . .

"Just because a man works for the federal or the State government does not give him immunity from prosecution for his crimes . . . This applies not only to the most ignorant human being on the face of the earth, but also John F. Kennedy, Little Stupid Brother Robert Kennedy, or any other human being."

Step right up folks, get your tickets for the Dark Ages . . . (JC)

Congratulations

On behalf of those students vitally concerned with the functionings of student government and the due process of the legislature, the clique of second floor Graham Memorial takes great pride in revealing to the campus at large the fact of girth within the ranks of the family of student body vice-president, Mike Lawler.

Mr. and Mrs. Lawler gave birth, vicariously and actually (in turn), to the proverbial "bouncing baby boy." Eight pounds-twelve ounces worth of "bounce," around 6:15 Tuesday morning.

We extend heartiest congratulations and best wishes, with hopes for the establishment of a sane southern "establishment," a la bigger and better families within the ranks of student government.

UNC Honor System

Does It Work?..Is It Right?..

(The following three articles appeared in successive issues of the Raleigh Times of the week Nov. 18-24, as a result of interviews on the campus. They are being reprinted because of the timeliness of honor system discussion relating to the Ann Carter case.—Editors)

Aycock: Faith In System

By WRIGHT LANGLEY
Raleigh Times

William B. Aycock, chancellor of the University of North Carolina, recently expressed his faith in the university's honor system when he said, "I wouldn't be chancellor five minutes without the honor system."

Today in Wake County Superior Court, the 87-year-old student administered honor system will be tested by the petition of Miss Anne Carter contesting the authority of UNC's Women's Council, which suspended her in May 1961. Miss Carter was reported by her Latin instructor, John Catlin, who contended she answered questions to an earlier quiz in his course when she took a make-up quiz made out especially for her.

"Too often critics of the honor system try to measure it against some hypothetical perfect alternative," Aycock said. "Sure, some professional cheaters beat the system, but they would beat any system — even proctoring."

* * *

"The honor system is consistent with the mission of UNC," according to the chancellor, "for our aim is to teach the truth as known to the rising generation. The student has the freedom to learn or not to learn, to cheat or not to cheat, but he has to be held accountable for his choice."

"We're not running a panel system here, but an honor system under which the students discipline themselves — and I might add they do as well, if not better than the faculty or administration."

Aycock pulled a copy of his installation address from his desk drawer and referred to a section on student freedom. He read the following paragraph:

". . . There has developed, in this University, a suitable environment in which the weak can grow strong and the strong can grow great. One is free to fail as well as to succeed. A few students interpret the absence of strict regulation to be an invitation to a life of frivolity, but most of them respond wisely to the opportunity to develop self-discipline."

"I feel you can't teach self-discipline under imposed discipline," he said, after he finished reading.

"You don't teach honesty in the classroom. You put trust in the students and give them the opportunity to instill self-discipline in themselves," Aycock went on.

* * *

The honor system is designed to handle cases involving cheating, lying and stealing and is complemented with the Campus Code which regulates for the most part non-academic behavior.

"Simply stated, the Campus Code is a pledge on the part of each student to observe conduct befitting a lady or gentleman under all circumstances," a student publication states.

Under the Campus Code, a student can be held accountable for his conduct anywhere off-campus and even during the summer, for the Chancellor said, "every UNC student is in effect a representative of the university at all times."

Except in cases of immorality, which are handled by the faculty and administration, misconduct cases are tried by either the Men's or Women's Councils.

Fraternity misconduct is subject to action by the Inter-fraternity Council, which Aycock said had functioned "very well in the last couple of years." He cited a recent case in which one fraternity took action against another and all but suggested it be closed.

Chaperones are required for all formal functions of fraternities and clubs, but Aycock said informal parties are not chaperoned, for that "would put students under a child's system."

* * *

"I can't say that 100 per cent of the faculty backs the honor system and campus code, but the faculty has officially recognized the honor system and student government," said Aycock.

Since 1957, the students have kept an office in Graham Memorial Student Union where infractions of the code or honor system can be reported.

Those students accused by faculty or students of violating the system have the right to face their accuser.

"Sure it's tough for a student to report another student — there's no question about it, but the student should respond to his obligation," Aycock said emphatically.

The UNC chancellor said he hadn't noticed too much public indignation over the basketball players who haven't squealed on other players who might have shaved points and taken bribes.

Aycock said he agreed with a recent editorial in UNC's Daily Tar Heel which stated the objective of the honor system "to instill a sense of honor into the students as a whole, not just the few students who have cheated."

* * *

The editorial was written in support of open trials allowing two Daily Tar Heel reporters to cover the proceedings of the Men's and Women's Councils with the permission of the defendant.

Aycock said he had rather not comment on the ammendment allowing open trials until it had been considered by the faculty and administration.

Prior to the student body voting for the amendment or open trials, only three trials were ever open, according to college newspaper records.

Aycock concluded by pointing out all actions taken by the Men's and Women's Councils are subject to review by the faculty and administration and students have the right of appeal if they wish.

Campus Code Called Absurd

"The honor system doesn't work at the University of North Carolina and the campus code is absurd," according to Jim Clotfelter and Chuck Wrye, co-editors of the campus newspaper, Daily Tar Heel.

Both agreed that the honor system doesn't work for "students don't turn each other in." Clotfelter said most infractions of the honor system were turned in by the faculty.

"The campus code," Wrye said, "is too broad and the conduct it regulates can't be defined — the code is just ineffective."

He pointed out that a student could be convicted in Durham for some civil violation and be tried for his conduct again before the Men's or Women's Councils.

Instead of the current honor system, Clotfelter suggested a system under which the student is concerned only with his conduct and not responsible for what someone else does. "Honor is a personal matter," he said.

Wrye interrupted, "don't get us wrong for we don't feel there is a wave of cheating going on, here but we feel more students are becoming concerned with the honor system."

"Under the system now, violators are not known" to the student body and I feel the students should be made more aware of what the councils are doing," he continued.

The Daily Tar Heel supported an amendment to the constitution which would allow two of its reporters to cover council trials.

Wrye wrote an editorial before the student body voted for the amendment.

"But as the system now works, if a man is found guilty, no one knows outside the Honor Council. Well, this is a pretty big campus, and you go around quite a lot without ever running into a member of the Council."

"So, in effect, nobody knows that you cheat (or just once cheated) and apparently nobody cares."

Evidently the student body does care for it voted 1,354 to 710 in favor of open trials.

Clotfelter, happy to get a foot in the door of trials, still maintained the amendment was a watered down verson which he said was so weak he doubted the administration would veto it.

He said he felt that the "open trials" actually would be closed trials because the Daily Tar Heel would be restricted in reporting council proceedings.

Clotfelter, a journalism major from Atlanta, Ga., attacked the Honor Councils' penalties such as one month on probation as being "ineffective" for most violations.

He added, "The Honor Council should unanimously vote to suspend a student rather than just require a two-thirds vote—The vote should be unanimous as in jury trials."

Clotfelter blamed large classes and graduate students who teach freshmen for the large number of cheating cases coming from the freshman class.

"Graduate students are more inclined to give simple answer tests which makes cheating easier, since they have little time to grade comprehensive exams," he said.

He cited an instance he knew of personally in which a freshman professor had a standard set of four exams for the final. "It's easy to cheat when exams aren't changed and if one freshman gets wind of an exam it's not long before an entire freshman dorm knows," Clotfelter contended.

Normally, professors don't stay in the room with students during exams, but Clotfelter said, he knew of one professor who said, "the honor system be damned" and sat with his students during his exams.

Both editors agreed that by far an overwhelming majority of the faculty members are in favor of the honor system. Often the faculty feels, however, that the councils are too lenient, they asserted.

Honor System IS Working

Unlike the editors of The Daily Tar Heel, who claim the University of North Carolina's Honor System doesn't work, the chairmen of the Men's and Women's Councils say it does work.

Bev Haynes, chairman of the Women's Council, said "More women students are complying with their obligation to report violations". Most of the women's violations, she said were social violations falling under the Campus Code such as staying out beyond prescribed hours.

She said the Campus Code should apply to all conduct on and off campus for "You can't turn honor on and off like an alarm clock."

The Women's council had few cases of cheating since most of the UNC girls are juniors and seniors, who, she said, are usually more responsible.

Walter Dellinger, chairman of the Men's Council, agreed more and more students are reporting infractions of the Honor System and Campus Code.

He attributed the success of the Honor system to a better promotional job in freshman orientation, and the University's getting a higher caliber of student body.

"The Honor System is a teaching device with the purpose of developing the total man and honor is a part of it, Dellinger said.

Unlike the Women's Council whose cases deal mostly with social infractions, 75 per cent of the Men's Council cases involve cheating.

A new freshman orientation film points out, "The game of high school cheating is over and the time has come to put away childish things."

Dellinger said the president of the student body told freshmen: "The University doesn't want you unless you can abide by the Honor System and the Campus Code."

"The school boy code has to be replaced by the Campus code which requires freshmen to accept the status of an adult," the two leaders said.

Dellinger recently campaigned for open council trials. An amendment for open trials was recently accepted by the student body.

"Open trials," according to the two council chairmen, "will lead to a better understanding of the Honor System and let the students body know it exists."

"Some students don't even know when we meet and what we do," Dellinger pointed out.

When Dellinger originally made his proposal or open trials his statement appeared in the Daily Tar Heel of Oct. 2, 1962:

"While there are many students who live in unwarranted fear of the Honor Councils because of the air of mystery which surrounds their dealings, there are also those who grow apathetic toward the Honor Councils because they are only vaguely aware that they function at all. I firmly believe that weekly published news stories of action by the Men's and Women's Councils would prove to be an excellent method of reminding students of their obligation to the honor system."

Records of the proceeding of council cases are well documented with statements from all the principals, the chairman said. They disagreed with reports the trial of Miss Anne Carter, suspended from UNC for allegedly cheating, was not carefully recorded.

Miss Haynes said her council had two scribes—who were not council members—to take notes on all proceedings.

Dellinger, who said he had seen the file on Miss Carter's case said it was "full and detailed."

With regard to punishment for infractions of the Honor System and Campus Code, he said there was no schedule of punishment used in deciding what punitive and corrective punishment would be given the accused.

All students accused of infractions have the right of council by a fellow student of the attorney general's office, or he may defend himself.

A summary report of the Men's and Women's Councils showed the following charges and number of convictions for the period 1951-1960:

Men's Council — cheating, 670 with 314 convictions; stealing, 120 with 79 convictions; lying, 66 with 58 convictions and unknown, 73 with 38 convictions.

Violations of the Campus Code (Men's Council) — breaking and entering, 9 with 7 convictions; drunkenness, 40 with 32 convictions, profane acts, 93 with 67 convictions; assault, 41 with 35 convictions; gambling, 12 with 10 convictions; panty raid, 31 with 20 convictions and unknown, 58 with 51 convictions. Total violations of the Campus Code, 284 with 222 convictions.

The faculty reported 443 violations of the honor code, other students, 130 and self reported, 84.

During the nine-year period covered by the report, the Women's Council had 504 instances of social violation under the Campus Code with 386 convictions. There were only 29 cases of cheating and 26 of lying.

Both council chairmen expressed their confidence in the future of the honor system with the advent of open trials, more student interest and better orientation programs.

Hardwood Season Opens Saturday

By MARTIN KRUMING

Carolina's varsity basketball squad initiates its 1962-63 season Saturday night at eight when it hosts the Georgia Bulldogs in Woollen Gym.

"We don't know a thing about Georgia," said head coach Dean Smith. "I don't like to go into any game blind."

The Tar Heels will be led by one of the South's best backcourt combinations, co-captains Larry Brown and Yogi Poteet.

Brown, a 5-10 senior guard from Long Beach, N. Y., led UNC scoring last season with a 16.5 average and was second team all- ACC.

Returning to the court after a year of ineligibility, Poteet has probably the deadliest one-hand jumper on the team. He is a 6-1 guard from Hendersonville, N. C.

Certainly the most celebrated member of the squad is 6-4½ center Billy Cunningham from Brooklyn, N. Y. Leading the freshman unit with a 20.7 average, Cunningham has been picked in pre-season polls as one of the top sophomores to watch in the nation. "Billy must do the job on the boards if we are to have an excellent team," Smith remarked.

Shaffer, who joined the team at mid season last year, scored 25 points in his first game against Clemson. Apparently recovered from a knee injury sustained during freshman football, the 6-3 Chapel Hill native is being counted heavily upon by Smith. Respess, a 6-4 sophomore from Pantego, was third high scorer on the freshman squad with a 15.4 average. He is a strong rebounder and fine defensive player.

Mike Cooke, the number six man on the roster, Billy Galantai, Brian McSweeney and Sophomore Bill Brown form the nucleus of Smith's bench strength.

Missing from the '61-'62 team which finished fourth in the ACC are captain Jim Hudock, Donnie Walsh and 6-8 center Jim Donohue. Walsh is assisting Ken Rosemond with the freshmen.

"We like to play the best teams in the nation," Smith commented.

Outside the ACC the Tar Heels will face Indiana, rated number one in the Big Ten, Kentucky, Yale and Notre Dame.

The Hoosiers possess the leading Big Ten scorer last season in junior Jimmy Rayl, while Kentucky boasts of All-American candidate Cotton Nash. Both these players were picked on the UPI All-American first team.

With All-American candidates Art Heyman and Jeff Mullins, Duke is rated by Smith as the best in the ACC. "If we can do the job on the boards, we will be an excellent team," he said. "Right now though we are pointing to Georgia."

Frosh Swimming Prospects Good

By BILLY HATFIELD

Freshman swimming coach Alan Gentry looks forward with enthusiasm to his debut on December 5 when the Tar Baby dolphins meet the East Carolina College freshmen at Greenville, N. C.

With a nucleus of ten men, three of which were prep school All-American, and a supporting group of six, Gentry commented, "We have some very good boys to build around and it's too early to tell what our real depth will be."

In the freestyle department, five boys have good potential. Tom Murphy of Washington, D. C., who was prep school All-American at Williston Academy leads the group. John Sheldon, another All-American at Gilman School from Baltimore, Md., along with Scot Taylor of Washington, D. C., Tom Bennett of Summit, N. J., and Dickie Chance of Richmond, Va., will also help in the distance and sprint events.

Skip Schreiber of Glenview, Illinois, and Sandy McNairy of Greensboro, N. C., are Gentry's choice for backstroke. In the breaststroke department Rick Forum of Ft. Lauderdale, Fla., and Dick Boardman of Seekonk, Mass., the other prep school All-American at Deerfield Academy, will do the duties. Fred Lipp of Baltimore, Md., who has great potential in the butterfly will probably get help from the versatile Murphy in this event.

Coaches Name All-American Team

CHICAGO (UPI)—Terry Baker of Oregon State shaded George Mira of Miami, Fla. and Tom Myers of Northwestern in a close battle as the nation's No. 1 quarterback on the 1962 All-America football team selected Tuesday by the American Football Coaches Association.

Picking the No. 1 quarterback was the "most difficult decision in the 1962 voting," according to Bill Murray, head football coach at Duke and president of the Coaches Association. Murray and some 250 coaches representing all the major colleges, took part in the balloting for the mythical eleven.

The coaches selected three men each from the south, midwest and far west and one each from the east and southwest. They did their selecting on the basis of on-the-field observations, scouting data and analysis of game movies.

Because of the heavy turn-over of talent due to graduation there was only one repeater from the coaches' 1961 team—tackle Bobby Bell of Minnesota.

Here are the 11 players chosen as the best in the land at their positions by the coaches association:

Ends — Pat Richter, Wisconsin, and Hal Bedsole, Southern California.

Tackles—Bell and Steve Barnett, Oregon.

Guards—Johnny Treadwell, Texas, and Rufus Guthrie, Georgia Tech.

Center—Lee Roy Jordan, Alabama.

Quarterback—Baker.

Halfbacks—Jerry Stovall, Louisiana State, and Roger Kochman, Penn State.

Fullback—George Saimes, Michigan State.

The second team was made up of: ends, Dave Robinson, Penn State, and Hugh Campbell, Washington State; tackles, Jim Dunaway, Mississippi, and Bob Vogel, Ohio State; guards, Jack Cvercko, Northwestern, and Ray Mansfield, Washington; center, Dave Behrman, Michigan State; quarterback Mira; halfbacks, Mel Renfro, Oregon, and Kermit Alexander, UCLA; and fullback, Bill Thornton, Nebraska.

The third team was comprised of: ends, Tom Hutchinson, Kentucky, and Vern Burke, Oregon State; tackles, Fred Miller, LSU, and Scott Appleton, Texas; guards, Don Brumm, Purdue, and Tom Hertz, Missouri; center, Don McKinnon, Dartmouth; quarterback, Myers; halfbacks, Eldon Fortie, Brigham Young, and Billy Gambrell, South Carolina; and Fullback Ed Cummings, Stanford.

SAE Gridders Win Title; Hoop Tourney Starts Today

By STUART BALL

SAE was crowned the campus tag-football champion after staving off a late Manly rally and going on to win the final game of the season 26-19 on November 19. It was a close game all the way with each team's here-to-fore almost invincible defense giving way to their respective offenses.

SAE jumped off to a quick 7-0 lead as they returned the opening kickoff for a touchdown. Keith Stoneman accounted for both the TD and the extra point. Manly fought back, however, and scored their first six-pointer on an interception by Russ McCormick. Both teams scored again in the first half and the only difference between the two was the two extra points scored by Stoneman and Vinny Giles of SAE.

SAE kicked off to open the second half and this time it was Manly's turn to pull the razzle-dazzle play. They went all the way for the score with a long pass from Mike McLaughlan to Bill Hanna. Bob Cox's kick was good and Manly held the lead for the first time in the contest, 19-14. The SAE defense dug in and held off two subsequent Manly rallies while the high scoring offense pushed across two TD's for the final 26-19 score.

The 1962-63 Grail Mural Sports Jamboree gets under way today at 4:00 with the first of many scheduled basketball games. In all, 48 games will be played today with the winner of the single elimination affair receiving a handsome trophy.

Last year 110 teams participated and indications are that this year's event will be at least that big. Co-sponsored by the Order of the Grail and the Intramural Department, the event is designed to foster better relations between dormitory and fraternity organizations and provide a time for managers to view their teams in game situations before establishing team rosters for the Intramural League play.

Basketball Tickets

Basketball tickets for the Georgia-UNC game Saturday, and for the Clemson-UNC game next Wednesday can be purchased at the ticket office in Woollen Gym.

Students, faculty members and University employees should present their athletic pass cards in order to get tickets. Tickets are on a first-come, first-served basis for the first two games, both at home.

Machinists Quit Work At Defense And Space Plants

Government May Use Talf-Hartley Action

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Union machinists went on strike Wednesday at Lockheed aircraft installations from Cape Canaveral to Hawaii slowing down a substantial part of the nation's defense and space prodution. The government immediately considered involking the Taft-Hartley law to halt the walkout.

At least 55,000 workers could be affected in the strike called by the International Association of Machinists (IAM).

While the country's main spaceport at Canaveral and a factory in Honolulu were involved, the focal point of the strike was California, where Lockheed has a number of its biggest installations.

The union called the strike after a midnight deadline passed with negotiators deadlocked on a union shop issue.

The Defense Department said federal officials were considering use of Taft-Hartley, under which President Kennedy could order the walkout halted for 80 days of "cooling off."

A Pentagon spokseman said the government also was studying "alternate means of production," along with possible action to require that any new contracts between th machinists and the Lockheed Aircraft Corp. be subject to approval of the Army, Navy and Air Force secretaries.

Rep. Gerald R. Ford Jr., R-Mich., said the Defense Department's policy apparently was aimed, in his opinion, at bludgeoning Lockheed management into capitulating on the union shop issue. He released copies of a letter in which he asked Defense Secretary Robert S. McNamara to clarify the department's position.

Federal Mediator William E. Simkin, who has been in California trying to mediate the dispute, said he would report to the President on the status of negotiations.

Lockheed has refused to accept the union's demand for compulsory union membership, or its alternate request for an employee vote on the issue. Company spokesmen said a union shop could force 14,000 workers to either join the IAM orl ose their jobs.

Kennedy had recommended acceptance of the union shop vote throughout the aerospace industry, as urged by a government-appointed board. The President said any walkout on the issue would be the responsibility of the company involved.

Lockheed is one of the country's biggest defense contractors. Among other things, it builds the Polaris missile and several types of warplanes. It also handles a number of items important to the space program, including the Agena upper stage for the Ranger moon vehicle.

Work With Legislature Planned

Union, Gym Annex Get Group Backing

The Carolina Student State Affairs Committee has decided to seek legislative approvel for a combination undergraduate library-student center and an addition to Woollen Gymnasium during the coming session of the General Assembly.

The committee, one of the largest in student government groups, selected the projects from about a dozen different capital improvement items the University wil ask from the legislature.

"I believe that most students will agree that these two projects are pretty necessary," committee chairman Bill Hoyle of Greensboro said when the group approved the projects recently.

The student committee will lobby for passage of the two items during the legislative session opening in Raleigh in January, Hoyle said.

They were among the projects requested by the University administration before the Advisory Budget Commission earlier this fall. The commission will prepare the state's biennial budget which will be submitted to the legislature for approval.

Both the items are expected to be in the advisory budget when it is presented to the Assembly, Hoyle said.

Members of the committee are already working on a pamphlet to be presented to the members of the legislature. Another project calls for a letter-writing campaign to each member of the assembly, he said.

Hoyle said a "small working core" of the committee will meet with Chancellor William B. Aycock Dec. 11 to discuss plans for coordinating the activities of student and university lobbyists.

"I believe we have a pretty good chance of getting approval of the Woollen Gym addition this time," Hoyle told members of his committee recently. Both the projects were approved by the legislature during its last session and were placed in the university improvements section of last November's bond referendum. However, that bond issue was turned down, as were all other bond proposals.

The addition to the gymnasium would provide a 9,400-seat auditorium, which could be used for basketball games, as well as stage programs. It would have permanent seating on three sides and rollaway bleachers on the stage side. Officials have estimated it would cost $1,230,000.

Memorial Hall, the largest auditorium on campus, seats only 1,640, a fraction of the Carolina student body.

The undergraduate library-student center is the more costly of the two and would cost an estimated $3,315,000. It would replace the 31-year-old Graham Memorial and would be built between Lenoir Hall and Wilson Library.

In addition to the undergraduate library, the center would contain meeting facilities for student organizations, a bookstore, a postal sub-station and a snack bar. It would be completely air-conditioned and would contain 173,328 square feet of floor space.

While the committee is making plans to lobby the State Legislature in Raleigh, it will also be lobbying the Carolina Student Legislature. Hoyle said his committee will ask the students to appropriate $200 Thursday so the committee can begin financing its activities.

IFC And PiKA Heads Agree That Censorship In Order

Jim Dillashaw, President of the Interfraternity Council, and Ronny Butler, President of the Pi Kappa Alpha fraternity, were asked to comment last night on the Dean of Men's action to censor student parades.

Dillashaw said that although he does feel some central committee should be set up to review the parades, it should be a student committee rather than administration one.

The IFC president said he is in agreement with the Dean of Men that something should be done to prevent similar happenings in the future.

Butler, whose fraternity sponsors the parade, said that he also had been notified by Dean Long of the action to be taken by the administration.

Butler said that his fraternity had been very concerned about the recent parade and had already drawn up a proposal for a committee to censor future parades, but that the proposal would probably be dropped, since there was no further need for it.

Butler said that he felt that there should definitely be members of the faculty on the committee, and that it was not essential for students to serve as censors.

The Pika proposal would have included one faculty member, the fraternity's president, and the chairman of the parade.

Indian Troops Return From Front Lines

NEW DELHI (UPI) — India Wednesday disclosed that more than 5,000 of its troops, feared captured in a Communist cut-off drive before the Chinese cease-fire last week, had returned safely to Indian lines with their weapons.

An Indian spokesman said more Indian troops were returning from forward areas along the northeast frontier in a key development that indicated the Indian defeat in the Se La Mountain pass area may have been more tactical than costly. Only 1,000 stragglers were reported earlier to have made it back to Indian lines following the Red-called cease-fire.

Kennedy To Give Mikoyan Reports On Berlin, Cuba

Inspection Pledge To Be Discussed

WASHINGTON (UPI) — President Kennedy is expected to make it clear to Soviet Deputy Premier Anastas I. Mikoyan in their talks here Thursday that progress on Berlin and other critical cold war issues depends on some more positive diplomatic approaches from the Kremlin.

U. S. officials said Wednesday that the principal purpose of the 4:30 p.m. session at the White House is to try to tie up some of the loose ends of the Cuban crisis.

The major issue remaining between Moscow and Washington is the fulfilment of Soviet Premier Nikita Khrushchev's pledge to permit international inspection to prove he has pulled all his offensive weapons out of the island.

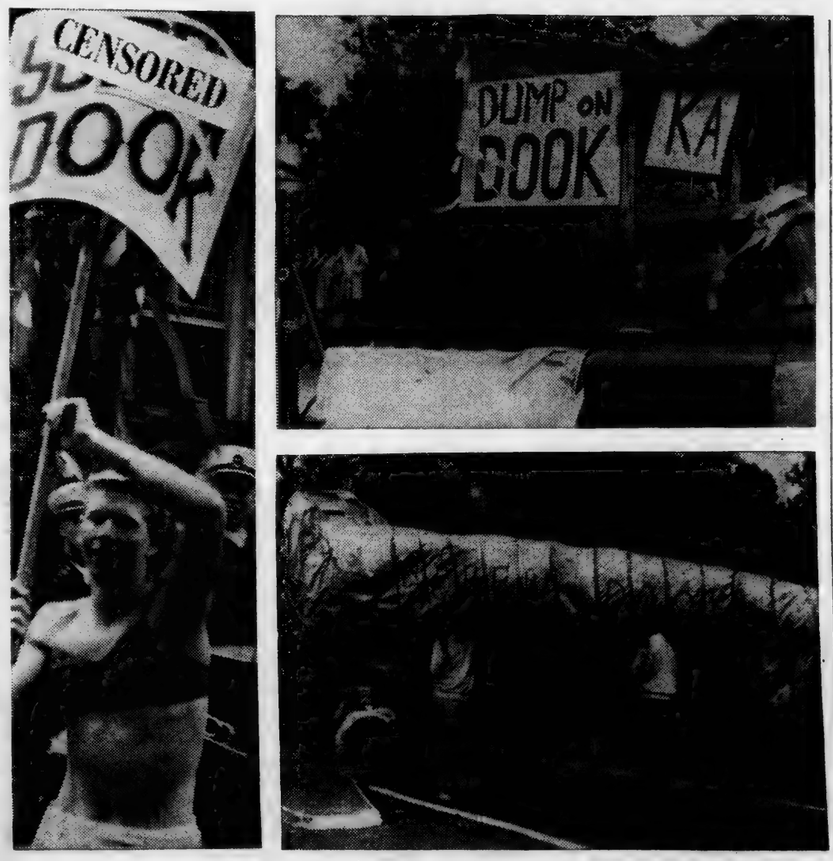
Administration officials acknowledged, however, that the discussions, which will be attended by secretary of State Dean Rusk, could range over other East-West issues if Mikoyan brings them up. They said Kennedy is willing to discuss cold war peril points but has no intention of doing any negotiating with Mikoyan.

The fact that Mikoyan is close to Khrushchev and the Soviet premier's ace trouble-shooter has let to some speculation that he may be impowered to discuss in some depth problems such as Berlin and disarmament.

Most high officials believe, however, that he is on a "fishing expedition" to get a firsthand assessment for Khrushchev of Kennedy's mood in the wake of the Caribbean affair. If that is true, they added, Mikoyan will find no admission here that Kennedy owes Khrushchev a reward for removing his nuclear threat from the southern flank of the United States.

The soft lines from Moscow at present is considered here the forerunner of an all-out Soviet "peace offensive" designed to lull the West into complacency and exploit ever present Allied differences to try to wring some basic concessions on crucial issues.

The Communist line is that Kennedy owes Khrushchev something in return for Soviet removal of offensive weapons from Cuba..



Officials point out that this Red argument ignores the fact that there would have been no peril of war over Cuba in the first place if the Soviet leader had not tried to slip nuclear capable weapons into strategic positions just off the U. S. coast.

On the question of inspection to make certain all Russian offensive missiles are gone and the Soviet of the Dec. 22 deadline Khrushchev promised, Mikoyan will find jet bombers removed by the end no softening in Kennedy's attitude. The United States continues to insist that it will have to maintain close aerial and naval surveillance until there is some form of reliable verification and an agreed process guaranteeing against reintroduction of the weapons.

Grossness Of 'Dook' Parade Prompts Formation Of Board To Censor Public Displays

These Floats Helped To Beat The Beat Dook Parade

These three floats in this year's Beat Dook Parade are examples of the grossness which prompted the administration to set up a control committee to regulate all public displays. Under the new committee, all floats and displays must be submitted for approval before they are used.

4-Man Group Established For 'Review'

By JIM CLOTFELTER

Dean of Men William G. Long told the DTH last night the administration had set up a committee to "review for approval" all "public parades, displays and presentations" prior to the event.

The action came "principally" as a result of criticism of the reputed bad taste of the "Beat Dook" parade Nov. 20, he said.

Long said "letters of censure" would be sent to 7 to 10 fraternities and one dormitory for their "gross" floats in the "Beat Dook" parade. He declined to name the recipients of the letters at this time.

The 4-person review committee will be composed of representatives from the offices of Men and Women, and two faculty members chosen by the Dean of Student Affairs. The committee will pay particular attention to the Homecoming Weekend displays and the Sigma Chi Derby, as well as the "Beat Dook" parade.

"Should an offensive presentation occur," Long said, "this committee will make a recommendation to the Dean of Student Affairs for appropriate disciplinary action."

The Dean of Men said there had been "other provocations" leading to the establishment of the committee, but "the great weight of influence was the Beat Dook parade."

Long said the administration felt "there has been no responsible student control—and some control has to be exercised.

"There has been a maximum opportunity for students to control these affairs, but it has not been done," he said.

The office of student affairs has photographs of every "offensive" float, Long said. The identities of the float sponsors who received letters wil be released today.

Long said he and other administrative officers had received several letters objecting to the parade. There have been several editorials in state newspapers on the subject.

Long's full, official statement reads:

"Until further notice all public parades, displays and presentations (especially the "Beat Dook" parade, Homecoming Weekend and the Sigma Chi Derby) will be reviewed for approval prior to the event by an administrative-faculty committee consisting of a representative from the Dean of Men's office, a representative from the Dean of Women's office, and two faculty members. Should an offensive presentation occur, this committee will make a recommendation to the Dean of Student Affairs for appropriate disciplinary action."

Woman's College Votes To Retain NSA Membership

Woman's College Tuesday voted to remain in the National Student Association.

Discussion preceeding the campus referendum was climaxed by a debate held immediately before the voting. Six WC students argued the issues of continued NSA membership at the required-attendance meeting.

According to Virginia Harmon, WC delegate to the 15th National Student Congress last summer, the main issues involved were not political. She said the opponents to continued membership were concerned about NSA's value on their particular campus.

Mus Donahue, former editor of the "Carolinian," was one of the debators against WC's membership. She maintained that NSA had had dynamic leadership at WC in the past, and had not made appreciable contributions to the campus.

Other opposition debators were Charlotte Vestal, student legislator, and Kay Mull, senior house president. It was stated that NSA on a national level had become active in too many fields, and was unable to be effective in all.

The debators favoring NSA membership were Judy Awskew, NSA Coordinator Patsy Thaxton, member of NSA committee; and Miss Harmon. They defended the Association against charges, and maintained that NSA's potential was too great for WC to ignore.

Four UNC students spoke at a meeting Monday night at WC in favor of NSA membership. They were Harry DeLung, Ann Lupton, Ford Rowan, and Diane Hile. Also present was Jane Patterson, former Carolina student, who is now a secretary in NSA's national office.

They told WC students about the NSA program at Carolina, and explained its potential at WC. DeLung said, "Most of the girls at the meeting knew little of NSA's projects, and a majority seemed impressed with Carolina's program."

He added, "The president of their student government expressed hope that a successful program could be initiated at WC. They have some very qualified students to work with it, and I feel that the recent controversy has stirred up great interest."

According to Miss Harmon, the WC elections board would not reveal the vote totals.

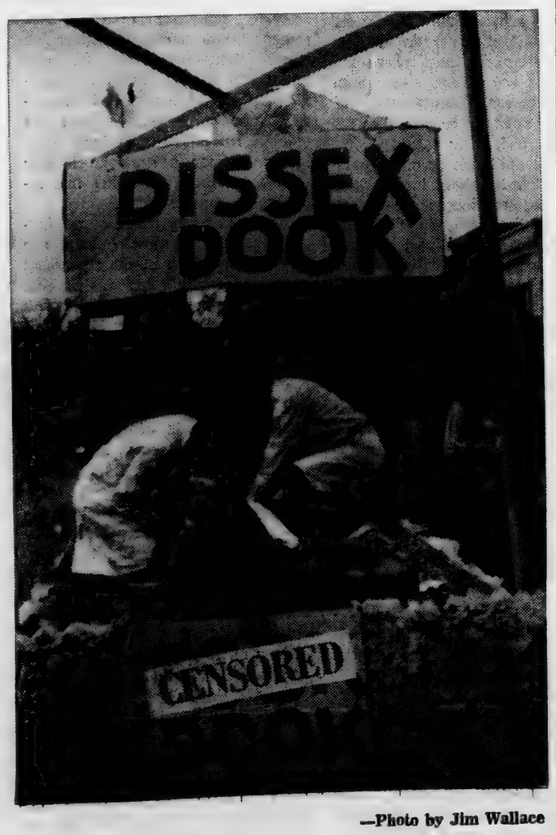
Speedy Mail Service Begins Next Summer

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Postmaster General J. Edward Day announced plans Wednesday to trim up to 24 hours from the delivery time of out-of-town mail, beginning July 1.

Speedier delivery will be made possible by a zone improvement plan called Zip, designed for use by the nation's large volume mailers. They originate 75 per cent of U. S. first class mail.

PLC Members Hold To Plan For Cuba Trip

According to Dennis King, a member of the local Progressive Labor Club, the plans for several students to make a trip to Cuba over the Christmas holidays have been resumed.



King said that there are now six people who definitely plan to travel to Cuba if they can arrange to get support from the Castro government.

The group, which has been dealing with the Cuban government through Castro's New York lawyer, is not likely to get State Department clearance to travel in a communist nation.

Those presently planning to make the trip, according to King, are himself, Larry Phelps, John Salter, Charles Pratt, Valerie Armstrong, and Nick Bateson.

University Party Opposes Elections Board Decision

UP Chairman Mike Chanin said yesterday that he wished to clarify his party's stand on the controversial issue concerning the second election of the Freshman Class President.

The controversy stems from the fact that the SP failed to submit their expense account to the Elections Board in compliance with the Election Law.

The SP candidate, Jackie Harrell won the election, however, when the Elections Board ruled that the Election Law does not apply to re-elections.

Chanin, in explaining his party's stand, said, "The Election Law is very specific in that it states that a candidate must turn in his expense account.

"The Elections Board, in deciding that the election laws did not apply to this new election, did not disqualify Harrell. However, we feel that in order for the election to be legal, it must be held under the laws as declared by Student Legislature, and under these laws, Harrell should be disqualified.

"This brings up two points. One, if a group can decide to disregard the laws which we have placed upon ourselves, then cannot any other person do the same?

Second, if Harrell is declared winner, will the Freshman Class have a legal president?

"We as students have made these laws which we live under. Faculty as they may be, until they are changed, we must abide by them.

"The right of any person not to do so, endangers the whole concept of student government. Therefore, we have appealed the decision of the Elections Board to the Constitutional Council."

The Men's and Women's Honor Councils will meet in joint session tonight to elect six of its members to serve on the Constitutional Council.

The Constitutional Council, which has sole jurisdiction over matters involving the legality of the Student Constitution, will convene Monday night to decide whether or not to uphold the Elections Board decision concerning the legality of the Election Law in a re-election.

The board decided Tuesday that the Election Law governs only those elections provided for in the law itself, and that therefore, election procedures defined in the law did not have to be followed in the Freshman Class President re-election.

'Extraordinary-Status' And Political Interference

Prior to the rioting, perhaps somewhere in the middle of Governor Barnett's series of visits to the "Ole Miss" campus, the Southern Association of Colleges and Schools has been vitally concerned with the state of affairs at the Univrsity of Mississippi.

Their primary concern was not with the segregation policies of said educational institution, but rather with the nature of, if any, political interference in the administration of the University.

The Association apparently had just cause to be concerned. On numerous occasions events transpired on the University campus which led the nation to believe that Ross Barnett was indeed THE University Administration. He had the power to personally reject Meredith, and apparently to determine what actions the University would undertake in the event of Meredith's admission. The board of trustees even went so far as to designate Governor Barnett as momentary-director-of-admissions.

However, the Association was not limiting its interests to mere political interference with administrative policies. In the words of one SACS delegate, who was to vote on the commission's forthcoming proposals, "Our primary concern is the over-all stability of the institutions of higher learning in Mississippi. We are deeply concerned with the current attitudes and actions of the university students, as well as the state officials."

There has also been mention of pressures brought to bear on faculty members, and published reports that certain state legislators are attempting to have some professors fired.

* * *

Certainly, action that might have been taken against "Ole Miss" as an act of vengeance or as threat to other universities who might soon face similar problems would have been out of line. Any decision that was to have been made was going to be based strictly on fact, and was going to reflect a sincere concern for the "stability of the institutions of higher learning in Mississippi."

We were led to believe, at least to hypothesize, that the Association apparently had some evidence which would indicate that Governor Barnett and his cronies had in fact tampered with the administration of one of those "institutions of higher learning."

Prior to the hearing, Dr. William H. McEniry, Dean of Stetson University, and President of SACS, had issued statements noting the seriousness of the situation, and the drastic results that would follow a possible loss of accreditation for "Ole Miss." Supposing that this was not mere "rocket-rattling," we inferred that he was truly upset over Barnett's interference, and that he was upset because of known political involvement.

But McEniry was not the only member of the executive committee of the Association to speak prior to the hearings. Dr. Gordon Sweet of Atlanta, executive secretary of the association's commission on colleges, had indicated that the association would be willing to accept assurances from Governor Ross (the "Hoss," as he is affectionately known by the "Ole Miss" students) Barnett himself that politics was not involved in the administration of the University.

This was, to say the least, disconcerting to many of us who had come to believe that Governor Barnett might just occasionally "overlook" some facts about the Meredith situation.

Sweet's statement that, "I think we would not question a governor's word," certainly is the proper approach in most dealings with elected public officials, but this case with Ross the Hoss seemed to be just a bit sticky, and quite a bit out of the ordinary realm of normal elected public officials.

* * *

Well, apparently the Southern Association for Schools and Colleges based their decision on a statement from Barnett. The placing of six Mississippi State colleges on "extraordinary-status" falls into a category of the absurd which must apparently be reserved for a state that would elect a "Hoss" as governor in the first place.

Evidently something out of the ordinary went on during the Meredith crisis, for the SACS did not see fit to dismiss charges of interference. But that something must not have violated a code of conduct established for "institutions of higher learning in Mississippi." Why bother with a ridiculous label of "extraordinary-status?"

When the president of the executive committee of the Association was asked to define the phrase, he said, "Extraordinary-status means status out of the ordinary." Now that's certainly clever, and it means absolutely nothing.

In fact, it is about as clever as was the action that made Governor Barnett momentary - directory - of admissions at "Ole Miss." The only difference in the two is that Governor Barnett's appointment by the board of trustees meant something. It meant that there was political interference in the administration of the University of Mississippi. Wasn't that what the Southern Association of Schools and Colleges sought to avoid? (CW)

AAU President: 'Facts Wrong'

To the Editors,

It used to be that every time things got dull around a newspaper office somebody would suggest the game of "Let's blast the A.A.U.". Recently, however, the swing has been the other way because the general public is becoming educated to the program of the A.A.U. — and the writers are beginning to see the light.

I was just beginning to get used to factual writing when someone sent me a clipping of an editorial which appeared in THE DAILY TAR HEEL entitled "NCAA-AAU Confusion" and signed by (CW). Confusion was attributed to the wrong parties.

First. The NCAA does not train and turn out "the great majority of Olympic-bound athletes", but on the contrary supplied about 22% of the American athletes in the past two Olympic Games.

Second: There is no "revolt within the ranks of amateur athletes in many sports". There has been pressure brought by certain individuals who are interested only in their own personal gain, but the athletes as a whole are standing up for the A.A.U.

Third: Your statement that the "latest A.A.U. stand (is) that no individual who attends college on an athletic scholarship is an amateur — and therefore is not eligible for international amateur competition" is a complete untruth. The A.A.U. has taken no such ridiculous stand.

At a meeting of the International Amateur Athletic Federation this fall at Belgrade, Yugoslavia, a resolution was introduced requesting the A.A.U. to investigate athletic scholarships in the United States in order to determine whether such scholarships were given mainly for the furtherance of the athlete's academic education or solely for the college to get the benefit of the athlete's athletic ability. This resolution was passed unanimously with the United State's representative (the A.A.U.) abstaining its votes. Because of the resolution it is encumbent upon the A.A.U. to investigate these scholarships and report back to the IAAF, but each will be considered upon its own merit, and if the colleges are clean they will have no worries.

This one thing can be a prize plum for writers whose only wish is to be sensational, because it lends itself so easily to distortion. Athletic scholarships are so important in the educational program and so close to my heart that the distortion of the facts disturbs me more than all the belittling descriptions used in the editorial.

I would appreciate it if you would afford me, as an alumnus of the University of North Carolina and not as the president of the Amateur Athletic Union of the United States, the courtesy of printing this statement in its entirety in your newspaper in as conspicuous a place as you ran your editorial.

'Have Mercy On Your Soul'

To Co-editor Clotfelter,

I'm not very good at letter-writing but I surely would like to state that I think you have a warped sense of values.

Thanksgiving is not meant for a way to express your indignation at the injustices you feel that you suffer at the hands of the University of North Carolina. It is a time at which we are supposed to give thanks for the things that really count. I'm sure you have SOMETHING to be thankful for. Perhaps you might give thanks to Almighty God for the fact that you are able to receive an education, that you have more opportunities than millions do, that you are able to force your opinions on people through the medium of a "newspaper."

I am simply unable to find words for the contempt I feel for you and your using one of the most important and meaningful times of the year as a tool for your narrow-mindedness.

God have mercy on your soul.

Baptists Shirked Responsibility

To the Editors,

I have been greatly disheartened by the decision of the State Baptist Convention to table the proposal to go on record supporting the abolishment of capital punishment until next year. How much longer can organized religion "table" issues that are of vital concern to the Church? Perhaps my Baptist brethren might learn from Catherine the Great of Russia who issued in 1767 her famous "Instruction" which abolished capital punishment and declared that, "It is moderation which rules a people and not excess of severity."

The moral responsibility for capital punishment is society's responsibility and hence the church's who is ostensibly society's moral leader. Despite man's resistance to change, lack of imagination and resistance to reason and fact, the truth is that the public is beginning to realize that it no longer needs the executioner's protection; that the deliberate taking of a life by the State is unjustifiable on religious or philosophic or scientific grounds; that executions by mistake will go on as long as capital punishment will go on, because this risk is inherent in its nature. We realize medically that a vast number of murderers are mentally sick, and an equal number are victims of circumstance who can be reclaimed for human society. The substitution of the life sentence for the death penalty exposes the peaceful citizen to no greater risk than that of being killed by lightning, and less than the risk of being a passive accomplice in the execution of an innocent or a mentally deranged person.

It is not only a question of the lives we offer annually as a sacrifice to the stupid moloch of prejudice. The electric chair is a symbol of all the cruelty and terror of earlier ages, a symbol of irreverence for life, an image of the beastly man.

Brady Practice Hit By Couple

To the Editors,

(Open letter to Mr. Brady McLennan)

During the six years that we lived in Chapel Hill, we have dined at Brady's Restaurant, or carried out box dinners on an average of once or twice a month. Any business establishment would have considered us "good customers," and indeed, we have always received excellent service and courteous greetings when we entered Brady's. Until last Sunday evening.

On that occasion, we were dining out with another couple, who are Negroes. The smiles and greetings we were accustomed to at Brady's were frozen, and we were gruffly told that we would not be served, and were admonished like children with the remark that we "should have known better."

We have several regrets over this incident. The main regret is learning that your prejudice is more important to you than a customer's good will. We cannot return to Brady's if we are welcomed with one set of friends, and excluded with another. We regret also the embarassment caused our friends, since we had no intentions of subjecting them to such an incident when we suggested going to Brady's. Further, we were shocked that in 1962 in Chapel Hill, which is not Oxford, Mississippi, such a thing can still occur.

When our patronage is not limited to the times we dine alone or with white companions, we shall look forward to going again to Brady's. Until such time, we cannot in good conscience accept the terms under which we are welcome there.

India Beset By Poverty, Misery

(Editor's Note: Mr. Range is a former UNC student, now studying abroad. This is the first in a series of articles on India.)

DHARWAR, INDIA — This vast land of 440,000,000 in habitants makes such multifarious impressions upon the Western visitor, new ones being added daily, that he hardly knows where to begin in relating it all to his fellows in the charmed Occident.

The contrasts are so striking and numerable, from the eating and dressing habits of India to her basic mentality (the European and American ways of life now seem almost one and the same, after experiencing the East), and yet certain strains of common ideas and customs are to be traced in Indian and Western life.

Immediately upon arrival in Bombay after a 72-day, six thousand mile trek from Europe my senses were assailed by more impressions than they could digest in the short two days there. The teeming masses are always about when one is in the city, shouting, selling, spitting, eating, sleeping, moving in all directions at once. Long lines of poor, dark-skin, white-clad Indian men pass their days in the boiling sun on some curbstone, evidencing the high unemployment prevalent in the cities. The scrawny, undernourished "coolies" (common word attributed to all manual laborers in India, from rice pullers to street cleaners) who push old loads barefooted through the streets on their crude handcarts, as well as the red-clad (wearing a red turban instead of a red cap, as in the U. S.) train porters who tote your hundred-pound trunk on their heads for six cents, spend many hours sleeping on the cement, so scarce are their jobs.

Nevertheless one sees businesses of every kind in operation. Along one street will be ten textile shops, vending India's best product in their small, open-front edifices, where everyone sits on the floor on cushions and the customer may well be brought a cup of tea while he waits. Between two shops there often hangs a big box, firmly attached to the building wall. Opened up, this box houses tiny shelves full of everything from combs to cigarettes and incense; on a bare ledge projecting from the box's bottom sits the proprietor, peddling his cheap wares all day long to the passers-by, never growing tired of squatting on his wee square foot of board, for he knows nothing else. Like as not he will join the thousands who stretch out on Bombay's sidewalks every night (pedestrians respectfully remain out in the street) for their night's sleep—they have nothing else.

Leaving the more orderly, prosperous island called Ballard Estate, with its large shipping companies, the seaman's home, and the oil companies, we pass through the shade of the cool trees gracing the front of the central post office and soon find ourselves among the ever-moving multitudes again. All along the sidewalks ambitious tradesmen spread their blankets and pile them high with sweaters, shirts, plastic wares, ball point pens, and an endless variety of other goods. Their varied, rapid-fire cries split the ears of the crowds pouring from huge Victoria Terminus, where Bombay's commuter trains arrive loaded to the very roofs with passengers. Around another corner are a long line of booths in which typewriter-armed men are sitting, prepared to write letters for illiterates (80% of India does not read or write) or fill out deeds and other legal papers. They work until late at night, each placing a candle above his machine and setting an incense stick to burn, creating an errie effect on the passer-by. In this part of town you must expect a tap on the shoulder and—"Sir, you want money . . . seven rupees I give you for dollar . . . what about it?" where the black market operates in many forms, trying to sell smuggled goods and money, especially to sailors and foreigners (official rate: 4.75 rupees per U. S. dollar).

A few blocks further brings one into Bombay's pretty area, a long mall of cricket fields, surrounded by government, university, and commercial buildings in the resplendent Victorian style of sixty years ago, all vestiges of the British colonial period. Even today this English sport as well as others such as racing and dog-showing are practiced almost daily by those very few who can afford it.

A magnificent, long, but ill-repaired dual lane boulevard called "Marine Drive" sweeps in a slow arch around Bombay's unnavigable, beached northern bay, leading us into the "Hanging Gardens" and "Breach Candy" sections, the wealthy residential areas of India's fastest-growing city. On a visit to a family in one of the newest, most-modern apartment houses (there is no room for private houses in Bombay one would expect in a wealthy Washington suite, including a majestic view of the harbor (enchantingly lighted at night) and curving coastline—such a standard of living is so rare as to be almost non-existent in this country.

Huddled in tall apartment houses surrounding a battery of exclusive swimming pools called "Breach Candy" is Bombay's European community (a subtle term for "the white people"). Including Westerners from Americans to Russians, the Europeans pass most of their idler hours within the confines of "Breach Candy's" walls, bathing in the sun, eating Western snacks, swimming in one of the three pools lined by an immaculate, verdant lawn. In an effort to create a haven from the filth and general primitiveness which characterizes a large portion of India, "Breach Candy" was set up exclusively for the Europeans; they have momentarily pacified democratization movements by ruling that Indians could be brought in twice a month as guests of season ticket-holders. My general impression of the Europeans I saw and spoke with in "Breach Candy" is a poor one—they seemingly consider themselves immeasurably superior to the Indians, many maintaining that the "natives" are uneducable. Especially among the British, most of whom are connected with shipping or import firms, I sense that they still fancy themselves colonialist, viewing it as the Indians' bad luck to have taken away their "great white man's burdens" and become independent.

Although one becomes immunized with time, the unforgettable fact is that indian cities are filthy. Most serious is the amount of both animal and human waste matter littering the streets. As animals are used in huge number (mostly oxen) for the transportation of goods, it is inevitable that the streets be filthy. Only the well-to-do areas can finance a cleaning campaign. The presence of this contamination along with indiscriminant spitting creates a haven for the disease-spreading flies. Sewage problems are great and all drinking water must be boiled for twenty-five minutes before use. only a strong-willed, steel-stomached American can visit the vegetable or, worse-still, meat market—I won't attempt here a description of the sight and smell of it.

Making it easier for the forces of insanitation and diseases are the facts that for the masses the place where you live is on the ground and the most natural footwear is your own tough skin. A spare moment is never spent standing, the coolie who meets a friend squats where he is for a while; whole families are seen sprawled on the bespitaled floor of the train station, countless children and brass pots among them. In their own huts, of course, there is no furniture.

A trip into the suburbs by local train or bus takes us past perhaps the most distressing manifestation of India's abject poverty — the shack villages. Built of cardboard, pieces of scrap metal, reeds, and other pieces of wood and rock to hold them together, each shack may be eight feet by eight feet and house a family of four to ten members. Literally squatting in their own squalor, these villages appear on any one-to-two-acre pieces of ground left vacant, are provided with a single faucet, and are lined with narrow, muddy alleyways. Here the children run naked (even baby boys, however, wear a symbolic leather cord about their stomachs) and insanitation runs rampant.

I have come to learn, surprisingly enough, that most Indians are scrupulously clean in their personal habits, especially regarding washing their bodies, which they do with religious zeal (for many Hindus, it carries religious overtones). In every pond or muddy well one sees the coolies washing away; lack of soap and hot water, of course, much reduces the effects of this constant washing. In middle- and upper-class families, one or two showers per day is the norm.

There are beautiful and admirable sides of India and her people, to be sure (later articles). But the overriding facts of the poverty, misery, and insanitation which plagues India's masses should never be let out of sight. Fortunately she can show a number of brilliant intellects and dedicated individuals among her somewhat inefficient and even corrupt political and economic leaders, whose efforts to reverse the tide of misery against the staggering odds are admirable. Tragically, many of the hard-won economic gains since Independence (1947) are rapidly being canceled out by the costly Chinese invasion.

Dancing Tryouts To Open Tonight

Betty Oliver, chairman of the Graham Memorial Drama Committee, has announced tryouts for "A Program of Dance."

This program, sponsored by Graham Memorial Petite Dramatique, will consist of modern jazz and modern dance. The directing and choreography will be done by Rhoda Blanton who is using experiments in color, light, and sound.

Miss Oliver has asked that all persons who are interested in dance attend the tryouts which wil be held tonight from 7 to 9 p.m., and tomorrow from 4 to 6 p.m. at Graham Memorial.

All persons trying out will be asked to do indivdual improvisations and group dancing. She said that experience is not necessary, but each group will be given a set of simple floor exercises to perform, so tryouts should wear leotards or loose clothing.

Italian Show Begins Run At Rialto

Durham's new art movie theatre, the Rialto, will be the first to show Michangelo Antonioni's acclaimed film masterpiece, "La Notte" ("The Night").

The film, which has won festival awards at Berlin and Mexico City, is the Italian contender for this year's Academy Award as "Best Foreign Film." The picture will show today at the Rialto with a continuing run of five daily showings.

"La Notte" examines the diseases of leisure: anxiety, despair, loss of soul, and the eroticism that serves as a soul substitute. Nevertheless, as TIME'S critic pointed out, at the heart of Antonioni's plutonic pessimism lives a blazing mote of hope.

Though he confesses no faith, he is essentially a religious artist. He believes that a spirit inhabits human beings, and in every film he proclaims his creed: to obey that spirit is to live, to deny it is to perish.

Ethridge Fund Established By J-School

An annual contribution of $500 to be made for a minimum period of three years to the School of Journalism of the University of North Carolina through the Journalism Foundation has been announced today by Dr. Norval Neil Luxon, dean.

The continuing gift, to be called the Mark Ethridge Fund, honors the Louisville publisher who will join the staff of the School of Journalism next fall.

The gift, from a donor who insists upon remaining anonymous, by a coincidence was received at almost the same time that Mr. Ethridge's appointment became known.

"I am authorized to say that neither Mr. Ethridge nor the newspapers to which he has made such outstanding contributions over the years made the gift. It is made by a man 'who believes in young people and their opportunity in journalism' and who also believes in 'flowers for the living.' He got in touch with me about the gift honoring Mr. Ethridge without any knowledge of discussions which had been under way for some time with Mr. Ethridge."

The Mark Ethridge Fund may be expended at the discretion of the dean of the School of Journalism to aid students who plan to make journalism career.

Edge, Lacey Set Pace

Carolina Gridders Set 16 Records

UNC's football team, despite a 3-7 record, was quite a record-breaking team.

The 1962 Tar Heels set 12 school records, broke three Atlantic Coast Conference marks and tied another.

Edge's 1,234 yards passing, 185 passes attempted and 103 passes completed all were new school marks. Jack Cummings held the old passing yardage with 1,137 in 1958. Ray Farris was the owner of the other two with his 159 passes attempted and 71 completed in 1961.

The Fayetteville junior, who seems destined to take his place as one of the top passers in Carolina history, also broke three single game records. He passed for 244 yards against Michigan State and completed against Georgia in '48). journalism a career.

Also against the Spartans, in a 38-6 defeat, Edge attempted 27 passes and completed 19. The old marks were held by Marshall Newman (26 passes attempted against Notre Dame in 1952) and Charlie "Choo Choo" Justice (13 passes completed against George in 1948). Len Bullock tied Justice's feat when he completed 13 against Georgia in 1953.

Bob Lacey, the tricky Tar Heel end and Edge's favorite target broke two conference records and one UNC mark. Lacey picked up 158 yards on pass catches against Michigan State, topping the 147-yard mark of Clemson's Dreher Gaskin in 1953.

Lacey had a 668-yard pass reception for the other ACC record. He topped Sonny Randle's (Virginia, 1958) 642, for one season.

Lacey's five touchdown passes caught also tied a conference mark held by five others.

When Lacey caught 10 passes against Michigan State he broke Art Weiner's school mark of eight, set in 1949 against South Carolina.

Ronnie Jackson's four kickoff returns against Ohio State tied an ACC record in that department.

As a team, the Tar Heels passed for 254 yards, attempted 36 aerials and completed 21 — all against Michigan State and all single-game school records.

Two records which had stood since 1949 were also topped. Hickey's quarterbacks attempted 222 passes during the season and completed 116.

The last record for the team was an ACC mark tied in the season's opener against N. C. State. The Tar Heels didn't fumble in that game. It marked the first time in conference history that UNC has had a no-fumble game. All other league teams had previously tied the record.

BASKETBALL TICKETS

Basketball tickets for the Georgia-UNC game Saturday, and for the Clemson-UNC game next Wednesday can be purchased at the ticket office in Woollen Gym.

Students, faculty members and University employees should present their athletic pass cards in order to get tickets. Tickets are on a first-come, first-served basis for the first two games, both at home.

Baseball Changes Due Today

ROCHESTER, N. Y. (UPI) — Baseball's three Triple-A leagues haggled over realignment and merger Wednesday on the eve of a vote on a program to "save the minors."

With a vote due Thursday morning on a new million-dollar-a-year player development program, baseball officials were involved in a project that would expand the International and the Pacific Coast Leagues to 10 teams each and put the 62-year-old American Association out of business.

In addition to the "save the minors" plan, five amendments to the exisiting first-year bonus rule also will be voted on Thursday at the windup session of the minor leagues here. Any such decisions by the minor leaguers still must gain approval at the major league sessions in New York Friday and Saturday before they can become baseball law.

The major leagues' "have" clubs are dissatisfied with the present first-year rule which resulted in the drafting of 78 young players last Monday by organizations which did not originally sign them.

Under the Triple-A merger plan being discussed, three American Association franchises (Denver, Oklahoma City and Dallas-Fort Worth) would become part of the Pacific Coast League, while two others (Indianapolis and Little Rock) would be added to the International League.

That would increase both the International and Pacific Coast Leagues to 10 teams each, with northern and southern divisions.

It would also reduce the total number of Triple-A teams from last year's 22 to 20. The merger would enable each of the 20 major league clubs to arrange a working agreement with one Triple-A team.

The "save the minors" program provides that the major leagues guarantee the operation of not less than 10 minor league teams each year. This would average out to five affiliates for each major league club, although some would have more and others less.

The Triple-A leagues were known to object to the program on the grounds of "inequities" in the amount of support they were due to get from the majors. However, they were faced with a "take-it-or-leave-it" alternative.

The plan called for the scrapping of the present minor league classifications and regrouping the leagues into Triple-A, Double-A and "A" categories.

The program provides for a "player development contract," under which a major league club would agree to provide a roster of players for a minor league team and pay a certain portion of their salaries.

One letter simply stands for another. In this sample A is used for the three L's, X for the two O's, etc. Single letters, apostrophies, the length and formation of the words are all hints. Each day the code letters are different.

Edge, Lacey Set Pace

Carolina Gridders Set 16 Records

UNC's football team, despite a 3-7 record, was quite a record-breaking team.

The 1962 Tar Heels set 12 school records, broke three Atlantic Coast Conference marks and tied another.

Edge's 1,234 yards passing, 185 passes attempted and 103 passes completed all were new school marks. Jack Cummings held the old passing yardage with 1,137 in 1958. Ray Farris was the owner of the other two with his 159 passes attempted and 71 completed in 1961.

The Fayetteville junior, who seems destined to take his place as one of the top passers in Carolina history, also broke three single game records. He passed for 244 yards against Michigan State and completed against Georgia in '48). journalism a career.

Also against the Spartans, in a 38-6 defeat, Edge attempted 27 passes and completed 19. The old marks were held by Marshall Newman (26 passes attempted against Notre Dame in 1952) and Charlie "Choo Choo" Justice (13 passes completed against George in 1948). Len Bullock tied Justice's feat when he completed 13 against Georgia in 1953.

Bob Lacey, the tricky Tar Heel end and Edge's favorite target broke two conference records and one UNC mark. Lacey picked up 158 yards on pass catches against Michigan State, topping the 147-yard mark of Clemson's Dreher Gaskin in 1953.

Lacey had a 668-yard pass reception for the other ACC record. He topped Sonny Randle's (Virginia, 1958) 642, for one season.

Lacey's five touchdown passes caught also tied a conference mark held by five others.

When Lacey caught 10 passes against Michigan State he broke Art Weiner's school mark of eight, set in 1949 against South Carolina.

Ronnie Jackson's four kickoff returns against Ohio State tied an ACC record in that department.

As a team, the Tar Heels passed for 254 yards, attempted 36 aerials and completed 21 — all against Michigan State and all single-game school records.

Two records which had stood since 1949 were also topped. Hickey's quarterbacks attempted 222 passes during the season and completed 116.

The last record for the team was an ACC mark tied in the season's opener against N. C. State. The Tar Heels didn't fumble in that game. It marked the first time in conference history that UNC has had a no-fumble game. All other league teams had previously tied the record.

BASKETBALL TICKETS

Basketball tickets for the Georgia-UNC game Saturday, and for the Clemson-UNC game next Wednesday can be purchased at the ticket office in Woollen Gym.

Students, faculty members and University employees should present their athletic pass cards in order to get tickets. Tickets are on a first-come, first-served basis for the first two games, both at home.
